Radnor alters housing code

By JOANNE L. CONRAD

Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, said last week that groups of Villanova students living off-campus in houses and apartments in Radnor Township have caused "a lot of turmoil in the community and a lot of pressure has been brought to the University to deal with the problem."

Radnor Township currently has a zoning code provision that requires a single housekeeping unit to consist only of individuals who are related by blood, marriage, or by law, with not more than one unrelated person living in the house or apartment. Similar provisions exist in other surrounding communities. Lower Merion's zoning code allows no more than three unrelated persons to live together, and Upper Merion allows at most five unrelated persons to live together.

Many Villanova students have encountered problems finding housing in Radnor Township because of the code, or have later been cited for violations after it is discovered they are living in groups of three ore more.

Neville said that recently many Radnor Township residents have called for the township commissioners to deal with the problems created by groups of students living in the township. As a result of this pressure, Neville said that the township has changed its tactics, amending its housing code this past summer so that now owners, as well as renters, can be fined for violations of the zoning code.

According to Michael D. Fleig, director of the Department of Community Development for Radnor Township, "The revised housing code says that the owner of a dwelling bears the responsibility for the number of unrelated people living in that dwelling." Fleig said that owners and renters who violate the code face fines ranging from $50 to $300, either on a per day or a one-time basis, depending on the situation. He said it is customary to cite both owners and renters, and then "to sort it [the situation] out down at the district justice's [office].

"Sometimes in the past, a cited owner has said, 'I rented to two college students. I didn't know that four students would end up living there,'" Fleig said. He also said that it is not always easy to determine whether the owner or the renter is at fault. Fleig said it is hoped that the prospect of a fine will deter owners from renting in violation of the zoning code.

Fleig said of the code, "We're not trying to shut students out of Radnor Township. We're merely trying to protect the area." According to Fleig, the Township does not actively go looking for violators of the zoning code. "You

Freshmen arrested on assault charges

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

A brief excursion off-campus during a lull in orientation activities turned into an overnight stay in the Lower Merion Police Station for three Villanova freshmen, arrested Sept. 1 for the alleged assault of a 38-year-old Bryn Mawr man.

A verbal exchange between the three male students and a resident who had told the students to lower the noise level, accelerated into a physical dispute. According to the criminal complaint reported by the police, the three suspects "did attack [the victim] forcing him to the ground and continually punched and kicked him about the head and body, causing bruises and lacerations."

The students were apprehended by Patrolman Craig McGowan at approximately 11 p.m. on Radnor Street in Bryn Mawr, after police received numerous complaints concerning a disorderly group. The three were held on charges of aggravated assault, simple assault, harassment, conspiracy, disorderly conduct and underage drinking.

The evening began with the intention to visit some girls at Harcum Junior College, explained one of the accused students. In route to the college from Bryn Mawr train station, the students purchased some beer.

The three arrested students and an additional friend were standing in a courtyard talking to some girls through a window when a security guard from the Baldwin School chased them onto Radnor Street. The Baldwin School security guard reported to police that the youths had been "yelling and cursing and drinking beer."

Student leaders begin reform

By JOHANNE C. SHARP

In an attempt to become a more effective representative body and to meet the needs of all students, the 1986-87 Student Government created an entirely new governmental structure over the summer, Joe Allman, student body president said Tuesday.

Issues such as alternative meal plans, tuition and student fee increases, Fall Break anad extended semesters, parking and towing policies, over-priced books, off-campus housing and the Student Directory have been addressed by one of the four main departments of Public Relations, Internal Affairs, External Affairs and Academic Affairs.

Allman said that personnel from Food Services have joined Student Government's Alternative Meal Plan Committee, and an official proposal is expected within three or four weeks. The proposal will incorporate information obtained from other schools, both similar and dissimilar to Villanova, about their meal plans. Allman said the proposal might possibly include different options, for instance a 15-meal-per-week plan.

Students' taxes may rise

By BRIAN D. WEBB

Over 400 Villanova students would have to pay up to $500 in federal income taxes next year if the tax bill currently under consideration in Congress is passed, several financial aid administrators said this week.

Private and public grants, athletic scholarships and student loans could all be treated as taxable income, depending on how the wording of the bill is interpreted by Congress, according to Vincent Femia, director of Financial Aid.

The bill also calls for the elimination of the tax deductibility of interest payments on student loans. Other aspects in the bill are expected to make charitable donations to univeralties less advantageous for individuals.

Under a clause in the tax bill, as it now stands, student income plus scholarships and educational grants [illegible] per student will be taxable. The more a student depends on personal income and grants or scholarships, the more he or she will pay on federal income taxes.

"The bill's ridiculous," said Femia. "The students who really need the money are going to get hurt."

The provision is expected to affect most students who receive financial aid to attend private colleges, since the cost of attending such schools often greatly exceeds the $4,900 tax-exempt ceiling.

> "The bill's ridiculous. The students who really need the money are going to get hurt."
> —Vincent Femia, director of Financial Aid

Most of the students who will be affected at Villanova are orphans, wards of the court, foster children, or students whose families are on welfare or are collecting unemployment benefits, Femia said. He estimated that approximately 200 Villanova students are receiving aid for such reasons.

"It's contradictory," Femia said. "The government tells us to help the underprivileged by giving them aid. Then they turn around and tax them."

The same tax requirements would apply for other scholarships, including public and private grants, athletic scholarships and other student aid, but Femia says there is a chance that the Department of Education will be successful in their lobbying efforts to exempt [illegible] and certain grants.

Another provision in the tax bill would gradually phase out, over five years, the tax deductability of interest paid on educational loans. The average Villanova student will owe $5,500 and many will owe over $10,000 on loans of 9 percent, according to Financial Aid statistics. Eliminating the deduction will cost graduates who owe $10,000 approximately $200 each year, Femia said.

Many students will be forced to reconsider post graduate studies, said Audrey D'Arasio, director of

V.U. considers building dorms

By MARY E. CHAREST

"Some people think we need 1000 [new beds]. I think we could easily use 500 pretty quickly," said Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of Student Life.

According to Neville, a Program Committee for New Dorms was established during the summer to explore "What we want to do. Do we want new dorms like St. Monica's and Katharine or do we want apartments or would something else be better?"

The Rev. George F. Burnell, O.S.A., assistant to the president and chairman of the nine-member committee said that so far the committee is "just talking. We are trying to come to a determination of what the school needs.

"We have a hope that we might be able to have a completed building by fall 1988, if it is determined that we do need to build. At this point, though, we don't know whether we would need one or two [dormitories]. We have no model and no location as of yet," he said.

Burnell said that after three or four more meetings the committee would have a clearer idea of what was needed. He expects to send a complete report to the president within six months.

When asked if building new dorms would interfere with the University Senate's recent resolution to make constructing an academic building first priority, Neville said no. He admitted that there is an acute need for faculty offices. He explained, though, that the new fire safety codes for dormitories are strict and that it might be more efficient to build new dorms instead of upgrading old dorms. Then old dorms like Corr Hall could be converted into offices since the fire codes for offices are not as strict.

Phil Brach, Student Government secretary of External Affairs, believes that there should

Radnor restricts parking

By JOANNE L. CONRAD

Parking problems may escalate this school year because for the first time, junior and senior on-campus residents are not guaranteed parking stickers and must submit to a lottery system, according to Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life.

Neville said that the fact that more students will be denied stickers could add to public relations problems with Radnor Township. Radnor residents are already upset about students who bring their cars to school and then park them on residential streets surrounding the University because they cannot get a University parking sticker.

According to a spokesperson for Radnor Township police, some streets nearby the University now have signs posted every 80 feet that prohibit parking during certain hours. The spokesperson said that parking is prohibited not just in the spots near the signs, but in the entire area surrounding the signs. Violators have been found during routine police checks and by following up residents' complaints.

Some students, such as Beth Glass, a senior at Villanova, have noticed that, "A lot of people don't like Villanova students because of the parking problems on township streets." Glass reported that three weeks before school started, she found a note from an irate resident on her car, which was parked down the street from her apartment on Conestoga Avenue. The note read in part, "Why don't you

V.U. may buy St. Mary's

By NATALIE McKENNA

Negotiations are still pending this week on the purchase of St. Mary's Hall by Villanova University from the Augustinian Order, but, according to the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, the negotiations should be finalized within the next year.

Stack said there has always existed a "unique relationship" between the University and the Augustinians.

St. Mary's Hall was funded by the Augustinians and officially opened for use by the seminarians in 1964. At that time, the Order turned over both St. Rita's and Corr halls for use by the University.

"One of the consequences of Vatican Council II was a decrease in vocations to the priesthood," Stack said. When the number of seminarians dropped to about 60 men, the Order moved to Moriarty, St. Clare's, Geraghty, and Stone halls. Since the time of this move in the early '70s, the University has rented St. Mary's from the Augustinian Order.

New policy 'restricts options' of political science majors

By LYNN PERDEK

The department of political science has recently added a new policy stating that those students declaring political science as their major are not allowed to take more than three advanced courses with the same instructor. This rule does not apply to introductory courses or to the senior seminar required of all political science majors.

Dr. Priscilla Hopkirk, chairman of the political science department, explains the need for such a rule by stating, "Students should not be able to major in just one professor, because they would be subjected to only one viewpoint. they should be exposed to a variety."

One sophomore political science major argued that if a student finds an instructor that he or she is comfortable with and can learn from easily, then that person should be able to continue with that professor.

Another view, from a junior who agrees with the policy, is that students will take the same teacher again not because they find that the particular instructor teaches better, but because of the fact that the teacher might be more lenient or one where the student is more likely to receive an A grade.

Another student noted that in most cases this field of study is not one that ends in a bachelor's degree. Many students apply to law or graduate schools, where teacher recommendations are valued. Therefore students should be able to take an instructor many times, in order that the professor can be able to know enough about that individual so that a knowledgeable recommendation can be written.

According to the College of Arts and Sciences, the policy is unique to the political science department, and there is no such rule any other department. One official in this department commented that adult students should be able to learn from any instructor. It was added that there are all types of view in the political science field, since it is such a subjective field. Therefore, students should be aware of the opinions that they will come in contact with eventually.

The resolution was approved on May 2, 1985, and went into effect on Sept. 1, 1985. Throughout last year, however, many students and instructors were not completely aware of exactly what the policy is. The new student bulletin now contains a clause stating this rule near the listings of the courses offered.

Drug testing may affect students

By KAREN L. ZIEBELL
CPS

Duke students returned to campus last week to find that their administrators may soon ask them to prove they do not abuse drugs.

At the same time, a Texas school district announced it would test all students involved in extracurricular activities for the presence of illicit drugs in their systems.

And the U.S. House of Representatives voted to empower the U.S. Department of Education to withhold federal funds from colleges that do not have drug abuse prevention programs.

The much-ballyhooed "war on drugs," in short, seemed to be closing in on every collegian in the U.S. in recent weeks.

Colleges have been adopting tough new sanctions to discipline students caught using illicit drugs, and looking into ways to catch the students in the first place.

Freshmen at Mount St. Mary College in New York, for example, are being greeted by a drug education program at orientation, while the presidents of Ohio Wesleyan, Newberry College and Westminster College sent letters to their students warning of tough new drug policies this year.

Athletes have been facing such sanctions for a while now.

About 100 colleges now regularly screen their athletes for drug use, the American Council on Education (ACE) estimated last week, adding the practice is spreading.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) will start giving athletes in NCAA championship events drug tests this school year.

Close scrutiny of students now may spread beyond athletic departments into the general student body, too, thanks to a recent House Education and Labor Committee vote to send $350 million to states to help fight student drug abuse and a White House announcement it might favor spending $100 million to eradicate abuse in the nation's schools.

And if a different drug bill now in Congress passes, colleges will have to have some sort of drug abuse prevention program to remain eligible to receive other kinds of federal student aid and college funding.

While federal officials swear they will not start testing the entire American student body, Duke's flirtation with a campus-wide drug program affecting all kind of athletic department program scores of schools have adopted.

In mid-August, Duke Athletic Director Tom Butters called on the school to treat all students the way athletes are treated.

Duke does not test its athletes, Butters explains, but requires those who fear they have a problem to report it "to someone who will make sure that student is cared for."

"The coach will not know. The team will not know. The parents will not know. But, if the problem is not self-reported, that athlete is gone with no second chance."

Such programs already have taken a radical turn through the general student population in the Hawkins Independent School District in Texas, where all students involved in extracurricular activities started taking mandatory drug tests last week.

Student council members, cheerleaders and athletes are all being tested, said Superintendent Coleman Stanfield.

Standfield added testing will be "random, at regular intervals throughout the school year."

Few foresee testing college student government officers, however, and few officials outside athletic departments support applying drug programs to non-athlete students.

"I'm personally not comfortable with it," said Suzanne Wasiolek, Duke's dean for student life.

"We're being asked to solve a problem that may have started in the seventh grade," Butters said.

The publicity and pressure now building to mount anti-drug campaigns tend to create a false impression that schools "can solve the problem alone," added Robert Atwell, president of the American Council on Education (ACE).

Besides, college officials are unsure such programs are workable.

"It must be remembered that two-thirds of the more than seven million full-time students live off campus," Atwell pointed out.

Most students, moreover, are adults. "More than half of all college students are 22 years of age and older, and more than a third are 25 and older," Atwell noted.

But students, used to adult responsibilities in other parts of their lives, may not have the right to escape drug programs that presume them guilty or threaten to expell them, administrators say.

"By attending Duke," Wasiolek contended, "students agree a person's rights are defined by the rules and regulations of the university."

Workable or not, Wasiolek believes finding a University without a program of some sort may soon be "difficult," though "I don't think most will move in the direction of mandatory testing" even with the threat of a cut-off of federal aid hanging over them.

The National Order of Omega

LEE LOSCIALE

Order of Omega is pleased to announce that our first Greek of the Week for the 1986 school year is Lee Losciale. Although Lee comes all the way from Inverness, Fla., he had no trouble becoming "well adjusted" to Villanova life. Chosen as an Orientation Counselor his sophomore year, Lee quickly moved up in the world, becoming a member of the Steering Committee this year. This wild and crazy junior international business major is currently serving as President of Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity. However, the scope of his Greek involvement extends beyond the bounds of Villanova. This spring at the annual Northeast Interfraternity Council/Panhellenic Conference Lee was chosen as a Regional Vice President for the NEIFC. His duties as regional vice president include organizing a conference for this region, which will be held at Villanova on Nov. 1.

Lee also represents Villanova as a tour guide, which obviously makes him a member of Blue Key! Not content with being involved in just one service organization, "Mr. Involvement" is on the Volunteer Committee for Special Olympics. Performing yet another service for Villanova, Lee is a member of the newly formed Villanova Tailgating Committee, so watch yourself at the tailgates this fall!!

Keep up the great work Lee! What's in store for next year?

Dorms A and B named

By CAROLYN MIRABILE

During the summer recess, the Villanova University Board of Trustees selected St. Monica and Katharine as the names of dorms A and B, respectively. A committee had been appointed to submit names to the Board for consideration.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, commented, "The naming of Dorm A to St. Monica was appropriate because St. Monica is the mother of St. Augustine." In addition, he stated, "It is very unusual for an Augustinian school not to have a building named after St. Monica."

Furthermore, Stack said that, "Katharine is a suitable name for Dorm B because Katharine is a Philadelphian who is known for her contributions to the poor. Accordingly, this is consistent with St. Thomas of Villanova, who also worked with the poor."

Stack also said, "Another reason why the two dorms were named St. Monica and Katharine was that no one individual donated a sizeable amount of money."

After two years, St. Monica's and Katharine Halls were named. Photo by Schmid

Stack said that a dedication ceremony for St. Monica and Katharine will be announced at a later date.

Stack also reported that Connelly Containers donated money towards the South Dining Hall. Stack said that, "Since there already was a building named after John Connelly, the building would be named after the President of Connelly Containers, Joseph J. Donahue."

A dedication ceremony for the Donahue Dining Hall will also be announced at a later date.

Check list aids students

By SIOBHAN A. RODER

This year, for the first time, students enrolled in any of the 14 liberal arts majors of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences will be assisted in charting their progress toward their degree by a new computerized degree audit program, according to the Rev. William A. McGuire, O.S.A., assistant to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

McGuire said that the degree audit program for the first time puts on the computer information as to how courses taken by a student relate to a specific degree. Previously, this information was kept on hand-written sheets. McGuire stressed, though, that the new program is completely separate from the Registrar's records of courses taken and grades earned by students for each semester.

According to McGuire, the primary reason the degree audit program was developed was "for the students' information so that they would know exactly where they stand in their progress toward their degree."

The basic degree audit program was designed by Rob Chandhok of Carnegie-Mellon University. Chandhok worked with McGuire for three years as an independent program writer to produce the program. McGuire wrote the course requirement descriptions for the majors which are used in the program.

This past summer a computerized check sheet from the degree audit program was sent to all liberal arts students. The sheet listed all courses the students had taken or were registered for and the grades earned in the courses completed. In addition, the check sheets showed how all the courses fit in the various slots for the overall requirements of each major.

McGuire explained that this new method for auditing a student's progress toward his/her degree would reduce the amount of administrative "man-hours" needed in straightening out any discrepancies which arise between the dean's office and the office of the student's major as to which slot classes taken are put. These differences between the offices sometimes occur due to the large number of options one has as to how courses are categorized.

Ten of the 14 arts departments have the necessary computer equipment to access the degree audit program directly. The other departments will get hard copies of the students' check sheets.

The degree audit program works on a 256K IBM personal computer on a local access basis. McGuire said he will do eight to 10 updates from the computerized records of the Registrar's office each year. Students are also able to make any necessary updates in their files by seeing McGuire.

The College of Engineering, according to McGuire, will soon be using the degree audit program. In addition, he said the College of Commerce and Finance and the College of Nursing will be able to use the program as it is "whenever they are ready." However, some changes in the program will have to be made to allow its use by the science majors of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

Student Government

John Floyd, secretary of Internal Affairs, said that the two main factors of how many people leave for weekends and the need for extended guest lists will be considered, but he is not sure what is best for Villanova at this point."

Allman added that faculty member Debra Arvanites of the College of Commerce and Finance is assisting the committee "on the financial end of it." According to Allman, "Les Gies, director of Food Services, appeared open to anything we would propose."

Student Government has also established a committee to review the University budget and investigate tuition increases. Allman said Student Government has been studying other universities' budgets and is "looking for ways for the University to save money." The possibility of an entirely new plan for tuition payments, which would allow an incoming freshman to know the exact amount tuition he would be paying for his four years is being considered. Under this plan, students of different grade levels would be paying different amounts.

In addition, Student Government is working on a solution to the Fall Break, extended semesters and start of classes after Labor Day problems. While the administration has seen these issues as separate, Allman views them as inseparable and feels they should be addressed together to find a single solution. "It is all one issue and we should take care of it all at once," he said.

In a November 1985 letter to the University Senate, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president said the University must establish its priorities and decide which issue is more important, said Allman. Last year the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs, informally proposed an extended academic calendar that added two weeks to each semester. In the words of Allman, "Last year when this issue was brought out, students were under the impression that finals would be after Christmas. But this is not necessarily true. We could begin earlier in August." He said that the Executive Committee of the Senate has set up a sub-committee to look into this calendar matter.

Student Government has also written to other universities to study their academic calendars.

Additionally, Student Government has established student assemblies in an attempt to "get in touch with all students, inform them and get feedback on the issues," Allman said. Suggestion boxes will be located throughout the campus and the government plans to visit dorms more often than the week of elections."

The Student Directory, complete with a Yellow Page section, is scheduled to be issued by Thanksgiving. "It is of much better quality and we are using new forms. Joan Dorley is in charge of the project and has really done a good job so far," said Allman. The Student Government is also planning to print a monthly publication entitled Nova Villanova. It will be an opinion paper for all students and they are currently looking for staff members.

NATIONAL NEWS NOTES

Surrogate mother case to be tried

For the first time in history, a court of law will be forced to establish guidelines and regulations concerning the issue of the practice of unregulated surrogate motherhood as the Baby M case comes to trial in New Jersey this week.

The case involves a surrogate mother who, after giving birth to a baby, decided to keep the child. The defendant claims the child's father could be her husband and not the man whose sperm was used in the surrogate procedure.

Many law professors, legal scholars, right-to-life groups, adoption agencies, feminists and Catholic teachers are following the case closely and "are worried about the precedents this case is likely to set," according to the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Presently, no state laws regulate the practice of surrogate motherhood. Actually, in none of the 50 states or the District of Columbia is the practice illegal.

"All of this is very heavy stuff for the law to deal with because you've got everything going off at once here. It's policy, it's logic, it's morals, it's biology, and there's just not much case law to fall back on," said Carol Bruch, professor of family law at Columbia University.

N.J. passes new AIDS policy

The New Jersey Public Health Council this week approved by a 5-1 vote a revised regulation requiring the reporting of AIDS cases in New Jersey.

The regulation passed despite a request from a homosexual support group that another safeguard be added to protect the identity of the disease's victims.

The rule, which takes effect next month, requires doctors and officials of prisons, hospitals and nursing homes to give the state Health Department the name, sex, birth date and home town of anyone diagnosed as having acquired immune deficiency syndrome or AIDS-related complex. M.E.C.

Strike ends at N.J. university

A faculty strike at Fairleigh Dickinson University in Teaneck, N.J., ended Tuesday without a settlement and with some union officials admitting that the faculty lost a lot of ground during the six-day walkout.

The crucial issue of the strike was the role of the faculty in governing the private university. The sides have moved closer on this issue, but no agreement has yet been reached. The university has agreed to adhere to the 1940 American Association of University Professors' (AAUP) statement on academic freedom and tenure.

Commuters use Day Hop

By MARY E. CHAREST

The Day Hop, which closed to commuting students two years ago to alleviate overcrowding in the Dougherty Dining Hall, recently reopened to commuters, according to Joseph L. Gies, director of Food Services.

The Day Hop, which will serve fast food and a few hot entrees, will be open to commuters from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. It will continue to serve breakfast and dinner for resident students.

Gies explained that with the opening of St. Monica's and Katharine residence halls, the Day Hop had to be used for residents since there were more students using the meal plan. He said that with the opening of the new South Campus dining hall "some of the overcrowding has been alleviated."

Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, felt that the commuting students needed more room so the Day Hop was reopened.

Gies noted, though, that the lines for the Dougherty Dining Hall have been long recently.

Neville said, "We need to balance the needs of the resident and commuting students. I know that sometimes the line to the cafeteria is out the front door of Dougherty, but I think that there is a peak hour when all the students get out of class. Probably within a week students will decide on the best time to eat."

According to Neville, the situation will be monitored.

Students face tougher township housing codes

can't just drive by and analyze how many people are living in a house. We don't go looking for violators. They seem to find us."

Neville said he thinks that if students living in the community kept a low profile, there would be less pressure to evict. "Some people draw attention to themselves with noisy parties and a lot of things that just don't fit in with a family neighborhood." He noted that apartment building dwellers and owners do not seem to face as much pressure, because apartment management generally handles noise problems.

Neville said that he and the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, met with Radnor Township officials last spring about off-campus housing. At that time, the township asked the University for a list of all off-campus residents to aid them in finding violations. Neville said the University did not provide a list since the University has no comprehensive list of off-campus residents' addresses and giving such a list would violate students' confidentiality rights.

"We promised to do what we could. We can only make students aware of their responsibility to be good neighbors," said Neville. He said that he would hope the University's plan to build more dorms would help solve the problem in the future.

Phil Brach, secretary for the Student Government's Department of External Affairs, said that Student Government is trying to get a game plan together to deal with the off-campus housing problem. Brach said that he feels, "There isn't enough compromise between the township and the University. Sure, the township is looking out for their interests, but we've got to look out for our interests."

> "You can't just drive by and analyze how many people are living in a house. We don't go looking for violators. They seem to find us."
> —Michael D. Fleig,
> director of the Department of Community Development for Radnor Township.

Brach said that he can understand that people who "paid a lot of money for expensive houses deserve to have their neighborhoods protected by zoning codes. But the question is, shouldn't students be able to live in houses on streets that surround the University?" Brach adds that, even if the University does build enough dormitories to house all students, he feels that students should still have the option and the opportunity to live together in houses in the area.

Brach said that Student Government wants a "healthy relationship" with Radnor Township. According to Brach, the Department of External Affairs will soon be meeting with the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, about an idea of forming a committee of University officials and campus leaders to meet with township officials.

Brach explained that one idea is to have the committee and the township create an application procedure that a group of students could go through if they want to get a house. He said that, "With a system like this, the township would know where students are and would be better able to keep track of them. They'd have more control over the situation."

Radnor is not the only township enforcing group housing regulations. The Lower Merion Township Department of Building Regulations and Permits issued a memo in June that said violations of the no more than three unrelated persons living together code would generally result in a $500-a-day fine issued to the occupants and the owner. Also, persons will be evicted in order to bring the number of people into compliance. The memo also stated that investigations into "student houses" occurred frequently during the 1985-86 school year, and that enforcement will be increased during the 1986-87 school year.

TWO AMERICAN LEGENDS.

GARY BECK AND MILLER BEER.

It takes more than desire to become a legend. It takes a will to win. A determination to be clearly superior to the competition.

These are the qualities that have driven Gary Beck to more 5-second runs than any other driver.

And they are the qualities that have made Gary Beck, driver of the Miller American Top Fuel dragster, the first driver ever to break the 5.80, 5.70, 5.60, 5.50 and 5.40 second barriers.

The desire to be the best. That is what has made Gary Beck a true legend in the sport of drag racing.

For over 130 years, we've been brewing Miller Beer with the same kind of desire. The same kind of determination to be clearly superior.

And today, the legend of Miller Beer lives on. In every glass. In every can. In every crystal-clear bottle.

Miller contains no additives or preservatives. Purity you can see. Quality you can taste.

So when you want a beer that's made to be the best, ask for a Miller.

Just like Gary Beck, it's a legend made the American way.

Computer Fair to be held

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER

On Sept. 16, Villanova will hold its Fourth Annual Computer Fair, in order to help those students and faculty interested in computers, according to Dan McGee, monitor for Academic Services for the Computer Center.

McGee, the main organizer of the fair, believes that computers are becoming more and more important to students and faculty, and that the Computer Fair will help to answer and explain things to those in need of more information about computers and supplies.

Representatives from such companies as I.B.M., Radio Shack, AT&T, Zenith, and Apple Inc., as well as others will be there to promote, demonstrate, and explain their products. Other local shops will also be on hand for the event.

Students who decide to purchase a computer or supplies through Villanova and the fair can get up to 40 percent off whatever they purchase, and faculty are eligible for an interest-free one-year loan for up to $1,500.

In the past, the Computer Fair has sold over $300,000 in computers and supplies. McGee expects a larger crowd this year due to the longer hours of fair to accommodate University College students. The event, which is sponsored by the computer science department, will be held from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

Taxes

Student Aid at the Law School.

The average law school graduate will owe $25,000 at 9 percent interest and will have to pay approximately $250 per month for 10 years, D'Arasio said. Ending the deductibility will add thousands of dollars to these graduates' taxable incomes.

"It will be extreme even for an attorney who has a good starting salary," said D'Arasio. "At least students in school now have an incentive to pay loans back."

Another provision in the bill would lower the maximum individual tax bracket and, therefore, increase the after-tax cost of making charitable donations. Tax deductions for non-itemizers would also be eliminated.

Edward A. Morosky, assistant vice president for development and one of seven fund solicitors for the University, said he does not expect the tax change to have a significant impact on donations to the University.

"People give from the heart; not for the deduction," Morosky says. "If people are going to use it [the tax bill] as an excuse, they'll use it."

Villanova has no plans to further intensify its capital fund drive during the next four months of the current tax structures. During the Alumni Fund Drive next month, however, the University will send out letters that will contain "something vague" about the tax benefits of donating money before the law changes Jan. 1, 1987, Morosky said.

The tax reform bill was approved by House and Senate conferees last month and is expected to be voted on by the full House and Senate later this month.

Three Villanova freshmen arrested

While responding to the Baldwin School complaint, Patrolman McGowan received a second report that the group had moved down Radnor Street. At this location the students reportedly became involved in a quarrel.

According to one of the students, the group was returning to the railroad station. They were making a lot of noise, when a resident allegedly yelled, "Why don't you punks shut up." The students shouted back and the argument seemed to end with a threat from the Radnor Street resident.

The youths continued to walk, "laughing the threat off," but the resident came outside onto the street and confronted the three students. A student described it, "He said, 'How do you want it — one at a time or all three at once?' "

According to one student, one of the freshmen, wearing a blue football shirt, told the resident, "Your wife is over there [in the street]. Why don't you go inside because someone is going to get hurt and it could be you."

The argument escalated into a physical encounter. The resident, described as a large man, allegedly punched and tackled the outspoken freshman. The other two joined the fight, attacking the resident in an attempt to rescue their friend, explained one student.

A minister who resides on Radnor Street calmed the situation. Moments later, Patrolman McGowan arrived on the scene to find the victim "disoriented and he was bleeding from lacerations on his left knee," stated the Affidavit of Probable Cause for Arrest. He was later treated at Bryn Mawr Hospital.

The suspects were found on Montgomery Avenue with a fourth male not involved in the incident. The student with the blue football jersey, identified as the suspect who first hit the victim, was bleeding around the nose and eyes, according to the police report.

The students were read their rights, handcuffed and taken to a holding cell while the police took statements from the victim and the minister. The students reported that they were not permitted any telephone calls. The freshmen remained in the cells until approximately 4 a.m., at which time they were fingerprinted and mugshots were taken.

At 9 a.m. the three students were transported to the District Courthouse where their offenses were named and bail was set at $3,000 each, of which they had to pay 10 percent.

The felonious charges of aggravated assault and criminal conspiracy have since been dropped. The victim wants to settle out-of-court with the three Villanova students.

A hearing for the remaining allegations was originally set for Sept. 9, but has been postponed until Oct. 7.

Parking

park your car on the side — or in front of people that have driveways?... Villanova students make us sick and we don't want you on this street."

Glass said, "It wasn't like we had a party. I couldn't park in front of my apartment because there weren't any spaces, so I parked down the street. I think it's very unfair that we [Villanova students] are getting stereotyped."

Neville said that the University has no immediate plans to increase parking space. "I would like to find some place where students could park their cars. But there's no obvious place to expand parking. You would have to expand at the expense of green grass."

No pets, no students

Tensions between local residents and Villanova students living off campus have increased already since last spring. Both Radnor and Haverford Townships have made clear their intentions of prosecuting those who violate their housing codes.

The codes post severe hardships to Villanova students, most of whom have been lotteried off campus and must find housing for their junior and senior years. These students face a hostile community which does not like to house students because of noisy parties, parking problems and other disturbances. They complain of increased traffic, ruined lawns and vandalism. And Villanova students in turn see many "For Rent" signs followed by "No pets, no students."

There is no simple solution to the problem. Campus housing holds approximately 3,000 students. Although the possibility of new dorms is being investigated, it has not been approved by the Board of Trustees. Until such time as more campus housing is made available, approximately one third of our undergraduate population remains off campus —from Conshohocken to Broomall to Ardmore in miscellaneous houses, apartments, and rented rooms.

Most of the students living off-campus like it. But all it takes is for one drunk to smash a mailbox, or drive home drunk from a party, or simply park on a residential side street because the main lot is full, and local residents become more and more enraged at Villanova students.

Students should respect the neighborhoods. And, in return, local residents should realize that increased traffic and parking problems are large problems which cannot be easily alleviated. We are a part of this community and should act like it. And the community should give us the same respect which they would give a neighbor.

Students can think

To educate is to develop a person by fostering the growth and expansion of knowledge, wisdom and character. "This education should take place in universities. Universities should provide the setting for a free exchange of ideas, a setting in which students can analyze ideas and judge their merit.

This theory of education is being violated in our country now. The Rev. Charles E. Curran was barred July 25 by the Roman Catholic Church from teaching theology at the Vatican-chartered Catholic University. Although the Sept. 3 Chronicle of Higher Education said that Curran's views are generally considered "moderate" by other Catholic theologians, the Vatican decision stated he was ineligible to teach because of some of his views on sexual and moral issues, as well as his belief in the right to dissent from non-fallible teachings. According to the Chronicle article, Curran believes, for example, that abortion may be justified if the life of the mother is endangered, and that the Catholic Church should allow divorce in some circumstances.

The morality or correctness of Curran's actual ideas is not the point here; the point is that the institution is depriving the students of the true value of education. By attempting to prevent them from hearing an opposing viewpoint, the university has essentially designated them mindless children who cannot weigh ideas and make decisions on their own.

Certainly one must expect a Catholic atmosphere and teachings at a Catholic university. But Catholic teaching should not mean that all opposing views are hidden from students, as if the ideas would contaminate or poison their minds. Only last year Villanova "disinvited" a guest speaker from another university because he held pro-choice views.

Memorizing a set of doctrines should not be the goal of education. Its goal should be to teach individuals the ability to sift and weigh ideas and facts. If universities fail to recognize that students can and will think independently, and that they do not simply follow what they are taught, these institutions will lose the essence of education.

Teachers get no respect

To the Editor:

Many years ago a world globe was included in the Department of Geography's faculty photograph in the Belle Aire. The next year two globes were in the photograph with the same two instructors, the idea being to increase the number of globes each year at an exponential rate (that at which rabbits reproduce). In no time at all, the two human heads would be seen to peep out of a giant mountain of globes. However, the next year's editor must have seen through this sophormoric attempt at humor and thought it best to advise the entire faculty that such frivolous pursuits were not to be tolerated in the future.

Thus it was that in 1971 the baby was thrown out with the bath water — all department pictures of the faculty vanished. As the event went unnoticed, the exclusion of faculty pictures by department became existing policy up to this day. (For some unknown reason, pictures of the Law School faculty appeared in last year's Belle Aire).

For the past 15 years then, the yearbooks record that the college experience for Villanova graduates has consisted essentially of fellow classmates, administrators, extracurricular activities, and an occasional token instructor.

What does all this portend? 1) The phasing-out of the faculty and their replacement by robots and teaching machines? 2) A faculty that does not deserve the respect of the student body? 3) A silent majority of students too busy to be aware of the process involved in producing a yearbook and what it should or should not contain?

It is my view that number three is the answer. But why not let the students decide. The Blue Key Society or Student Council can hold an election. Keep it simple: "Put pictures of faculty by department in future yearbooks — Yes or No." Each class can decide for itself.

Cyrus J. Sharer
Retired professor

P.S. The Geography Department of the late 1960 s wishes to apologize to the other departments for its rash act which precipitated the demise of departmental faculty photographs in the Belle Aire.

Cruel tax bill will hurt students

By BRIAN D. WEBB

Somewhere at Villanova, there is a student whose parents died a few years ago. Elsewhere, there is a student whose father was recently laid off — the result of a corporate merger that eliminated his job. Without the assistance of federal, state and University funds, these students would not be able to attend Villanova. Their potential might never be realized; their lives might never be fulfilled.

Fortunately our government and our University care enough about people that they are willing to assist such disadvantaged youths by giving them the gift of hope — in education at a superior, private University. Now, however, the government is proposing to take some of that hope away. Certain provisions in the tax reform bill, currently before Congress, would induce added hardship on those students as well as on most other students who must reach out to others for educational assistance.

Several anti-education clauses in the bill clearly indicate that the House and Senate conferees who drafted the bill have little regard for the importance of education in America.

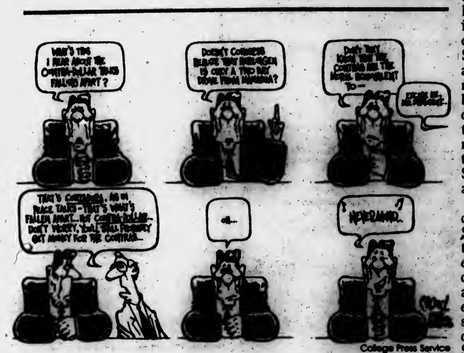
The tax bill calls for the taxation of scholarship money and student income if the combined total exceeds $4,900. This would result in over 200 disadvantaged Villanova students (including orphans, foster children and members of families whose parents collect unemployment or welfare benefits) being forced to pay, up to $500 annually in federal taxes. It could also affect hundreds of other students who receive substantial (in excess of $4,900) private or public financial assistance.

Taxing financial aid is like rubbing salt in the cut of a wounded student. It is thoughtless, cruel and absolutely unnecessary.

Reforming the tax system is bound to cause trade-offs and some special interests will certainly be hurt. But when those interests are students, — the future of this country — something is clearly wrong with the priorities of the conferees.

Where is the logic in giving a truly needy student financial aid, when the giver turns around and taxes it? Apparently the conferees dismissed the potential $500 tax as insignificant. They just did not understand that for many students every dollar counts. Some people just do not have $500 lying around to pay the tax bill.

Another provision that will hurt higher education calls for the phase-out of the tax deductibility of interest paid on consumer loans, including educational loans. This provision will undoubtedly have a serious impact on the finances of the vast majority of recent college graduates, especially those of us who will owe over $10,000 in guaranteed student loans.



Inevitably there will be fewer graduate students as a result of this deduction loss. Being $30,000 in debt and not being able to deduct interest expense will be too much of a burden for many graduates. It could also drive students away from such low-paying careers as teaching and social work.

Something is curious about the conferees' decision to end the deductibility for interest on student loans, but to preserve the deductability of interest on loans that are used to buy vacation homes. Now people can borrow tax-free to buy homes on Cape Cod or the Jersey Shore, but not to educate themselves or their children.

Education is an investment in the future of this country. The need for higher education cannot be over-emphasized, especially in a growing service economy that is running up against growing foreign competition. In a country where up to one in three adults is functionally illiterate, America cannot afford to shrink its commitment to education.

Tax reform is a desirable goal. And many aspects of the bill should be applauded. But something is drastically wrong when a resulting trade-off causes further hardships for students, particularly disadvantaged students, who want nothing but a fair chance to improve their lives.

Divest from South Africa

By JOE McGOWAN

There seems to be in recent press reports from South Africa by the American media a distinctly reactionary tone. While what is labelled the "liberal media" once favorably portrayed black South African resistance leaders and the movement for divestment, recent news items and editorials have strongly questioned the direction, goals, and methods of the international anti-apartheid movement. In particular, the tactic of divestment from the South African economy has been assaulted as counterproductive.

In order for divestment by U.S. corporations doing business in South Africa to be declared counterproductive, it is necessary to establish that black South Africans (and those peoples designated as "coloureds") benefit from the economy of that nation. However, since 1948 the "coloureds" are officially not human beings under South African law — they have no means to redress wrongs perpetrated by whites, they have no right to live where they so desire, they are widely banned from managerial positions, and are furthermore denied the right to free association (the South African Congress of Trade Unions has been banned for several years now).

That black South Africans benefit from the economy of this nation is a false assertion as they are instead punished by this economy. And the United States accounts for over 20 percent of foreign investment in South Africa. You might say that we own a 20 percent share in the Soweto killings.

Economic sanctions can, at the most, only express a sentiment of dissatisfaction with a particular government (that is, after initial economic discomfort cause by the immediate effects of sanctions). Our government hoped to topple the Sandinista regime of Nicaragua with a complete embargo on the coffee and banana harvests of that small nation. The Sandinistas scrambled for a few weeks for other markets and soon were shipping their produce to Ghent. Ironically, we now buy Nicaraguan coffee from Holland Nicaraguan bananas from Canada via Ghent). What the president did manage to express was his dislike of the Sandinistas — nothing more.

South Africa divestment would have similar effect — temporary economic discomfort for the ruling whites. But at least the Afrikaners would know that the people of the United States no longer wish to actively support apartheid through a policy Jesse Jackson has termed "destructive engagement." For moral reasons the movement for divestment must be spurred on. What little we can do for justice in South Africa we must do.

Quote of Note

"It is not the critic who counts; not the man who points out how the strong man stumbled, or where the doer of deeds could have done better. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena; whose face is marred by dust and sweat and blood; who strives valiantly; who errs and comes short again and again; who knows the great enthusiasms, great devotions, and spends himself in a worthy cause; who at the best knows in the end the triumph of high achievement; and who at the worst, if he fails, at least fails while daring greatly, so that his place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who know neither victory nor defeat."

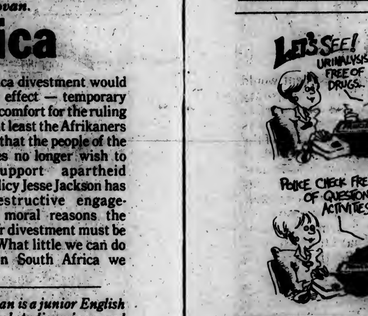
Allman calls for more involvement

Dear Villanovans:

To the new and old Villanovans, welcome to Villanova for the 1986-87 academic year. I hope this year is off to a successful start for all of you.

A few of us working for Student Government spent a great deal of time this summer setting up a new structure for the government, getting people involved in the process, and addressing issues.

As the year begins, we are well underway in tackling those issues that seem to most significantly affect you. Such issues are: extended semesters, exorbitant tuition and fees costs, overpriced books, local townships/off-campus housing, alternative meal plans, parking and towing, and the Student Directory. Throughout the year we will continually be making contact with you, through a variety of means, to inform you of the issues and to receive feedback from you about these same issues and any others.



We strongly feel that, as a government, if we are not in touch with you, the students, we are worthless.

We strongly feel that, as a government, if we are not in touch with you, the students, we are worthless. This is why we have established an entire department, entitled Public Relations, whose job it is to inform you of what we are doing and to find out what you're thinking and feeling about the issues at hand.

Our philosophy of student government is such that any student who is interested in addressing any issues should be able to use our office to do such. We govern ourselves. And so, we welcome any student who is interested in participating in the process of student self-governance to get involved. Involvement in this process for many may mean doing the work that is required to change what is not desired and implementing what is better. Whatever involvement may mean to you, we encourage you to be involved. Our office is located in Room 204, Dougherty Hall.

Best wishes for much success in the year ahead.

On behalf of all of the student governors, I am, respectfully
Joe Allman
Student Body President

Error results in anti-Soviet hatred

To the Editor:

Professor Oleh Mazur in an article entitled "Moscow fools Americans" (Villanovan, April 25, 1986) objects to the use of the word, "commonality" in describing how some Soviet citizens feel about Americans. The author apparently wishes to remind his audience that the Soviet Union is a multinational state, and implies that professors O'Connor and I fail to make this fact clear in the course we jointly teach entitled "Turning Points in Russian/Soviet History."

Perhaps in his anti-Soviet hatred, Mazur has lost touch with reality.

In my case, his conclusion appears to be based on an error which appeared in an advertisement for a trip to Poland and the Soviet Union which I directed several years ago, a misstatement which I do not remember writing but which I did fail to proofread adequately (e.g. "the trip by autobus through the Ukraine provides an unusual opportunity to see rural life in Russia").

The error was unfortunate, but no matter who the author, Professor O'Connor or I do not carefully identify non-Russian Soviet national minorities in our professional work is calumny; to hint that we may be "Red lackeys spawned on American soil or communist slaves sent by (sic!) Kremlin" is libelous.

Perhaps in his anti-Soviet hatred, Mazur has lost touch with reality. Certainly his article provides grounds to support such an unfortunate conclusion. To pay further attention, however, to the ravings which appear in it would invest them with an importance they do not deserve.

New Villanovans strive to achieve

By KAREN E. DUNNE

As the lines in Kennedy Hall shrink and as summer tans fade, the Villanova community begins to fall back into its hectic and sometimes monotonous routine. For many Villanovans, however, especially the freshmen members of the Class of 1990, memories of bleacher-shaking rallies in the DuPont Pavilion, frisbee tosses and ice-breaker games, such as "sit-on-my-knees-please," are reminders that life at Villanova has the potential to be more than a routine experience.

The students behind New Student Orientation 1986 spent months developing a program that could impress Villanova's 1,700 newcomers with that message, in four action-packed days and evenings. Freshman Kevin Mylod attests that this year's planners succeeded in doing just that.

After speaking with freshmen friends at other universities and colleges, Mylod concluded that "Nothing even came close to the orientation we had," in terms of making new students aware of every aspect of Villanova life.

A glance at the program's master schedule indicates why. After greeting the new arrivals at their residence halls in the early morning of Aug. 30, the brightly T-shirted orientation counselors (O.C.'s) and administrative assistants (A.A.'s) enthusiastically directed the freshmen through a grueling, yet exciting agenda which left few idle hours for homesickness.

The new students were made aware of all available services at Villanova, including banking, food, financial aid and more. A slideshow with highlights of the Philadelphia area attracted more parents and students than in past years.

Students and parents also met with their prospective academic deans and workshops addressing such issues as new student concerns and drinking were conducted.

Mylod, as well as senior O.C.'s Jennifer Kunze and Lisa Reilly, found the presentation on Villanova's Augustinian heritage particularly enlightening. The Activities Forum, in which over 65 campus organizations participated, attracted many curious freshmen.

Most of the excitement, however, occurred when the 76 orientation groups gathered in the DuPont Pavilion. Entertainment included a comedian one night and a hypnotist on closing night.

The major purpose of these rallies, however, was to generate spirit and class unity amongst Villanova's newest members. On these occasions, the Pavillion rocked and roared with frenzied and enthusiastic chants proclaiming the students' loyalty to the friendships forged in their orien-

Orientation flashback

By SUSAN TOLVE

Villanova's Freshman Orientation did not always consist of four days packed with activities, slogans and people wearing numbered t-shirts. Thomas Trucks, director of maintenance, this week remembered his orientation in 1946, which consisted of reporting to your first class 30 minutes early. During this period, each professor explained what was expected of the students and pointed to the location of different academic buildings.

In addition to this one-half hour orientation, freshmen were required to wear beanies for the first few days of classes. Trucks and other World War II veterans refused to comply with this rule, as well as the one prohibiting smoking, since they entered Villanova at 24 years of age.

Thirty minutes of orientation certainly was not sufficient to cover the number of rules that students were required to follow, so students received a handbook outlining the many regulations. Some of these rules included the following: coats and tie were to be worn at all times (even during summer sessions); there was no walking on the grass; permission was required in order to leave campus; and students were obligated to attend chapel.

Edward Meagher, special project assistant in V.U.'s maintenance department, entered Villanova in 1970. In the 26 years since Trucks had attended, orientation expanded to three full days. All freshman could easily be identified because they wore a beanie, had a large badge on their jacket, and carried a cloth in case an upperclassman ever wanted his shoes shined.

Freshman were also required to carry upperclassen's books, which many older V.U. students took advantage of. Meagher remembers holding a stack of books so high that he "couldn't see where he was going."

On the third night of orientation, everyone attended the Red Garter which according to Meagher was "a drinking bash in the fieldhouse."

Both Trucks and Meagher agreed that their orientations were geared more towards gaining discipline than meeting others and adapting to college life. Judging from how much things have changed over the years, who knows what V.U. orientations will be like in the year 2000?

Parking grievances addressed by Kelly

By JOE MCGOWAN

Last Thursday, in the Connelly Cinema, Chief of Security, Rowan P. Kelly, delivered a presentation sponsored by the Association of Commuting Students (ACS), on Villanova parking policy.

Kelly concentrated on the Department's recent publication Parking By Permit Only. Since commuters applied this past week for parking permits, Thursday's question-and-answer session seemed an opportune occasion for clarification of parking regulations and restrictions.

Those in attendance were mostly officers of such campus organizations as the ACS, Student Government, and Student Activities, all of which are concerned with the parking situation. In an interview subsequent to the presentation, Kelly expressed overall satisfaction with the event, but he was dissatisfied with the question posed to him by students in the audience.

Kelly noted that "the questions asked for the most part were terrible, and this evinces some concern." As to whether the poor quality of the questions asked could be attributed to a lack of knowledge of parking rules, Kelly replied: "Difficult to say and added that one does "have the opportunity to know what they are if you read the book [Parking By Permit Only]."

Questions asked at the presentation ranged from those dealing with visitor parking and second permits, to the suspension of the student parking privilege for the main lots at home football games. Kelly asserted that the latter regulation has been mandated not by the Security Department but by the Department of Athletics. He also agreed that students believe Security to be responsible for more than it actually is.

As the presentation revealed,

Searching for a career at V.U.

By NANCY NEILL

As the senior class of 1987 begins its final year at Villanova they must start thinking about the future. Many will ask the question, "What will I do when I leave Villanova's sheltering walls?" This is where the Career Development Center enters the picture.

Much of the prospective graduate's senior year will be spent embarking on a job search. The Career Development Center (CDC) can be a student's most effective resource along the road to finding, not just a job, but a career.

The CDC runs many workshops and programs to help students develop their career goals and locate jobs. The center's objective is to give students direction by helping them choose the right major, early in their education, and then the right career as a senior.

Some of the workshops being held by the center include "Interviewing Skills," "Resume Writing," "Job Search for Liberal Arts," "Effective Job Search," and "Applying to Graduate School."

Another "valuable" program run by the CDC is known as VALUE (Villanova Alumni Lending Undergraduate Experience). This program is designed to allow students to explore career options and to investigate the work world.

Villanova alumni from many fields meet with students to discuss their occupation and answer questions. The student spends a half day with the alumnus in his or her working environment. Participation in this program is an excellent opportunity for any student to discover if a prospective career choice is right for them.

Perhaps of greatest interest to seniors is the On-Campus Recruiting Program. Approximately one third of the senior class will be placed in jobs through this program.

Each year, 300 companies interview on campus. The Career Center is looking to expand that number in the future.

Seniors interested in participating in on-campus recruiting should obtain a Villanova Interview Form (VIF) from the CDC and should begin preparing their resume for interviews.

Any senior who did not attend an informational meeting about the interviewing process is advised to go to the CDC office to become familiar with the process of On-Campus Recruiting.

As the final step in helping students locate jobs, the CDC has a summer job club to aid any graduate who has not yet found employment as of graduation. The center will hold resumes on file and even helps alumni who return in search of new jobs.

The CDC supplies a full range of services aside from locating jobs. According to Dr. Robert Stokes, director of the Career Development Center; "We have an opportunity to play a role in every student's college experience."

The CDC hosts Career Day every other year and is considering an annual Career Day. It also acts as a resource in locating speakers for club functions. This year it sponsored the Part-Time Job Fair which was held Sept. 11 in the Villanova Room.

The Career Development Center is open from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Mondays and from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Friday.

Solving the parking problem

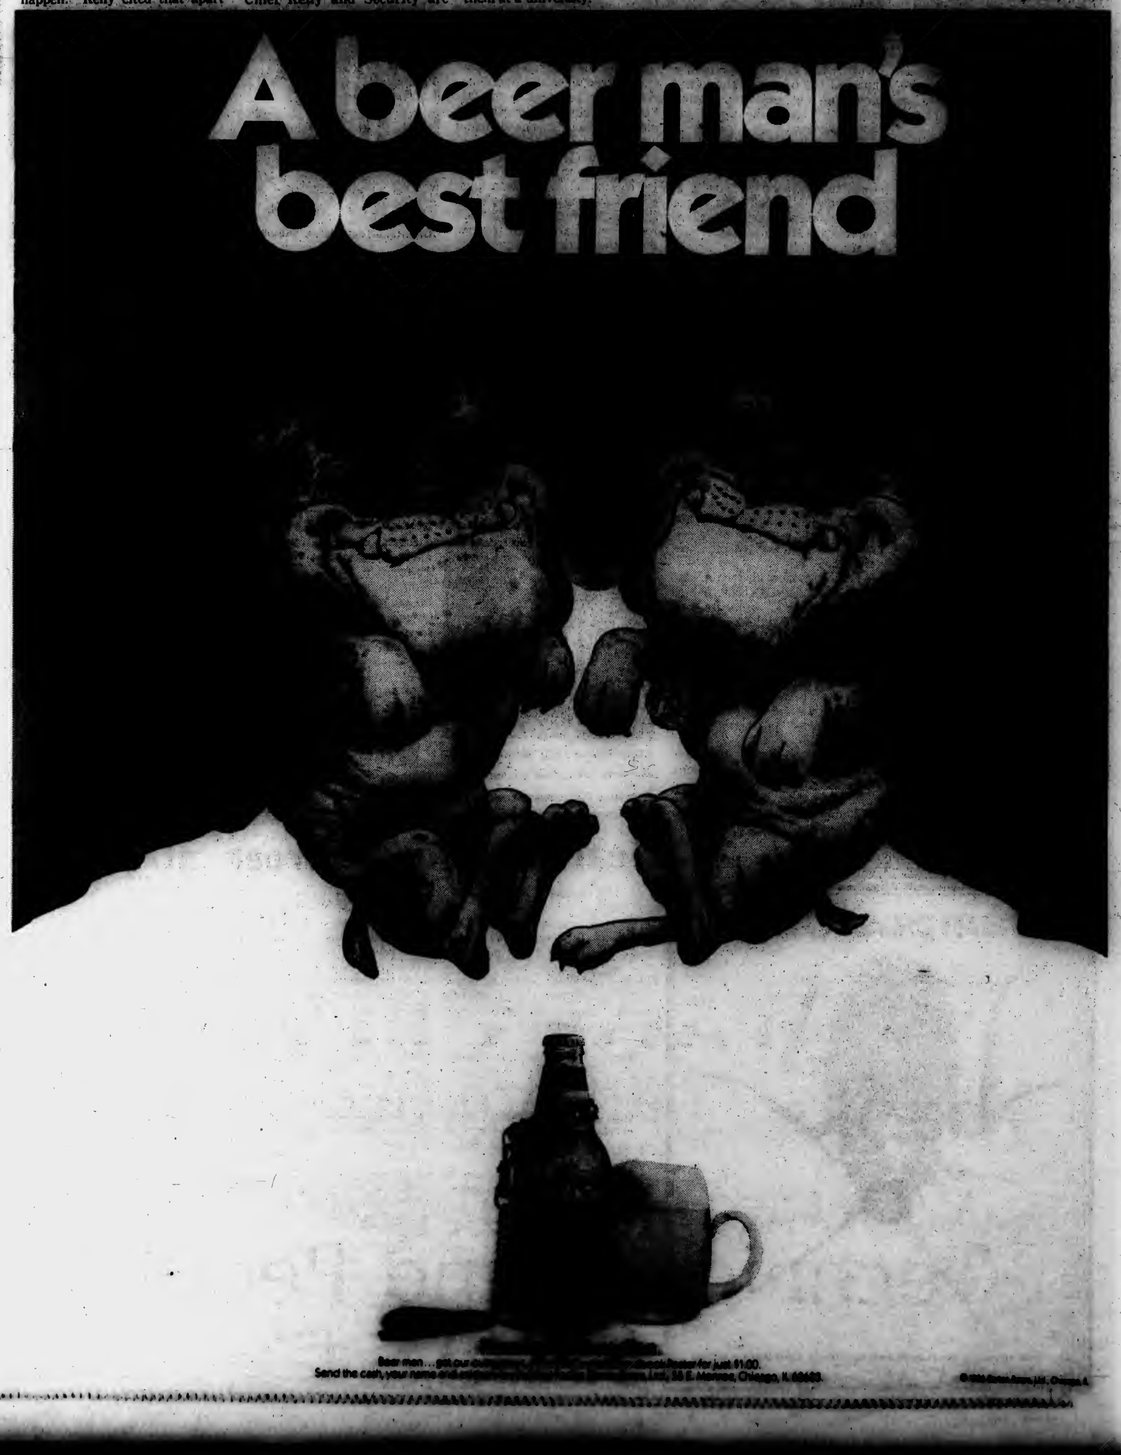
student interests in one particular area run parallel with those of Security — that is, the issue of increases in the number of parking spaces. Kelly has his eye on the rugby field across from the football stadium and adjacent to the first of the main lots for a new lot.

Kelly also believes that Security has been misrepresented in other areas of policy and policy enforcement. He stresses that "you measure the efficiency of a security system by what does not happen." Kelly cited that apart from incidences of vandalism, Villanova is relatively problem-free.

One of the students in attendance Thursday was Student Body President Joe Allman, who agreed with Kelly's assertion that Security is held accountable for more than what is within their authority: "It seems that Security gets a lot of bad press, and that some of it is unjustified. Security is taking the blame for what is not its decisions, but for what they must simply enforce. So it was helpful for us to see where Chief Kelly and Security are coming from."



Allman expressed interest on behalf of student representatives in working with Security on such issues as increases in number of parking spaces, parking restrictions, and towing.

Although attendance was relatively poor at Thursday's presentation, Chief Kelly did express his willingness to increase communication with students. Programming such as Thursday's on parking is one way to help students cope with the many policies and procedures that confront them at a university.

Overcrowded parking lots have caused many headaches on Villanova's campus.

Hunting for thrifty fashions

By STACEY WILKINS

This season's fall fashions are an eclectic mix of sophisticated separates and '60s updates. Designers are offering luxurious fabrics that are versatile enough to be worn for day and evening. Such fabrics include suede, leather, velvet, silk and cashmere. Nothing can beat that surge of confidence when wearing buttery smooth suede or cool silk against the skin. Luxury has a price attached, though often beyond the reaches of a college student's financial means.

A welcome alternative to high-priced shopping is outlet shopping. Outlet shopping has the "tag sale" allure that attracts so many bargain junkies on each shopping spree. The joy of scouting out a low-priced treasure from the rummage is part of the allure.

Outlet shopping has its drawbacks, however. Not only is it time-consuming and frustrating, but one also buys things simply because they are marked down so low.

Two such outlet centers are located in their namesake towns. The first is the nearby Reading outlet which boasts many of the finest designer outlet houses. The second is the Seacaucus outlet, located in New Jersey.

The ultimate in bargain shopping is at Filene's Basement in the heart of downtown Boston.

Senior Melina Bedics, student chairperson for Orientation 1986, measured the program's success by feedback received from parents and students.

"When people say 'I want to be an O.C. or an A.A.,' I think it's one of the best compliments you can get," explained Bedics, who was approached by many students expressing their appreciation for a well-managed and worthwhile event.

Bedics returned to Villanova June 2 to plan a two-week training program for the 13 steering committee members.

According to Lisa Lestishock, a member of the Steering Committee, the committee worked to make orientation "special" to the new students, encouraging them to live by this year's theme, "Strive to Achieve All You Believe."

If Villanova's Class of 1990 carries that sentiment with them to graduation day, life at Villanova will be far from routine. After all, "Thirty-Nine Is Mighty Fine" and "Group 1, 2 Loves V.U.;" and although the members of these groups and others will find separate niches in the Villanova community, they will always share Orientation 1986.

V.U. starts Welcome Back

By LISA KREEGER

Sept. 5, 6 and 7 marked another annual "Welcome Back Weekend" at Villanova. This year the theme concentrated on the beach, sailboats, surfing and other summer memories that seem to fade too quickly.

"Welcome Back Weekend" is planned each year by the Festivals Advisory Board, which consists of one member each from the Resident Student Association (RSA), Association of Commuting Students (ACS), Panhellenic Council (Panhel), Interfraternity Council (IFC) and the Villanovan Union.

The purpose of the weekend is to offer an activity that will appeal to everyone and to encourage students, especially freshmen, to remain at Villanova the first weekend back.

This year's weekend kicked off on Sept. 5 with the "Surfin' the Summer Away Dance," sponsored by the ACS, held in the Villanova Room. Approximately 250 people attended and enjoyed free refreshments and a disc jockey.

The Villanova Union showed "Young Frankenstein" in front of Kennedy Hall on Sept. 6, with attendance reaching 200-300 students. Prior to the movie, a trivia game was held with free t-shirts as prizes.

Festivals coordinator Ernie Hughes commented, "Outdoor movies are always big and this was no exception. Welcome Back Weekend seemed as if everyone found it a good way to relax before school gets underway."

Unfortunately, the tubing trip, sponsored by the Villanova Union, was cancelled because of a lack of support. Representatives from both organizations felt that the previous week's poor weather and the fact that Labor Day Weekend fell before "Welcome Back Weekend" are reasons why there was little interest for these activities.

IFC and Panhel closed the weekend's round of events with a clam bake and beach party in the Grotto. Stage Crew entertained over 400 students who attended with beach tunes and dance music.

One junior stated, "With events like this more often, weekend-life at V.U. could really pick up! The food, the music — everything was great!"

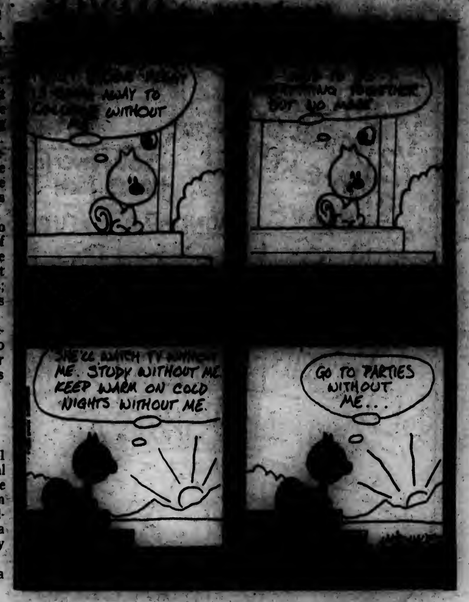
Campus Ministry

REV. RAY JACKSON, O.S.A.

Among other things, Jesus had keen insight into human nature. He not only cured the blind, lame and many who were possessed with evil spirits, but he frequently took time to share His wisdom about the various habits of heart which we carry around.

On one occasion He said, "Do not start worrying: 'Where will my food come from? or my drink? or my clothes?' Those are the things the pagans are always concerned about. Your Father in Heaven knows that you need all these things. Instead, be concerned above everything else with the Kingdom of God and with what God requires of you, and God will provide you with all these other things." Mt. 6:51.

As we begin a new school year, it is a good time to reflect on some basics. Are we pagans or Christians? Are we more concerned about our own personal welfare and success than about the Kingdom of God? Do we trust that the creator of the universe, the One who gave us sea and sky, wind and sand, trees, flowers, the fish of the sea; and who placed laughter in our hearts and smiles on our faces? Does this God not continue to care for us? Trusting that God loves us and walks with us in our daily lives should be the heart of human life if it is to have real meaning.



We know also, almost by instinct, what the Kingdom of God is about and where our priorities should be. It is not about cheating, lying, stealing or fornication. It is about helping, caring, compassion and love.

The Kingdom of self seeks only to satisfy "my" needs, "my" desires, "my" wants; the Kingdom of God seeks the welfare of others. It calls us to use our time, talents and energy in creating a climate of peace and harmony in our relationship with other people. It invites us to rise above the strife and conflicts of life by offering forgiveness, support and healing.

The Kingdom of God is life-giving because we are aware of the presence of God in our life. We trust that Jesus is true to His promise to be always with us.

The greatest secret of life is to understand that the Kingdom of God is within us. It is God's life that has brought us into being; it is God's presence that sustains us; and ultimately our final home is with God.

Our worries, fears, and anxieties will diminish in proportion to our belief that God knows our needs and will fulfill them. Let us seek first the Kingdom of God!

Entertaining responsibly

By SUSAN SMITH

Drinking songs may be of the past. New statistics show that one-third of the nation's adults abstain from alcoholic consumption. Others are drinking less. People are becoming more responsible and more health conscious.

The Pennsylvania Chamber of Commerce is offering a 35-page booklet illustrating recipes for appetizing non-alcoholic drinks and snack trays. The "Non-Alcoholic Party Drinks" booklet not only contains innovative recipes, but also home and business hosting tips, pointers for parents, and tips for teens concerning the responsible use of alcohol.

Since alcohol is usually an intricate part of the college social scene, this booklet may be more useful than one realizes. The state has been cracking down on everyone with the new drunk driving laws and makes the hosts liable for their drunken guests. Most colleges now are getting tight with their alcohol rules.

Some rules being slapped on various colleges are: fraternity parties must provide an alternate beverage; fraternity beer taps must stop at 2 a.m.; no alcohol allowed to be consumed in the dorm by anyone under 21; no open containers in public; huge fines and liabilities for the adult responsible for getting and serving alcohol to minors; and the list goes on.

At Villanova, possession of a beer keg in a dorm room is punishable by a $100 fine.

Considering these rules, and the fact that many under-21 nights are popping up at the local bars, along with the respect one should always have for the person who chooses not to drink, providing non-alcoholic drinks in a pleasing and exotic manner may be the answer.

Shopping

To be really successful, one must swallow one's pride and literally dive into bins of disorganized clothing. I actually found a beautiful double-knit Calvin Klein blazer nestled among inexpensive acrylic knit sweaters.

Sometimes bargains turn up in the most unlikely places. I have found Sak's Fifth Avenue on City Line Avenue to have clearance racks that are beyond belief. Department stores, such as Sak's, strive to keep the most updated wear on the racks, so clothes are frequently put on clearance racks in the back sections of each department.

There is an element of risk in buying sweaters in April or short sets in October, however. If you have a definite preference that cannot be swayed, enter the ranks of the official bargain hunters and keep your eyes pealed for that unexpected treasure, in the midst of the furor of a bargain-hungry crowd.

QUESTION #1.

WHAT IS THE RIGHT CHOICE FOR MOST COLLEGE STUDENTS?

a) AT&T—for everyday discounts of 40% to over 50% off weekday rates on out-of-state calls.

b) Short bursts of intense study followed by hours of frantic partying.

c) AT&T—for exceptional value and high quality service.

d) AT&T—for collect, third-party and operator-assisted long distance calls.

e) Any class that does not conflict with "The Love Connection."

If you picked A, C and D, you're destined for great things. Like AT&T Long Distance Service. AT&T offers so many terrific values. Like a 40% to over 50% discount off our day rate on night, evening, and weekend out-of-state calls.

Imagine what you'll do with the money you could save. Imagine what your parents would do if they found out.

Of course, you can count on AT&T for clear long distance connections any place you call. And AT&T gives you immediate credit for wrong numbers.

To find out more about why you should choose AT&T, give us a call. And if you picked B and E, call anyway. You could probably use someone to talk to.

Summer sounds at the Spectrum

By RUSS CECCOLA

Since the last edition of the Villanovan in May, many talents have brought their performances to the Philadelphia area. From The Hooters to Van Halen, one can always find a good band in Philly on a hot summer night. The hottest concerts are always at the Spectrum. Many acts played there, including Stevie Nicks and Eddie Murphy, yet the ones that drew the most attention were the good solid rock 'n' roll bands. Without a doubt, Van Halen ruled this summer, having the hottest show and selling out three nights at the Spectrum. They even made it onto the "Today" show, usually a privilege reserved for such junk as Culture Club.

VAN HALEN

A good shot of VH can't hurt you, now that Diamond Dope Dave is gone and pursuing his obnoxious behavior where the only person he can hurt is himself (hopefully). Van Halen was a good way to wrap up the last month of vacation. Usually bringing around an excellent opening band, this time we got Bachman Turner Overdrive, back from the 70s bands' grave — nothing too impressive. VH opened up with an early cover tune, "You Really Got Me." In the course of this song, there was so much stuff thrown up on stage that there was no room for the guys in the band. This just compounded throughout the rest of the show. Also performed were all of the songs from the "new" VH album, 5150, including their runaway hits "Why Can't this Be Love" (saved for an encore), "Dreams" and "Love Walks In." Just like "Best of Both Worlds" says, we got Sammy Hagar songs, as well as ones from the quartet including Hagar, Eddie and Alex Van Halen and Michael Anthony. Hagar performed "The One Way to Rock," "I Can't Drive 55" and "Red." Solos were performed par excellence — the best of course being Eddie's guitar explosion.

The set was a basic one, with one unique twist. The light trestles had a walkway along them in arms out toward the middle of the Spectrum, allowing Hagar to climb to the top of the arena and hang out over the audience. The energy of VH made the show. They came there to have fun, play and play hard and that's what they did.

JUDAS PRIEST

The high priest of metal returned to Philly to play the best set ever in their history. With a stage including a giant representation of a car turbo engine, appropriate for their latest release, Turbo, Priest played 19 energy blasting songs, keeping the audience in a frenzy. Judas Priest's the most popular and well known metal band, also one of the oldest.

Starting the show was red hot Dokken, playing only seven tunes. Priest made up for that. With such songs as "Breaking the Law," "Electric Eye," "Living After Midnight" and "You Got Another Thing Coming," Priest kept going without stopping for anything so time-wasting as a drum or bass solo.

Extra treats included lead singer Rob Halford's amazingly clear and high voice, his riding a Harley cycle onto stage and the transformation of the set into a giant robot, picking up Halford and guitarists Tipton and Downing and lifting them high into the air. Priest's Turbo "Fuel for Life" tour was the loudest of the summer, leaving ears ringing for at least a day afterwards.

DIO

Ronnie James Dio returned to the Spectrum in July only to record the show for video release. Opening for Dio was Accept, a German high-power metal band that had the audience more participatory than I've seen in a long time. Dio, formerly of Rainbow and Black Sabbath, now had three albums, and played only 12 songs, including "Hungry for Heaven," "Man on the Silver Mountain," "Heaven and Hell" and "Rock and Roll Children."

Since the concert was being filmed, the show went without a hitch. On this tour for the latest album, Sacred Heart, more emphasis was placed on the set than playing songs. But, with an animated dragon, excellent laser show, drum solo (with neon drum sticks in the dark), explosions, a castle and drawbridge, crystal ball and a new song preview ("Time to Burn"), who could complain? Look for the video soon that says Recorded live at the Spectrum.

Philly's classical fall begins

By JOE McGOWAN

The Fall Program of the 1986-87 Philadelphia Orchestra season will focus on works of the twentieth century and those written for piano, as well as the continuation of its Beethoven cycle. Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 is the highlight of the Orchestra's Gala Opening Concert on Sept. 17.

The Philadelphia Orchestra under the baton of Music Director Riccardo Muti will perform Symphonies Nos. 1 and 5 for a compact disc recording by the EMI/Angel label this season. Muti has returned to Philadelphia for the season after a summer spent at Vienna, Munich, and the Salzburg Festival, where he was involved in the production of operas, some of which were also recorded by EMI/Angel.

Later this month the Orchestra will preview its production of Richard Wagner's opera The Flying Dutchman. The Overture will be performed on Sept. 26, 27, and 30 as well as on Oct. 10 to introduce the full production which will be unveiled in October. Bass-baritone Helmut Welker will play the title role and the Orchestra will be assisted by the Westminster Choir.

On October 18 at 8 p.m. the Academy of Music will host as part of a cultural exchange program the State Symphony Orchestra of the U.S.S.R. The Moscow-based Symphony will perform the "Kamarinskaya" of Mikhail Ivanovich Glinka, the Concerto for Violin, Cello, and Orchestra of Johannes Brahms, and Sergei Rachmaninov's Symphony No. 2.

On Oct. 27 the Opera Company of Philadelphia will begin its 1986-87 season with a performance of Giacomo Puccini's Madame Butterfly at the Academy of Music.

The Philadelphia Singers begin their fifteenth season on Oct. 10 at The Church of the Holy Trinity on Rittenhouse Square with an evening of chamber choral works by Benjamin Britten entitled "Great Britten!" The Singers' Artistic Director Michael Korn also serves in that capacity for Philadelphia's annual Basically Bach Festival.

This series of lectures and musical performances in celebration of the great J.S. Bach is now in its eleventh year. The program runs from Oct. 22 through Dec. 20 and will feature a harpsichord recital by Gustav Leonhardt on Oct. 28 at St. Paul's Church in Chestnut Hill. On Oct. 31 organist Marie-Claire Alain will perform Bach's "Organ Mass" at the Bryn Mawr Presbyterian Church and the program will finish with a special Christmas concert featuring a performance of the Magnificat.

Considering the number of chamber music performances slated for the Philadelphia area and the impending visit of the Soviet Symphony, this fall will be one both busy and historic for classical music fans.

Special effects dominate summer film selection

By RUSS CECCOLA

The major movie studios in Hollywood save their (supposedly) best films for the summer because more people have time to go to see a motion picture then. Aside from films like "Top Gun," "Nothing in Common" and "Legal Eagles," the top grossing movies were either horror or sci-fi based. Thus, it is only fitting that we discuss only the most worthwhile pieces of celluloid and trash the junk movies. Without a doubt, there is a tie between "Aliens" and "The Fly" as both the best sci-fi/horror summer films and the best all-around summer pictures.

Every word of praise imaginable has been associated with this film — and rightly so. "Aliens" is the most intense and intelligent science fiction movie since "Star Wars." "Aliens" combines the fascination of a future world with excellent animatronics and cinematography to create an atmosphere that can best be described as terrifying.

Sigourney Weaver stars as Ripley, the strong-willed officer who survived the onslaught of a creature from the planet Acheron in the original film, "Alien." Her acting, coupled with that of Michael Biehn and Lance Henriksen, makes the situation faced in "Aliens" more believable. The plot, for those who haven't seen "Aliens," involves the return of Ripley and a combat squad of soldiers to the planet Acheron, home of the title creatures, to investigate a loss of communication with a colony there. The rest is a descent into terror, as the crew is hunted by the double-jawed acid-blooded creatures who confront them at every turn. "Aliens" took all the attention this summer and is worth it.

Director David Cronenberg returned this August with the most promising remake of a horror film since "The Thing." Starring Jeff Goldblum as scientist Seth Brundle and Geena Davis as Brundle's girlfriend, Veronica Quaife, "The Fly" has met with rave reviews everywhere. Brundle is an experimental recluse whose work is in the area of teleportation. He has set up shop in a desolate warehouse and brings Quaife to his laboratory to show her his lifestyle.

When Brundle teleports himself between the pods he has set up, he accidentally fuses his own genetic coding with that of a fly. Be begins transformation into the title creature. The excellence in "The Fly stems from the realistic effects and occurrences exposed by makeup afficianado Chris Walas. Also, the romance between Brundle and Quaife is a touching background to the hideous effects — empathy is achieved. Don't waste time — go see Goldblum in his highly-acclaimed role.

Norman Bates is back in all his glory! This summer Tony Perkins reprised his persona of psychopathic killer Norman Bates. Not only did Perkins star as Bates, but he also directed the film. "Psycho III," along with the next film I'll discuss, "Labyrinth," are both worthy of high esteem, just a step below "The Fly" and "Aliens." The interesting element of "Psycho III" that distinguishes it from its predecessors is that the film explores in depth the relationship between Norman and Mother. We see Norman in a struggle to correct his past by helping a runaway nun, Maureen Coyle (Diana Scarwid), who resembles the character Marion Crane, killed by Norman in the first movie. He also is fighting hard to get rid of Mother. The strength of "Pyscho III" is in its plot, yet the overall effect is sympathy with Norman's cause. "Pyscho III" stands out as an excellent work — and don't rule out a "Psycho IV."

Despite the fact that the cast of this film is largely Jim Henson's muppets, this fantasy from George Lucas of "Star Wars" fame is superb. David Bowie costars with Denise Connelly in this tale of adventure in the strange maze of the title. It seems that a girl named Sara (Connelly) is tired of babysitting her little brother and wishes him to be taken away. Needless to say, Jareth's powers enable him to make Sara's wishes reality and her brother is gone, with instructions given to her that she must make her way through a confusing maze to retrieve her sibling. Her quest involves meeting and battling wits with many unique creatures as well as solving numerous puzzles. The reason that "Labyrinth" is so good is that it couples the music of David Bowie with an interesting plot and stunning atmosphere. "Labyrinth" is just simply a fun movie.

Many other horror and science fiction films were released in the past three months. "Poltergeist II" started off the summer with a disappointment. It has the sappiest ending of all scare films. "Crawlspace," "Bloody Birthday, "Vamp" and "Texas Chainsaw Massacre Part 2" were the strangest releases of the summer.

"Invaders from Mars," "Demons," "Maximum Overdrive" and "Friday the 13th Part 6" are the only remaining films. "Mars" was an unnecessary remake. "Demons" was the best summer gore film, imported directly from Italy. "Overdrive" shows that you still can't drag a Stephen King short story into a 90-minute movie. Last, but definitely not least, Jason returned in "Part 6" of his saga. The second best of the series, "Part 6" brings the slaughter king back to his stomping grounds to regain his crown. Jason's rejuvenation to life is worth $40 million and proves what type of movie is the most popular in America today. Look for "Friday the 13th Part 7" in 1987. We are interested in finding how many people were killed in "Part 6." Please contact Russ Ceccola with your body count in care of the Villanovan.

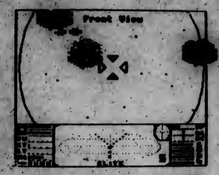
Friendly Floppies....

By RUSS CECCOLA



This article is the first in a new weekly column dedicated to all the computer enthusiasts here at Villanova... Software, and some hardware, will be reviewed for easier decision-making in buying games, productivity disks and utility programs. Most software can be considered to be available on all systems, unless otherwise specified.

If there are any things that you would like to see reviewed or any questions that you may have about products, please contact me in care of the Villanovan. All games reviewed will be given a star rating based on a scale of one to five stars, with five stars as best.

This week's reviews are concerned entirely with Firebird Licencees, Inc., a subsidiary of British Telecommunications, the $20 million communications conglomerate based in England. All items are available for only the Commodore 64 and 128, with Elite and Colossus Chess IV also obtainable on Apple systems.

ELITE •••••

Elite is a member of the Gold Edition set of Firebird games, more complex programs and about $10 more than their Silver Disk games. Elite has received a lot of attention on college campuses and merits the praise easily. Elite is a space travel and trading game in which the player pilots a Cobra spaceship in order to negotiate (either honestly or dishonestly) for goods and attachments for the ship while simultaneously rising in rank, ultimately reaching the status of Elite by having the best equipped ship and most money. The best feature of Elite is its ease of play and travel through the many galaxies available. A definite must-buy for all — this space game blows away all others and what's more, play time is indefinite.

COLOSSUS CHESS IV •••••

Never before has chess been so easy to explore with computers. Colossus not only has the most intelligent computer opponent, but also features both two and three dimensional screens, choice of six modes of play including an automatic problem solver for any chess program, an easy piece set-up mode for duplication of any famous game, invisible chess and helpful advice from any point in a game. No other chess simulator has matched up to this one — it beats them all in test games. Colossus offers the most choices to the player with a minimum of reading manuals.

THE MUSIC SYSTEM ••••

There are so many music programs on the market that it's hard to tell whether one is good for your use or not. The Music System is the kind of menu-driven product in which ease of use was an obvious priority in programming. Although most useful to musicians and music programmers, The Music System is simple for all, allowing such complex functions as editing each individual note as well as playing around with filters, waveforms and creating your own personalized synthesizer sounds. Available is an upgrade policy with which The Advanced Music System can be bought — the ultimate in programs, allowing connection of actual instruments to your computer.

FRANKIE GOES TO HOLLYWOOD ••••

This attempt of Firebird to incorporate an adventure game into the Gold System repertoire is phenomenal. The only problems are the fact that the musical group after which the game is named is intolerable and the instructions are vague. The game is based on Frankie and uses Frankie terms and a Frankie goal — to become a complete person by journeying through Mundanesville and completing all tasks necessary to obtain pleasure points. If you play the game while forgetting all of this Frankie stuff, it is one of the best graphic adventure games ever — truly interesting with many goals and excellent graphics and mobility.

The other Firebird games obtained for review are Silver Disk games, having one game on either side of a single "flippy" disk. Some are better than others, yet all are worth the money. All Silver Disk games have simple instructions and are visually stunning. Silver Disks I have received are Battle of Britain/Battle for Midway Rasputin/Chicken Chase, Booty/Cylu, Gerry the Germ/Microcosm, Underwurlde/Sabre Wolf and The Arc of Yesod/The Nodes of Yesod. Out of these, the Yesods, Underwurlde and Gerry the Germ are the best, with Gerry the Germ having that irresistible British humor in all aspects. Any of the above games, both Silver Disk and Gold Edition, are a worthy addition to any collection — so take your choice and go buy some.

Look next week for some outstanding games and utilities from Epyx!

'Diamond Dave' pushes ahead in solo career

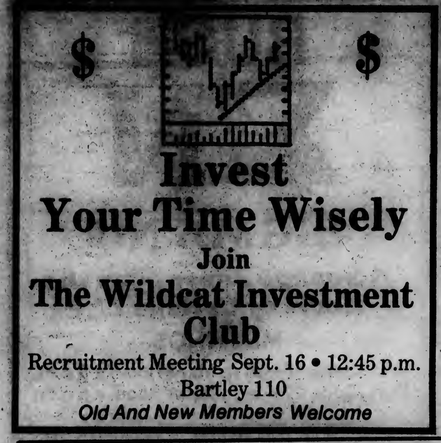
By CAESAR RITORE

Eat 'Em And Smile
David Lee Roth
Warner Bros. Records

Mr. Personality is back. David Lee Roth has released a new album with a new band and LP. While Sammy Van Hagar and Co. worry about being "serious musicians," Roth has put together a superb album which contains awesome musicianship as well as the ever present Diamond Dave sense of humor.

Mr. Roth has enlisted the services of some of today's best musicians on Eat 'Em And Smile. Guitar wiz Steve Vai (Frank Zappa, Alcatrazz) and bassist extraordinaire Billy Sheehan (Talas, UFO) are the two well-respected big names joining Roth while the band is rounded out by Gregg Bissonette on drums.

The album opens up with this summer's hit single "Yankee Rose," and although the song isn't fully experienced without the video, it still stands well on it's own. Especially noteworthy is the wild guitar playing of Steve Vai throughout the song, as well as the David Lee Roth sense of humor. With the exception of "I'm Easy," the LP's only throwaway track, side one is excellent. Among the side's true highlights, are the Billy Sheehan/David Lee Roth penned "Shy Boy," and the jazz/funk influenced "Ladies' Night In Buffalo." "Shy Boy," one of the LP's two best songs first appeared on Talas' Sink Your Teeth Into That, and is one of the heavier songs on the album. Featuring the swirling guitar of Steve Vai and pounding drums of Gregg Bissonette, the song fits in well with that David Lee Roth personality and humor.



David Lee Roth released his second solo album after leaving Van Halen. "Diamond Dave" comes to the Spectrum in the next month in support of "Eat 'Em and Smile." He hopes to regain the support he had while still in Van Halen.

Side two is also well put together, and with all its musical variation, shows that Dave is more an entertainer than just another rock 'n' roller. "Big Trouble" sees Dave bordering on rap while the hilarious remake of Frank Sinatra's "That's Life," sums up Dave's carefree attitude toward life perfectly.

Side two also contains the LP's real musical highlight, "Elephant Gun." The track is much in the vein of Van Halen in the "Women and Children First" days and shows why Mr. Sheehan and Mr. Vai are two of the best in the business. The killer bass and guitar lead break is something any real musician could appreciate.

Yes folks, Dave is back; in this writer's mind he is better than ever. One listen to Eat 'Em And Smile and you can tell who was the driving force behind those classic Van Halen LP's. Eat 'Em And Smile is an extension of the old Van Halen and is what the new Van Halen would have sounded like with Dave. The album is a must for musicians, Van Halen fans and anybody else with a sense of humor.

Summer concerts

Philly. Dylan and Petty teamed up this time, doing a double bill tour, playing separately and then together at the end of the show. Petty opened, including such hits in his repertoire as "Don't Come 'Round Here No More," "American Girl" and his popular cover version of the Animals' "Don't Bring Me Down." Dylan is a legendary. Performing acoustically as well as his hottest numbers, like "Blowin' In the Wind," Dylan amazed the audience with his talents. But even better, having both of the guitarists together on the same number is something which must be seen.

ZZ Top, the little band from Texas, came to Philly on the tour for their latest album, Afterburner. ZZ Top have become extremely popular in the last few years, due to MTV and the hot girls in their hot videos. The bearded trio rocked the Spectrum with their hits "Tube Snake Boogie," "Legs," "Gimme All Your Lovin'," "Stages" and their latest hit, popular during Spring Break, "Sleeping Bag." A good show, rife with a Texas-like stage set, ZZ Top brought down-home music to the city of brotherly love.

Hey hey, my my, Neil Young is getting high ... to prepare for his upcoming Spectrum show next week. Neil Young and Crazy Horse sold out the Spectrum for one night with no problem. Look for the concert review.

Volleyball sees four

By DANTE SCALA

The women's volleyball team began their season in disappointing fashion, losing four straight matches against strong opposition in the tournament held at the John "Jake" Nevin Field House last weekend.

Head coach Dennis McGinnis admitted the team has "a tremendous amount of work to do," but "did better than I expected ... I was really pleased with their performance." McGinnis cited limited preparation time, the talent of the rival squads, and inexperience as reasons for the team's poor performance.

Indeed, the young Wildcats faced three of the best teams from the Northeast in the round-robin, best-of-five games tourney. Volleyball power Penn State was an entry, as were defending Big East champion Providence, former Big East leader Pittsburgh, and the University of California-Irvine. McGinnis stated that the tournament was the squad's "first time against the big leaguers," and "they held their own."

While the Wildcats did not come close to winning any of their matches, they were not easily dismissesd by their opponents. They began poorly, losing to Pittsburgh, 8-15, 5-15, 2-15. The squad played better against Cal-Irvine (11-15, 4-15, 10-15), and had their best showing against Providence, pushing their Big East rivals to four games (13-15, 9-15, 16-14, 1-15). The tourney was concluded with a loss to Penn State, 7-15, 5-15, 11-15.

Of the five teams in the tournament, Penn State fared the best, with a perfect 4-0 record. Pittsburgh won three out of four matches, and Providence won two. Cal-Irvine and Villanova brought up the rear, with records of 1-3 and 0-4, respectively.

Two Ladycats attempt to block on an opponent during action last weekend in the "Jake" Nevin Field House.

Despite their poor showing, the Wildcats did show promise. Their inexperience — almost half of the players are freshmen — and limited practice time showed in numerous mistakes. They did, however, play well together, considering that they only had a week to practice together before the tourney. The team on the court was usually composed of a senior, a junior, a sophomore, and three freshmen. Junior Helen Hnat, sophomore Debbie Opitz, and junior transfer Lori Reiter all play key roles on the squad, while freshmen such as Hillary Anderson and Sheila Duffy saw playing time and gained valuable experience.

All in all, the team's future does not look as dark as its 0-4 record shows. Coach McGinnis summed up his feelings by saying, "They did better each match ... and improved tremendously [during the tournament]." He predicted that by the end of the season the team "will be a force to be reckoned with in the Big East."

Villanova's varsity football team, shown here against Pace last season, crushed Lafayette in an exhibition game last Friday at Goodream Stadium. This was a tune-up for the Wildcats opener one week from tomorrow against Iona University.

Men dump rival St. Joe's

By ED RUSH

The men's soccer team opened their season in winning fashion last Friday, and what a win it was. The game was held under stormy skies and a soggy field. The opponent was our neighbor and rival St. Joe's.

St. Joe's jumped out to an early 1-0 lead at about 15 minutes into the first half. For about the next 15 minutes or so there were several threats by both teams but fine play by both goalies prevented any scoring until the 30 minute mark when Bill Gallagher netted a goal for the Wildcats. Gallagher's goal ended the scoring for the first half, although there were several threats.

The second half started out much like the first half. The first score came 15 minutes into the second half. It was netted by St. Joe's.

The action continued on and there were several threats by St. Joe's. Eleven and a half minutes into the second half, freshman Richie Forberg of Villanova went down with what appeared to be an ankle injury. Richie later returned to action.

Jeff Collins got the Wildcats back on track with his goal that brought the score to a 2 all tie. Time started to tick away and finally ran out leaving the score tied at two.

The first overtime period saw both teams kick the ball back and forth with no real threats by either team. The first overtime period came to a close forcing the game into a second overtime period.

The second overtime period saw the Wildcats come out strong and scored a minute and ten seconds into the second overtime period. The ball was kicked back and forth for the rest of the period but St. Joe's couldn't come up with a tying goal thus giving the Wildcats a victory in their opening game.

The guiding force behind the team is once again Coach Chris Jones. Under his direction, the Wildcats will be hunting for a successful season. Some of the team leaders this year will be goalie Brendan Quinn, who is the only senior plus junior Tommy Barrett. Also look for some strong play from sophomore Keith Schuster.

With this first victory under their belts, the Wildcats are raring to go. Keep your eye on the men's soccer team; it will be exciting to watch.

Women kick off season, tie Adelphi 2-2

By JOSEPH RUSCAVAGE

Villanova's women's soccer team recently opened its season with a hard fought 2-2 tie against nationally-ranked Adelphi University.

In an effort that Coach Don Paxson called "quite a feat" the Ladycats rallied from a 2-1 deficit in the second half to gain a tie. Villanova later had a chance to win in overtime but a diving save by an Adelphi defender put an end to the team's strongest scoring opportunity in the overtime.

Villanova opened the scoring when Jean Hajjar took a pass [illegible] goal of the first half. Adelphi then came back and scored two goals to take the lead in the second half.

But Brennan and Jean Hajjar, who both caused havoc all day for Adelphi's defense, joined forces to put an end to Adelphi's advantage. Hajjar, with an assist from Brennan, scored from 15 yards out to give the team a tie.

But it was the Ladycats' defense that helped the team earn the tie. Goalkeeper Lynn McHale recorded 13 saves to keep the team in the game early. While midfielder Laurel Andrew and sweeper Ann Bilous played key defensive roles in holding Adelphi to only two goals.

With such a strong outing in their season opener, the Ladycats should be looking towards having a successful season.

Athlete of the Week

Gerry O'Reilly

The saying goes for athletes, "You've got your junior year to really prove yourself for your team." The junior year is pivotal because it is at this point where an athlete steps up to stiffer competition, and meets the challenge from his racing peers.

Former Villanova great Eamonn Coghlan '76 spoke these words to his countryman, Gerry O'Reilly, this week's athlete of the week and the Villanova senior responded by slashing his personal best time in the mile by a whopping seveon seconds (from 4.01 to 3.54.6), in a race where he finished two places ahead of the veteran Coghlan. (3.56.8)

It wasn't any old race either. After O'Reilly captured second in the sixth annual Jumbo Elliot Invitational at Villanova (to another Nova star, Sydney Maree. in 3.53.2), he tallied three other sub-four minute mile times on the European track circuit, the quickest time coming in his own country, a 3.55 clocking in Cork, Ireland.

"My training had been coming along really well at that point in the summer, but I didn't expect to run 3.54," O'Reilly said, "it kind of broke the ice on the four-minute mile mark for me."

Yarnall starts wrestling; new sport at V.U.

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

A new name has arisen in the long list of varsity and club sports — wrestling. Villanova will debut its first wrestling season on Nov. 15. The schedule for this year has a mixture of 70 percent competitive Division III teams and 30 percent tougher Division I opponents.

Nova, due to geographics, is placed in the Eastern Regional Qualifying division. This means that anyone who wins their weight class will continue on to the Division I National Wrestling Tournament.

The expectations for this year are not high, but the Cats should be competitive within their schedule. However, Coach Chuck Yarnall does have high expectations for the program's future. Yarnall expects the program to be competitive with all Division I squads within five years and in 10 years expects to have a National Championship under his belt.

At this point the team is made up of 35 members, 95 percent of which are walk-ons. The team is still looking for any interested persons with prior high school varsity wrestling experience. Anyone who would like to tryout contact: Chuck Yarnall in the athletic offices of the Nevin Field House. Tryouts will continue up until the first tournament in November.

USA WRESTLING WELCOMES VILLANOVA — Villanova's new intercollegiate wrestling program received an official "Welcome" from USA Wrestling on Sept. 4. Big Five reaches agreement

Athletic directors from the Big Five schools met during the summer at Villanova and rounded out a new pact after a 90-minute meeting. The presidents of the universities agreed to continue the agreement for 10 years. New changes will permit home games to be played on the court of the host team. The athletic directors also agreed to continue competition in other men's and women's varsity sports. The new pact will have new financial arrangements and tickets will be made available to the visiting team. Under the old agreement, each of the teams shared one-fifth of the profits and Pennsylvania also received a fee for use of the Palestra.

Book prices disputed

By SIOBHAN A. RODER

Joe Allman, student body president, said earlier this week that a Student Government investigation currently in progress into the prices charged for books by the Villanova University Shop should be finished by early next week.

"We're taking a number of books and finding the prices that the bookstore charges, and then we're also finding the publisher and the author," said Allman. "Then we're contacting the publishers and finding the prices that they charge. When we're finished with that, which should be in a couple of days, we will make available the prices to the Villanovan and the general public."

Allman said, "It is my understanding that the bookstore does in fact mark up books [from the prices charged by the publishers]. And we're looking into this at this time."

Allman began the investigation into the costs of books at the University Shop because he believes that when the students buy books, they should be paying only for books and "not subsidizing other expenses of the University."

John R. Bauman, director of the University Shop, said that any suggestion that the University Shop marks up the prices of the books is "untrue." He said that the publishers set the retail prices of the books, and that the bookstore sells the books at those prices.

"We generally just about cover expenses on books," said Bauman. "Any profit that is made is made from other things [school supplies, sweats, etc.]."

Bauman said that he was "not at liberty to give out any figures" concerning the profits made by the University Shop. He explained that he felt the Villanova University Shop makes profits on items "just like any store or other college campus bookstore."

According to Bauman, the profits go into a University general fund. They are not specifically earmarked ... They are used where they have deficits elsewhere."

Allman said figures obtained from an April 1986 meeting of the budget committee of the University Senate showed that at that time estimated profits from the University Shop for fiscal year 1986 (which encompassed the period from June 1, 1985, to May 31, 1986) were expected to be $452,080.

Figures provided by Allman from the same April meeting projected that $520,000 would be the bookstore's profit for fiscal 1987 (the period from June 1, 1986, to May 31, 1987).

SACC examines alcohol laws

By DENISE M. TYSON

A new student organization, Social Activities on Campus Committee (SACC), which plans to lobby the Pennsylvania State legislature in order to secure a clause in the present state alcohol law that would provide for Pennsylvania Universities and Colleges to choose and enforce their own drinking age, held its first meeting Sept. 10.

SACC was approved by the Office of Student Activities this summer after organizing last spring. Approximately 75 students, consisting of mostly freshmen and sophomores, attended the meeting. Sean Closkey, SACC president, addressed the students and answered questions concerning SACC's origin, purpose and needs.

Social Life

A seven-man executive committee was in charge of organizing SACC and setting its goals. These seven students, now sophomores, lived in St. Mary's as freshmen and saw a need to bring Villanova's social life back to campus. "The social life at Villanova is definitely lacking and instead of complaining, we decided to do something about it," said Closkey.

The Rev. Robert Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president of Student Life, is the organization's moderator. He said that he strongly supports SACC and its efforts to amend the current law. Martin sees this as an uphill political battle for the students but offers only encouragement.

Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities, is also supportive of SACC. "We [the University] would be quite happy to be able to allow legal drinking on campus and if SACC is successful then we, as educators, could teach responsible drinking to the entire student body," said Bonas.

Former attempt unsuccessful

SACC needs administrative, as well as student support from Villanova and also from the other universities and colleges in Pennsylvania. In 1978, a similar organization at Villanova tried unsuccessfully to attain an exemption from the statute. This group found only a lack of support from other college administrators and also the state legislature.

Politician speaks on S. Korea

By ROBERT JORDAN and MARY CHAREST

Congressman Thomas Foglietta, a Democrat from Philadelphia who once ran for mayor of the city as a Republican, spoke at the first meeting of the Political Union Sept. 15 on the subject of human rights violations in South Korea.

In February 1985, Foglietta and several other Americans attracted international publicity when they were physically attacked by government police at the Seoul Airport while accompanying exiled opposition leader Kim Dae Jung on his re-entry into South Korea.

Foglietta related the history of Korea: it is a nation about the size of Minnesota with a population of 60 million people which went through a civil war 36 years ago — a war which has never ended. The Soviet Union now supports communist North Korea and the United States supports non-communist South Korea.

"There are many similarities between South Korea's present situation and the Philippines' situation last winter," said Foglietta. He likened Kim Dae Jung, a moderate opposition leader, to Philippine leader and president Corazon Aquino, who ran for president of the Philippines against incumbent ing popular support, but right-wing incumbents General Park and General Chun have used such election fraud and physical force and intimidation that Kim was twice forced to back down and concede in order to prevent more bloodshed in his country.

"Kim left South Korea in 1984 to seek help for his people around the world, and I met him in Philadelphia where he told me his country's story. I was shocked that our country and our president would support such a regime," said Foglietta. "There is no free press, no right to assemble, no freedom to select leaders."

The congressman said that the American people should be concerned because of the massive human rights violations which occur under the government that we are supporting, including the torture and wrongful imprisonment of thousands of political dissidents.

Student leaders propose secession

By JOHANNE C. SHARP and KRISTIN A. SWITALA

Student Government under president Joe Allman and vice president Mike McGinnis, recently submitted a proposal to Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of Student Life, to withdraw the organization from Student Activities.

In a letter dated Aug. 4, Allman and McGinnis said that they are "proposing necessary steps to create a more effective representative body for the students. The most important step to take is to declare ourselves as a self-governing body."

By seceding from Student Activities, Allman said Student Government hopes to be considered more than "just another student activity or club. We see ourselves as an organization that helps run the University."

While Neville views Student Government differently from other activities because it is a student-run and elected organization, he does not think the move is necessary. "We need all of the student organizations to be coordinated. It [Student Government] interfaces with many other organizations ... being [a part of] student activities facilitates the communication."

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, said that "to restructure is not a problem, but I don't know if it is necessary. I didn't know the other ways didn't work."

In their proposal, Student Government requested a secession from Student Activities so that they could report directly to the vice president of Student Life. The letter read in part, "... the vice president of Student Life will retain authority over all actions of Student Government."

Allman said, "We see ourselves as one of the most important bodies in the University. We therefore want to declare ourselves as a self-governing body."

Lucyna Gorski, director of Student Activities, said that if Student Government did secede, Student Activities "would not be a whole anymore. They need to be a part of the students. A big part of that is in contact through Student Activities. [They are] more approachable if they are within other club groupings."

Stack said that Student Government's ideas to secede "does

Senate to hold first meeting today

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER

The University Senate, an advisory group to the University president and the Board of Trustees on policy and major decision-making issues, will hold its first meeting of the 1986-87 academic year today, at 4 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

The meeting will be marked by the presence of new Student Body President Joe Allman and Chairman Philip A. Maurone.

Senate and committee appointments of a nursing student senator, and students for the Senate Rank and Tenure Committee will be discussed.

The Rules and Review Committee will make a motion to change the term length of the faculty members on the Academic Policy Committee from two years to three years.

The Senate will also review the evaulation of the University Planning and Priorities Committee by the Rules and Review Committee.

Last year the Senate delayed its final decision on whether to have Fall Break. According to Maurone, this delay was due to the lack of data necessary to make a fair and thorough decision. Maurone hopes that decision will be forthcoming because of the investigation being done by a special Senate sub-committee, led by Allman, about the preferences of students and faculty.

The sub-committee will also investigate the possibility of having Fall Break as well as beginning school after Labor Day. Maurone believes that investigating the actual calendar part of this matter could prove beneficial to the proposal.

Student Government held its first student assembly meeting Wednesday "to inform students of the issues and to give them a chance to voice opinions" before the Senate meeting, according to Allman.

The major issues discussed were the extended semester, calendar problems, parking and off-campus housing.

The student assembly meetings will be held every Wednesday before Senate and Executive Senate Committee meetings in the 308 Tolentine from 6 to 8 p.m.

Today Joe Allman will attend his first University Senate meeting as Student Government president.

Bartley gets air conditioning

By DANTE SCALA

Installation of a new air conditioning and heating system in Bartley Hall will "very likely" be completed and ready for use in mid-January, according to the Rev. George F. Burnell, O.S.A., assistant to the president. The project, which began in July, will cost approximately $400,000.

Progress on the job has been slow because of the extensive use of classrooms in Bartley Hall, both during the summer and fall. As a result, the individual room units have not been installed, said Frank Love, project engineer and a supervisor of the project.

Love also said that many adjustments have to be made to the building, and that "unforeseen" problems may occur. He said that much of the work will have to be completed during the fall and Christmas breaks.

When finished, the system will provide air conditioning and heat to three rooms on the ground floor, including the computer room, and to the first and second floors. The third floor is already equipped with air conditioning.

Bartley faculty members first asked for air conditioning installation in 1981. The proposal went through the usual budgetary process, eventually ending with the Budget Committee's decision to appropriate the funds for installation.

Burnell described the procedure as "purely routine," stating that there was never any opposition to the project. He said that air conditioning was "highly desirable" in Bartley, citing the heavy usage of the building by the summer school and night school. Furthermore, many faculty offices are located in Bartley.

Burnell said that, at the moment, there are no definite plans to put additional air conditioning in other buildings on campus, such as Tolentine and Vasey. Presently, both of those buildings are partially air conditioned.

Air conditioning is currently being installed in Bartley Hall.

Part-time faculty organized

A new committee to improve the status and benefits of part-time faculty members was established last spring and will hold a social next week, according to Carol Kenney, a French professor and co-chairman of the committee.

Kenney said that of the 300 to 330 part-time faculty members, none receive any benefits except for tuition remission. "We are sending out a newsletter next week which will ask part-time faculty members to indicate if they are interested in benefits," such as medical, dental and retirement. retirement.

Kenney and co-chairman Laurie Noble of the English department will also be "working for equitable pay," Kenney said. The committee is working with the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president of Academic Affairs and Dr. Charles L. Cherry, associate vice president of Academic Affairs, on the matters.

"We are also in the process of having a handbook published to welcome part-timers and to explain the rules and regulations as well as the facilities available," she said. Cathy Velez, a part-time modern languages professor is working with Cherry to prepare the handbook, which will be available within a month, Kenney said.

The social will be held in the Wayne-St. David's Room of the Connelly Center, Sept. 23 from 3:30 to 6 p.m. M.E.C.

'85 Graduates are happy with jobs

A recent University placement survey indicated that 76.5 percent of the 1985 Villanova graduates are currently employed full time and 17.6 percent are enrolled in a graduate program.

In the survey, 87.7 percent reported they obtained employment either directly or indirectly related to their major.

The medium salary range for the 1985 graduates is between $20,000 and $21,999 and over 94 percent said they were "satisfied" or "very satisfied" with their jobs.

Another 23 percent indicated starting salaries of $24,000 and above.

The survey, completed this winter by the University's Career Center, showed that the class of 1985 had a 2.7 percent better employment rate right out of college than the class of 1984. J.C.S.

of the University Shop, estimated that book prices had gone up 7 to 8 percent from last year. He said, "The increases from some companies were drastic, while others were almost nothing."

Bauman explained that the faculty orders the texts, study guides and other materials needed for their courses, usually with the approval of their department chairperson. It is therefore up to the professors to decide which texts from which publishers are used.

Bauman does not believe publishers have been changing editions of texts any more frequently in recent years in order to increase profits. "I think you can figure the life of a text would be about three to four years."

According to Bauman, signs posted by students in Kennedy Hall for the purpose of selling used books are taken down in accordance with University regulations regarding the hanging of informational posters.

Prices of books at the University Shop are being investigated by the Student Government.

In addition, he said signs concerning the selling of used books are removed due to "a Presidential order [from the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University President] that nothing is supposed to be posted in Kennedy ... This [regulation] is from several years ago.

"The reason is that within a short period, the place is like a garbage pit. It [the regulation] extends even into the store. We are not allowed to hang anything unless it is product-oriented."

Bauman said that he is "ambivalent" about students selling used books.

Allman stated that Terise Fusco, sophomore class representative and assistant secretary of the Department of Internal Affairs of the Student Government "is looking at how we might be able to arrange a used bookstore in connection with the University store."

Gallen hospitalized

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

The Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president of Academic Affairs, underwent elective vascular surgery at the University of Pennsylvania Hospital in early September.

Gallen was released from hospital care on Sept. 16, and is reported to be in good condition. According to Eugene J. Ruane, director of Public Relations, Gallen is "expected to be back at his desk within the next week."

On Sept. 4, following the first day of classes, Gallen, who teaches a freshman biology course, was admitted to the hospital. According to Ruane, Gallen elected to have the surgery in the beginning of the fall semester because it is much more convenient than later in the year.

Sources said that because many Villanova Nursing School graduates work at the University of Pennsylvania Hospital, Gallen was comfortable during his stay and that he carried on a lot of business from his hospital room.

During Gallen's absence, Dr. Charles L. Cherry, associate vice president of Academic Affairs, was acting vice president.

Fewer tenure faculty hired

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS) — Colleges are hiring fewer tenure-track faculty members, and thus are creating a kind of teaching "underclass" that is damaging higher education, the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) said in a new report.

The new temporary faculty members — most of them women — get less pay and have less academic freedom in their classrooms, the report charges.

College hiring of temporary teachers has grown at an alarming rate, the AAUP added, mostly because it is cheaper to hire temporaries than to recruit tenure-level professors.

But colleges are "shooting themselves in the foot" by doing so, said Dr. Herschel Kasper, a Princeton professor who authorized the AAUP report.

The nontenure-track teachers "adversely affect the quality of faculty and the attractiveness of the institution," Kasper added.

One reason, he explained, is that students and other faculty members can form only "tenuous relationships" with the temporary teacher.

AAUP officer Dr. Robert Kreiser said short-term professors may be "not as committed" to students as their tenure-track colleagues.

"Most," Kreiser said, "are assigned to the most pedagogal tasks, and are not as available to students as other long-term faculty. What does that say about the quality of education?"

Temporary teachers, moreover, are more "economically concerned" about their careers, and more prone to avoid controversy in class.

But the trend, thanks mostly to state and federal budget cuts, is accelerating, the AAUP report found.

Nearly a half of all the first-time junior faculty positions — jobs taken right after graduate school — were nontenure-track in 1981.

By 1982-83, some 60 percent of the nation's humanities faculty members were not tenured.

Women, moreover, now occupy between 40 percent and 45 percent of all the nontenure-track positions on American campuses, Kasper added.

"We learned the incidence of full time nontenure-track employees increased dramatically and spread to virtually all fields," Kreiser said.

Kasper debunks the notion that temporary teachers make it easier for colleges to try new courses and cut back labor costs in fiscally hard times.

"Institutions argue curriculum flexibility by saying 'There are new studies and fields we'd like to try and see if they are attractive to students,' " Kasper said.

But by using temporary teachers to try the classes, colleges really don't commit themselves to making sure the classes are viable.

"What we [AAUP] concluded was there's no need to have one of those new provisional arrangements because every institution is entitled to have new faculty on probation for at least four years," Kasper explained.

"The school could hire tenured faculty on a probationary period," he noted.

VILLANOVA'S GREEK OF THE WEEK

Joyce Sujansky

Order of Omega is pleased to announce that this week's Greek of the Week is Joyce Sujansky. Joyce is a senior marketing major coming to us from Somerset, Pa. (a veritable mecca of cultural activity!) Joyce's campus activities include the Blue Key Society, where she can be seen giving her weekly tour. Also this Delta Gamma sister was co-chairperson of the Senior 50 Days Party this past spring.

Speaking of Delta Gamma, Joyce is the founding president of the Villanova colony which was once Tau Kappa Delta, a local sorority. This will be an exciting weekend for the Villanova DG's as they will be initiated as sisters on Saturday, so be sure to offer your congratulations to Joyce and the rest of the DG's!

Joyce was also heavily involved in the New Student Orientation Program where she was active for three years. "Petunia," as she is fondly refered to by her friends, was an Orientation Counselor her sophomore and junior years and was on the Steering Committee this past year.

When not spending times on activities and marketing, Joyce can be found at the famous establishments along the Main Line. But most of all Joyce loves to have nothing but good clean F-U-N Fun!

Congratulations Joyce!!

Student loans may decline

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS) — Nearly four million students nationwide may have trouble getting student loans soon, a bankers' association warned last week.

The interest rates students pay on new loans will rise while many banks, said the Consumer Bankers Association (CBA) in Washington, D.C., may simply stop making student loans if Congress approves a proposal to cut a special government allowance the banks get for making the loans.

"Many banks may just get out [of the student loan business] completely," said William Clohan, the group's lawyer.

"Students are going to have to look very hard for an institution willing to loan them money," added Bill Kidwell of the National Educational Lending Center.

The last cut in the special government allowance in March 1986, convinced California-based Security Pacific Bank to stop making student loans. The bank sold the loans it had already made to Marine Midland Bank.

But even Marine Midland officials are not optimistic. "The bottom line," said bank official Greg Lancaster, "is some banks are going to say, 'Why are we in this?' "

About 13,000 lenders are in the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) program now, Clohan estimated.

Their worry is a provision, approved three weeks ago by a House-Senate conference committee, in the proposed Higher Education Reauthorization Act that would cut the special allowance banks get.

To encourage banks to make marginally profitable loans to students, the government has let the banks take an allowance amounting to 3.5 percent higher than the rate the government charges for Treasury Bills.

Banks say they cannot make a profit on student loans without the allowance.

When the GSL program began ten years ago, Kidwell recalled, "Congress was literally begging lenders to come in. The incentives enticed them to come in, and build improvements in the system."

Congress, the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law and the administration have all helped whittle the incentives down over the last five years. The bill now before Congress would shave the allowance from 3.5 percent over the T-bill rate to 3.25 percent over the T-bill rate.

"For every dollar I lend out," Clohan said, "I got about one-half a penny back [in profit]. And that doesn't even account for the .25 percent incentive reduction."

Advocates of the reduction see it as a way to help cut government costs and balance the federal budget.

"Yes, the department would like to see the cut [because] it would make the cost of operating the GSL program that much less," said a Department of Education spokesman. "The total cost now is $3 billion a year, which does not include the loans themselves."

A spokesman, who asked not to be named, would not speculate about how many students would be left without loans or might be pushed out of school by the measure, but added students "alternatives includes the students' own savings, scholarships" and parental contributions to tuition payments.

"Also, remember many colleges have begun their own loan programs," he said.

The bankers themselves note students who already have GSLs probably won't feel the pinch. But students who try to take out loans after the incentive reduction goes into effect — as soon as Oct. 1 or as late as next Jan. 1 — will have to pay higher interst rates on the money they can find.

"For the first four years [after the reduction becomes law], the interest will be 8 percent," Clohan predicts. "From five to 10 years, it will go up to 10 percent."

For a student who holds $10,000 worth of loans, Clohan said the 2 percent interest hike represents an extra $200 year, or about $17 a month.

"It doesn't sould like a lot, but many students hold more than that," Clohan said. The average annual student loan is $2,390.

But generally, Kidwell predicts, "Money will be less available en masse than before."

"Lower-tier schools serving ethnic groups, specifically vocational schools, need the Guaranteed Student Loan program," Kidwell said. "Hard-to-come-by money will get even harder to come by."

Kidwell believes "most banks will try to continue, but they may have to redirect [their efforts] to loans [they can make] at a lower cost [to themselves]."

"You may see a bailout" of banks from the program, he added, estimating as many as half the program's lenders may quit if the proposal becomes law.

Clohan firmly believes the proposal will become law. The allowance "will be cut. There's almost no doubt about that."

NATIONAL NEWS NOTES

U. of Virginia plans Fall Break

The University of Virginia has scheduled the first Fall Break in its history for next month in response to pressure from students, who say the break will help reduce the stress they have felt in the past before Thanksgiving recess.

The success of the break, implemented on a two-year trial basis, will be monitored by the University's Calendar Committee. Faculty members are concerned that attendance the days before and after the break will drop significantly.

According to university officials, the school will remain open during the break, so that students can relax there, rather than return home.

Some opponents of the Fall Break have argued that students should "learn how to use stress," and make use of a "wellness" program instituted by the university that encourages a better health regime to reduce stress.

Rehnquist heckled at Indiana U.

Supreme Court Chief Justice Nominee William H. Rehnquist cut short a speech last week at Indiana University in Bloomington, Ind., because of hecklers who chanted, jeered and sang the civil-rights anthem "We Shall Overcome." The group of about 30 protesters also stood and turned their backs while the judge was speaking.

Rehnquist was at the university to speak to a crowd of 3,000 at a dedication ceremony launching a $12.5 million renovation of the law school library. Observers said that Rehnquist deleted about one-fifth of the material in his 19-page speech.

U. of Del. establishes tests policy

The Faculty Senate of the University of Delaware recently voted to forbid professors from holding exams outside regular class periods.

The new policy, effective this fall, excludes makeup and final exams. Also, professors of multisection classes will still be permitted to give exams at off-class times, if they list exam dates and times in advance in the registration booklet.

The measure was enacted to limit the number of courses that can hold exams during off-class times because a number of students have been forced to miss classes to take other exams in past years.

In order to avoid scheduling conflicts, students who sign up for a class with predetermined exams will not be registered by the Records Office for any other classes at the same time.

have some merit, but Dr. Neville and myself have yet to decide."

"I'm not sympathetic to the idea of [Student Government] reporting directly to me," Neville said. I do not have the time. They need an advisor like all the other organizations. They should report to someone in the Student Activities Office to facilitate their requests."

Additionally, Allman said, "We want to answer to ourselves ... We're part of the Senate."

But as Neville asserted, "At a college, any kind of legislature needs coordination through the Senate. Even the Senate is not a governing body. It is a recommending body.

"To be effective, they need to be a sounding board for other students. The most active students are in other activities. [Student Government] being in Student Activities will facilitate this communication," he said.

Neither SACC nor any other campus organization will be able to sponsor activities on campus with alcohol unless they enforce the legal drinking age law until there is a change in the existing law. "The law has to change before we [the University] can make a move," said Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of Student Life.

Students at the meeting also seemed to be supportive of SACC. Miche Veix, a sophomore, said, "as a student I feel that SACC is a great building block for future on campus activities that will have better attendance."

Women do better at college

LOUDONVILLE, NY (CPS) — Women get higher grades than men, and probably do better in college because they mature faster, said a six-year study by a sociology professor at Siena College in upstate New York.

"Women students consistently did better [at college] than did men students," says Profesor Paul Murray. "During their four years at school, women seem to improve their study habits. The men don't.

"It appears," he said, "that sometimes the academic end of college becomes a secondary pursuit for males."

Murray, in trying to figure out why some students got better grades than others, examined students' academic and family backgrounds, living arrangements, extracurricular activities and study habits before noticing that gender seemed to influence their grades most of all.

No one is sure why women get better college grades than men, but Dr. Cynthia Secor, director of Higher Education Resources Services Mid America hypothesizes it may have something to do with the way people become socialized.

"Girls are socialized to be more verbal, more detailed and polite," Secor explained. "Girls are socialized to be not as rambunctious as boys."

Women scored higher in Murray's classes than male students did, and the disparity, he said, "is much wider in upperclassmen."

Although she does not disagree with many of Murray's findings, Secor added. "The real difference [in performance] is when both get out in the real work world.

"Women do better in school gradewise than men, and then don't do as well in the real world," she contends. "Men will achieve more there."

"My original focus was to make only incidental reference to sex differences," Murray said, "but it began to appear that this was the most significant finding. There is a sex difference on almost every variable."

Politican speaks

"We were very lucky about the way the Philippines' situation worked out," said Foglietta, "but we are missing our cue in South Korea. The situation there is intolerable. The people and the Church [Cardinal Kim supports the opposition] want a democratic government.

"We can apply pressure for change because South Korea relies on the U.S. government economically, politically and militarily. And with the international publicity which will surround the 1988 Olympics scheduled to be held in Seoul, it would be a disgrace for the United States to be known as the supporter of such an oppressive government."

The Political Union has a series of well-known political leaders scheduled to speak at Villanova this semester. Political Union president Sean Carroll and moderator Katherine Farrell have arranged for Frank Rizzo, former Democratic mayor of Philadelphia, who is planning to run again as a Republican, and state representative Bob Flick (R-Chester County) to speak in November.

On Sept. 25, the Political Union and the College Republicans will host Lt. Gov. William Scranton III, Republican gubernatorial candidate from Pennsylvania, and New Jersey Governor Thomas Kean. The event will be held from 10 a.m. until 12 p.m. in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. Refreshments will be served and all are welcome to attend.

Change on-campus social life

If Villanova's social life on campus is ever going to improve, a significant number of students must become involved in the Social Activities on Campus Committee (SACC). This newly-formed student group is trying to change a clause in the state law so that the legal drinking on campus would be allowed.

Students constantly complain about the lack of a social life on campus. Weekends see students deserting campus for local bars and off-campus parties. And the fines and punishments for violations of the University's alcohol policy have only become stricter this year.

The administration is doing what they see as their only option: to enforce the state's legal drinking age. Unsuccessful attempts have been made in the past to change the situation. The attempts have been made not because every student on campus wants to drink alcohol, but because students desperately want social functions on campus on a regular basis- and functions which will be well attended.

The time is long past for complaining and discussion. This committee has a solid idea, and one which has support from some of the University's administrators. It will be a hard battle, but right now it's the only chance we have to change things for the better. The crucial factor for its success is the involvement of students. A large number of students must get involved with SACC now. If we are so apathetic as not to help this group and show a broad base of support for it, we have no right to complain.

Remembering Challenger

An ambitious program to honor the seven pioneer astronauts who perished in the shuttle accident is currently being developed and deserves our full support. The American Education Foundation has proposed a national scholarship program for higher education which will generate 10,000 scholarships annually. This program, which would give qualified students the opportunity to attend college, is certainly a fitting monument to those who gave their lives for the sake of achieving more knowledge.

At a time of rising college costs and federal budget cuts in education loan and grant programs, this proposal could not be more welcome. The American public, and in particular the private sector, must make the financial commitment to this scholarship program and others like it. We must push for excellence; we must renew the commitment to the youth of this country that no student will be denied the opportunity of higher education because of financial considerations.

Education has played a great role in the development of our country. These seven astronauts were themselves fine examples of the American educational system. Their lives should not have been given in vain. This tragedy jolted us into the realization of how little we really know, and the most appropriate way to remember these individuals is to renew our support for the pursuit of knowledge.

This is the challenge of the Challenger: to ensure, through our financial contributions to scholarship funds like this one, that talented individuals will have the opportunity to attend college and contribute to the growth of knowledge.

Letters to the Editor

Don't criticize yearbook staff

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to a letter to the Editor printed in last week's issue of the Villanovan from Cyrus J. Sharer, retired professor. Sharer had stated his opinion on the reasons for the demise of faculty photographs by placing the blame on "a silent majority of students too busy to be aware of the process involved in producing a yearbook and what it should or should not contain."

The Belle Air staff should not be held accountable for the decisions of previous editorial boards.

I wish to bring to Sharer's attention that the 1987 Belle Air Editorial Board is very aware of all the work that goes into producing a yearbook. In fact, the editorial board recently returned from an intense yearbook workshop in Gettysburg, Pa., which featured guest speakers from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association and Herff Jones yearbooks.

A yearbook is a photographic and journalistic record of the year. As a result of this, the Belle Air staff is always striving towards new and innovative ways to cover Villanova's community during the year. Sharer's letter was not necessary. Such channels of communication should be reserved for conflicts and controversial issues.

If there are any problems with the Belle Air, anyone should feel free to stop by the yearbook office, 26 St. Mary's Hall, call 645-7240, or drop a letter in the yearbook mailbox, 108 Dougherty Hall.

Because the Belle Air is a University publication that is always open to new ideas and suggestions (even before Sharer's). Administrators' and department chairpersons' portraits have been scheduled for Oct. 15 and Oct. 16 in the North Lounge of Dougherty Hall. Group photographs for the faculty members of each department are in the planning stages.

Since the Belle Air staff wishes to include as many of Villanova's students as possible, I am presently researching the ability to include portraits of underclassmen as well.

By the way, "Belle Air" is spelled without an "e" on the end of "Air." Pass the word — the Connelly Center staff isn't sure how to spell it either.

Football losses can't be ignored

By BRIAN D. WEBB

When Villanova's football program reported substantial losses last year, the Villanova community responded in a curious manner. The $479,000 loss, many said, was in keeping with University projections and therefore nothing to worry about. The facts, however, suggest that such an opinion is naive, inaccurate and generally counterproductive.

With the proper attention, Villanova's football program can prosper. Without the proper attention, the program is doomed to failure once again.

In 1981 the Board of Trustees voted to drop the Division 1A football program because of excessive losses. Basically, the program just didn't get adequate support. As the losses mounted, the administration became more and more aware of the deleterious effect the program was having on other University programs, including tuition, faculty salaries and financial aid.

After years of student and alumni pressure, the Board finally yielded and voted to restore the program at a less competitive and therefore less costly division. The problems of the past were reportedly ironed out. The new program was supposed to have "financial sustainability" and a net operating cost in "reasonable proportion" to the total University budget. And football proponents, including Athletic Director Ted Aceto, declared they would not "fall asleep" anymore.

But after last year's heavy loss and this year's projected loss of $565,000 (which would be the highest loss in the history of Villanova football), something is apparently not working according to plan.

Unfortunately, the evidence suggests that the administration (led by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, and the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, vice president of Academic Affairs) is simply sitting back and waiting for the football program to fail. There seems to be a lack of conviction in the administration's explanation for the football losses. Instead of justifying the cost through facts and statistics, they casually dismiss the losses as a natural by-product of football. Gallen says the deficits are justified simply because "the students wanted it back."

This glib complacency is a dramatic turnaround from their earlier staunch opposition to football. What happened to their concern that such priorities as reasonable student tuition and competitive faculty salaries would have to be compromised to allow for football? It would be naive to believe that their priorities changed overnight.

A major part of the justification for dropping football in 1981 was the string of 10 consecutive years of losing nearly one-half million dollars. When the administration presented these statistics, it must have been a staggering blow to the football advocates. The administration had tangible evidence of the program's difficulties, while the football advocates could only respond with lofty theories about such intangible benefits as public relations.

Now, since football losses continue to be as high as ever (and will continue to escalate, according to Aceto), one can certainly assume that the administration will once again use football losses as a justification for dropping the program. Unfortunately, history has a way of repeating itself.

The administration has given the football program just enough rope to hang itself with. Football scholarships will be allowed to increase from $296,000 this year to $523,000 next year. And coaches' salaries will increase from $188,000 this year to $223,000 next year. Although these figures are comparable to other schools in the division, they do seem excessive for a program that is trying to prove it can have "financial sustainability" and a "net operating cost in reasonable proportion" to the total University budget. The University should freeze football scholarships and salaries until it can determine a way to pay for these expenses without having it come out of the general University fund.

While the football losses mount and the administration gains more and more ammunition to use against the program, students and some alumni seem all too willing to ignore the facts. Accepting the losses as a natural by-product of the program can only be counterproductive. Those who are really sincere in their support should encourage even more attention to the issue. But instead of stressing all the intangible public relations benefits, or the fact that other programs also lose money, more of an effort should be made to tackle the deficit problem. Students can help by buying tickets and the alumni fund solicitors can help by admitting that the program is having financial difficulties. Alumni should certainly be willing to contribute if they know the University is in need.

Only an open and intense effort by the entire Villanova community can bring about the successful football program that we all want.

Stress education, not majors

By JIM A. FASULO

Educating oneself is a life-long process, and certainly one that does not end when the diploma is received and your first job stares you in the face, Monday morning, June 1.

As I write this piece, I recall the remarks of my editor after she had learned that I was interested in switching my academic concentration for the third time in three years.

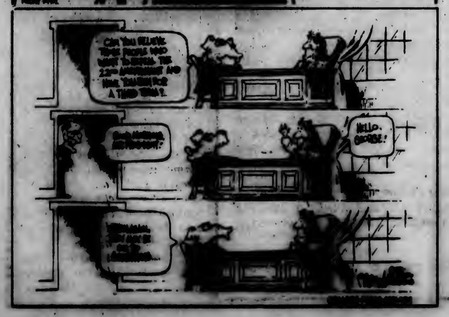
"Have you changed your major yet, Jim?" she asked with a querish look on her face stemming for the fact that I had only two more semesters remaining here at Villanova.

"No," I responded. "I just got right back in to the mind set of being an English major. I guess I have not really accepted the fact I can change my concentration of study one final time."

The entire point of this op-ed is to de-emphasize the stress put on the incoming class of 1990 concerning which academic major they must eventually choose in the space of the next two years.

I chose business administration (non-committingly) in the so-called "all-important" first year of my college education at Washington State University, in Pullman, Wash. A semester later it was a major entitled the English-Business Option, an intricate blend of literature and composition classes with modern-day finance and accounting. The following semester, the interest in literature grew and the business interest dissipated.

After three full years, I have discovered that the importance lies not in the choice of a specific major, but the knowledge you can gain from studying a number of different fields. This assumption — that we are here to study for the sake of learning and educating ourselves - is at issue in higher education nationwide. Are we tomorrow's future leaders, teachers, or historians, or are today's undergraduates an extension of the widely popular yuppie lifestyle?



Educating onself is a life-long process, and certainly one that does not end when the diploma is received and your first job stares you in the face, Monday morning, June 1. Employers look for future employees who are well educated. This education is an ongoing one and includes the willingness to re-expose yourself to certain areas of coursework that you may have side-stepped in your undergraduate career (e.g. — the classics, humanities, general science).

An historical figure in philosophy once said, "The wise man is one who doesn't profess to know that which he doesn't know." By making this statement, Socrates was inferring that we should make the attempt to learn as much about this world around us as we possibly can, before we feel satisfied with our education.

Socrates did not undergo the burdensome process of choosing a major; he decided that knowledge was the goal he wanted to achieve. Without this knowledge, the decisions we make between choosing engineering, nursing, accounting, or English become irrelevant.

Living conditions need improvement

To the Editor:

As an on-campus sophomore living in Sheehan Hall, I feel the University should take a much more active role to improve the present living conditions in the dormitories.

I pay for room and board and expect the University to provide decent, if not nice, living conditions for its on-campus students.

For instance, the laundry facilities in Sheehan Hall are deplorable. Only two of the five washers worked on Tuesday. Sullivan does not have any washing facilities and must rely on those of Sheehan and Corr halls.

Also, students who reside in most of the Main Campus dormitories do not have the option to acquire individual phones in their rooms. If the University can provide cable television, they should certainly be able to provide individual phones. During peak hours, students cannot get to an open phone to make a call, let alone receive an incoming call. This situation must be immediately acted upon because it is so important and urgent.

Other problems that need attention include the cockroach and rat invasion, poor water pressure in the showers, leaking roofs and radiators (especially in Alumni Hall) and the disasterous ground floor Sheehan lounge.

In addition, the University should spend money to obtain some excess luxuries like ice machines, air conditioning and kitchenettes for all dormitories. At other schools like the University of Delaware and George Washington University these items are "givens" and not considered extras in any way.

I feel the University should take more responsibility in the upkeep of their dormitories. Main campus dormitories should be modernized and improved especially in the laundry and telephone departments. I pay for room and board and expect the University to provide decent, if not nice, living conditions for its on-campus students.

Change our anthem

By MARK V. DiSTASIO

When one thinks of America in culture, he thinks baseball, hot dogs and apple pie. When one thinks of America in song, he thinks "Yankee Doodle Dandy," or "The Star Spangled Banner." Recently, however, our 55-year-old national anthem's credibility and significance have been questioned.

This past summer a bill was introduced in Congress to have "America The Beautiful" adopted as our national anthem in place of "The Star Spangled Banner." I, for one, hope that this bill passes Congress with flying red, white and blue colors. I will be honest, I do not like "The Star Spangled Banner."

I find it hard to understand why so many people want to retain our present anthem. In 1814, when Francis Scott Key wrote the words to this anti-British tune, he based the melody on a 1777 English drinking song! Today, many people have difficulty both conducting and singing "The Star Spangled Banner." It is a struggle to reach those high and low notes. Aside from that, national anthems should not involve themselves with foreign relations, rather they should espouse domestic patriotism.

Now one might think, "Why change the anthem now, all of a sudden?" Well, although "The Star Spangled Banner" was composed in 1814, it did not officially become our national anthem until 1931, Why? 1931 marked the beginning of The Great Depression, and America needed an almost-belligerent song to get our spirits up.

All factors considered, "America The Beautiful" is an outstanding song. It is simple in verse, easy to sing, and its scope embraces the patriotic America of 1986:

"O Beautiful for spacious skies.
For amber waves of grain.
For purple mountain majesties,
America! America!
God shed his grace on thee.
And crown thy good with brotherhood
From sea to shining sea.

Need I say more?

Challenging traditional roles in the Christian Church

By KAREN E. DUNNE

Are women "second in nature and first in sin?" According to Dr. Rosemary Radford Reuther, Georgia Harkness professor of religion at the Garrett-Evangelical Theological Seminary at Northwestern University, the Catholic Church's long-standing resistance to modifying its highly patriarchical structure suggests that they are.

And is the tradition of patriarchy, questioned Reuther, "an expression of divine will," or rather, "an expression of sinful, unjust arrangements?"

Reuther posed this question to a packed Villanova Room Sept. 15 in a discussion entitled, "Can Christianity be Liberated from Patriarchy?" Author and editor of over 20 books and 300 articles and book reviews on church and women, Reuther challenged the gathering to reexamine the meaning of church and equality.

Villanova's Department of Religious Studies and Women's Studies Program co-sponsored the lecture, attended by students, faculty, clergy and other members of the surrounding community.

Reuther defined the concept of partiarchy, which has, throughout history, permeated social institutions, and more importantly, society's image of God as the "whole legal system of the sovereignty of the father."

We are thus faced with a serious contradiction, suggested Reuther. Women have always been active in religious life. Jesus Christ had a special relationship with his mother and a loyal circle of women followers; in the 1600s, women were considered to be more pious than men; women outnumbered men in 19th century church congregations; Catholic women today possess "a very high level of theological sophistication," and statistically, more Catholic nuns hold masters degrees than their bishop friends.

However, patriarchy remains the "major cultural force that justifies the subordination of women," pointed Reuther.

Reuther sees this subordination manifested in the Church's increasing escalatioin of efforts to restore the traditional hierarchical order and suppress liberation theology, particularly within the last 10 years. Included among the plethora of issues stringently resisted by the Church is the ordination of women to the priesthood.

"At the very time the theological door has been closed to the ordination of women, in fact, more and more Catholics have been pastored to by women," Reuther explained, referring to the large number of women who began seeking out theological educations after the Second Vatican Council, in the 1960s, subsequently exerting their influence through a variety of teaching roles.

While many Protestant sects have taken steps to further the concept of common human rights by ordinating women, the Catholic Church has managed to hold out on this front and others.

Protestants have been somewhat sympathetic to the women's movement, which derives its guiding principles from the egalitarian doctrines established in the Enlightenment era. On the other hand, although the founders of the movement in America included a critique of patriarchy in Christian institutions, the Catholic Church "did not relate to the sufferage of the women's movement at all," stated Reuther.

"Liberalism was seen as off limits for Catholics," Reuther continued, explaining that the Catholic bishops openly opposed women's sufferage in 1920.

Reuther sees the Church's resistance to the ordination of women priests as "bigotry," especially at a time when the Church is facing a critical shortage of young men desiring to enter the priesthood.

To Reuther, liberating the Catholic Church is not a question of destroying a rich tradition. It is a question of an alternative and more just interpretation of the Christian gospel; a question of squelching a "repressive and discouraging atmosphere"; a question of the possibility of being a "critical and rational human being" within the Christian Church.

Dr. Rosemary Radford Reuther lectured to a full house in the Villanova Room on the need to reexamine Christian traditions.

Plans for change

By SUSAN GARRA

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, spoke to interested students on Monday at Delurey Hall. Driscoll not only described various University plans, but also informed the students of the process by which these plans are put into action.

In past years, many University plans have been completed, including Connelly Center, the DuPont Pavilion, Saint Monica Hall, Katharine Hall, renovations in Tolentine, Bartley and Mendel and the upgrading of the engineering and science laboratories.

Two million dollars were invested in an energy conservation plan, and a new computer system, consisting of satellite areas in Mendel and Tolentine Halls, has been completed.

Extensive past projects have not slowed down plans for the future. One of Driscoll's main concerns is the housing problem.

In addition to addressing the problems created by the number of students forced to live off campus, there has been talk of providing additional office and classroom space by converting Corr and Alumni Halls. More living space will thus be needed to house students who would ordinarily reside in these halls.

Plans for three to four new dorms, two of which will most likely be built on South Campus, are seriously being considered.

The University would like to preserve the idea of using the main campus for classrooms and socializing, while leaving the perimeter of its campus for dormitories.

Villanova has no intention of increasing the present enrollment figure, rather the University is concentrating on housing up to 75 percent of this figure in the future.

In addition to freshmen and sophomores, more juniors and seniors will have the opportunity to reside on campus. The reasoning is that upperclassmen can provide a role model for younger students.

Driscoll explained that University plans must pass through a three-step process. First, there is an assessment period. Next, a priority list is devised, listing the most needed and accessible plans at the top. Finally, officials must decide how to fund these plans by notes and bonds or capital campaigns. Only after these steps have been completed can plans be put into action.

Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., held an informal meeting on Sept. 15, in Delurey Hall, to make students aware of proposed campus changes.

By REV. KAIL ELLIS, O.S.A.

Sometimes we rather thoughtlessly cast saints in roles which deny the complicated nature of human personality. The holy cards and plaster statues many of us grew up with often fostered this fuzzy thought process.

But if we took the trouble to learn something about these saints, we might find that the images were not fair to them. They lived in a world like ours. They were people like us. They sometimes made mistakes.

We honor them not so much because they were superhuman, but because they have given us some examples of what ordinary human beings — people who make mistakes — can do when they allow the power and love of God to work in their lives.

Such a man was St. Thomas of Villanova, the eponymous patron of our university. Thomas was born in 1486 and came from the city of Villanueva de los Infantes from which, according to custom, he derived his surname.

He studied at the University of Alcala and, after obtaining his degrees, taught philosophy and theology at his alma mater. His intellectual reputation became so well-known (he became the Augustinian patron of studies) that he was offered a position at the pretigious University of Salamanca.

Thomas declined the honor and instead joined the Augustinian Order, taking his vows on Nov. 25, 1517 (the same year that another Augustinian, Martin Luther nailed his 95 theses to the church door in Wittenberg, Germany).

By the 16th century Spain was beginning its Golden Age. Fed by the immense wealth of the New World, a great flowering of intellectual and cultural activity took place in literature, drama, and the arts.

This same wealth, however, also fostered corruption and materialism which permeated practically all segments of Spanish society.

As a priest and a religious, Thomas abherred the idea that high Church positions could be obtained through power and held by men who were more used to luxury than holiness. As provincial of the Augustinians, he was concerned by the excesses of the conquistadores who enslaved the native populations, and sent Augustinians to Mexico to establish schools and other ministries.

In 1545, at the insistence of the Emperor Charles V, he reluctantly agreed to become the bishop of Valencia, a diocese that had been without a resident bishop for over 100 years. He immediately made his presence felt by establishing schools and social programs for the poor, and by turning the bishop's palace into a kind of soup kitchen and shelter for the homeless.

Thomas believed that as long as we remain on the fringes of life, we find neither ourselves nor God. Early on he learned that the cost of answering Jesus's call to discipleship lies somewhere between striving and discouragement.

He reflected on Jesus' sermon that his kingdom belongs to those who sorrow, and wish, and do not measure up to the prevailing standards of propriety and success. He realized that happiness is neither power nor prestige nor the acquisition of property, but rather the ability to show mercy, to make peace, and to persevere with a single heart. All this presupposed a spirit of thankfulness.

But anybody can be thankful for a lovely day, a full stomach, a loving family, or a feeling of accomplishment. The crunch lies in acknowledging that such blessings are fragile and easily lost, and that many people are not so blessed.

Thomas did not give into cheap solutions. When he saw someone who was hungry or suffering, he did not blame God or absolve himself by rationalizing that the person was lazy or stupid or immoral and deserved what he got.

Instead, he took it as a challenge to help. He knew that the love of God can redeem peoples' lives and that he had a responsibility to bring that about. This set him apart from others who get, hold and keep all they can, at the expense of anyone who is in their way.

We celebrate Thomas of Villanova's life because he reminds us of what ordinary people can do when they side with the Creator of the world, and not with those who would destroy it. He chose to live for something greater than himself, and this is why he is numbered among the saints. His life also shows that it is possible for us to cast our lot with them.

Father Kail Ellis, O.S.A. is the Dean of Arts & Sciences at Villanova University.

Helping people to see a new world

By SUSAN TOLVE

What do many juvenile delinquents, pschiatrists' patients and poor students have in common? A large percentage of these people have vision problems, which is not a mere coincidence, but a contributing factor to their condition, according to Hazel Richmond Dawkins, author of The Suddenly Successful Student.

Dawkins, an editor-writer, has worked on the Evening Standard in London, and at Harper and Row and Chilton publishing companies. Her interest in behavioral optometry stems from personal experience.

When Dawkins was 7, she underwent surgery to correct an in-turning eye. Within a few months after the operation, her eye was not straightened, but it began to turn outward. Dawkins became functionally blind in that eye — a condition which she lived with for 40 years.

During those years, which were spent in England, France, Switzerland and America, Dawkins was continually told by doctors that nothing could be done to help her regain her lost eyesight. Dawkins accepted her condition as untreatable and went on with her life. She was urged by her husband and a friend to see a doctor, however, when her eye began drifting outward and twitching, a sensation she could not feel.

Dawkins was referred to Dr. Ellis Edelman of Newtown Square, Pa., who told her, "You are not blind. You are suppressing the output."

Using optometric vision therapy and special lenses, Edelman was able to help Dawkins regain her vision in a matter of months. Dawkins's husband and three of her children also had tremendous improvements in their vision after seeing Edelman.

Realizing that all of the information on behavioral optometry was written for professionals, Dawkins became convinced that a book explaining this field was needed for the general public — particularly parents and teachers.

Setting out to accomplish this task, Dawkins collaborated with Edelman and Dr. Constantine Forkiotis, a classmate of Edelman at the Pennsylvania College of Optometry.

The Suddenly Successful Student stresses the misconception that vision and eyesight are synonomous. The authors state that "Sight and vision are not the same. Sight is the ability of the eyes to focus clearly, one of the many skills which make up vision. Vision is something all-embracing. When skills such as converging, fixation and teaming integrate efficiently with the brain's cortex, the result is 'vision.'

In other words, someone may have 20/20 eyesight, but if the eyes do not work together properly, the vision will be poor. In extreme cases, the brain alternates reception from one eye to the other, or as in Dawkin's case the brain completely stops accepting messages from one eye.

While researching for her book, Dawkins was amazed at the number of cases in which behavioral optometry has changed peoples' lives. Luci Johnson, for instance, daughter of the former

Victims learn how to cope

By ANNE DISIMONE

Interested in helping victims of various crimes? The Victim Services Center (VSC) of Montgomery County is offering positions for volunteers and internships.

The VSC is looking for people who are interested in helping others who possess good communication skills and who are not embarrassed by sexual issues.

The VSC deals with child and adult victims of sexual assault and rape, and other crimes, including robbery, muggings and harassment. All services are confidential.

To be a volunteer member, you must become a certified sexual assault counselor. This involves a 10-week training program beginning Sept. 30, consisting of classes that run one day a week. The total program is 43 hours long and is required by Pennsylvania state law.

It enables the student to become eligible to counsel others and render supportive services. It takes one semester to train, and VSC expects at least one year service (not counting summers) after you have successfully completed the training session.

The training basically covers crime prevention, how to deal with the victims and their families and legalities concerning the different crimes. Methods of coping with traumatic events and how to handle sexually abused children will also be covered.

The VSC also offers internship placements for sociology or psychology majors. This would involve more in-depth involvement such as courtroom accompaniment, assisting with hospital calls and polygraph testing.

Anyone interested should call the Center at (215) 277-0932. Prospective volunteers will be sent an informative packet which includes an application. Office hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Nancy Adamec, counseling coordinator at BSC stated that everyone on the staff has various degrees, whether medical or, psychological, and all are health-related. When asked why she became involved in the VSC, Adamec responded that she was interested in a career with a "human services focus."

Adamec also added that the main thrust of the center is "help people to rally their coping skills that they already have."

Burning the midnight oil may be necessary.

Burning the 2:00 or 3:00 or 4:00 AM oil is absurd.

Especially when an HP calculator can get the answers you want—in time to get a good night's sleep.

For instance, our HP-15C Professional Scientific Calculator has more built-in advanced math and statistical power than any other calculator. Our HP-41 Advanced Scientific Calculators have even more potential.

That's because there are better than 2500 software packages available for them—more than for any other calculator.

There's even a special plug-in software package (we call it the Advantage Module) that's designed to handle the specific problems an engineering student has to solve in his, or her, course work.

No wonder professionals in engineering and the physical sciences widely regard HP calculators as the best you can get.

So check one out. Then, when your mother calls to ask if you're getting enough sleep, you won't have to lie.

president, went from academic probation to honor roll in high school after her vision was treated.

It has also recently been discovered that 90 percent of juvenile delinquents have vision problems. In a 21-month study involving 914 delinquents, there were amazing results after special lenses and optometric vision training were given. The reading level of the group improved three and one-half grade levels and the figures for re-arrest decreased by approximately 45 percent.

Psychiatrists are beginning to realize the importance of behavioral optometry. One psychiatrist, Dr. Frederick Flack, was unable to cure his schizophrenic daughter, but within six months of seeing a behaviorial optometrist she was leading a normal life. According to Dawkins, her vision problem literally "drove her bananas."

There are many symptoms of a vision imbalance and they vary from patient to patient. Some symptoms include: excessive blinking or rubbing of eyes; short attention span for the child's age; headaches, nausea, or dizziness; and poor eye-hand coordination.

The Suddenly Successful Student has gotten excellent reviews across the country. It is being considered for translation in six languages by the European Optometric Association.

Dawkins is very happy with the success of her book and hopes the general population will buy it and find it helpful. "I wrote the book for the mothers and parents like myself who needed this type of help. I'm glad the optometrists are enthusiastic, but I want to reach the general public," she said.

By MARK V. DISTASIO

Welcome back! This year Insignifica will bring to you a medley of intriguing historical happenings, and a potpourri of predictions and prognostications.

For example, did you know that the "Star Spangled Banner's" melody came from a 1777 English drinking song, which was sung in taverns to extol the virtues of King George III? Or how in 1560, the French astrologer Nostradamus predicted that a colossal earthquake would rock California on May 10, 1988!

If you are a history buff, or just interested in unusual and exotic trivia, look for Insignifica each week. Oh by the way, cancel that May trip to Disneyland.

Library atmosphere enhanced

By FRANK DUNNE

Remember the library questionnaire that was distributed last February? Believe it or not, 1,568 students took the time to answer it, and as a result, there have been some impressive changes in our favorite place to study and rap.

For example, there is now a pencil sharpener on each and every floor. That beats using your girlfriend's eyeliner sharpener for your pencils.

Consider this change for all you conformists. Two new copiers that accept credit cards have been installed, and three of the coin-operated copiers now accept credit cards.

Also, a change and credit card dispenser was installed. No, it does not dispense Visa or Master Card.

Down by the reserve room, you will find typewriters and a coin-operated word processor. If you have a lot of change.

At the circulation counter, there are brochures that explain all of the services provided by the library. That is for those of you who are afraid to ask someone for help. A display rack that will hold other library information has been ordered, along with additional dictionaries.

Then, there is the noise problem. I know what you are thinking. A lot of us go to Falvey to sit and rap with friends. However, this is not the general purpose of a library.

From the library's standpoint, and from the standpoint of those unfortunate souls who must study to make it through college, noise is a problem. Anyway, the staff is considering designating one floor as a quiet area.

As for the ongoing debate as to whether Falvey should be used as a sauna or a walk-in freezer, the library's administration is continuing to look into this problem. The library reports this condition to Maintenance regularly. That means we will be lucky if anything is done about it before Villanova's football team wins the Sugar Bowl. In the meantime, bring a towel or a parka, whichever applies.

Villanova's Falvey Memorial Library has undergone improvements, some of which were suggested by students in a survey conducted last semester.

Communication students improve career choices

By STACEY WILKINS

A new club has come to Villanova's campus this fall. Women in Communications Inc, commonly known as WICI, is one of the nation's oldest and largest professional communications organizations.

Founded in 1909 as Theta Sigma Phi at the University of Washington, the organization unites more than 12,000 women and men from all fields of communications.

The groundwork was laid last spring by journalism professor June Lytel and graduating communication arts senior Margie Gike. Both thought the time was ripe to bring a professional communication organization to Villanova.

WICI gives students a chance to be a part of not only a campus organization, but also a professional communications chapter after graduation. Further, WICI provides students with a chance to make contacts in the business world and to receive counseling on career choices from chapter advisors.

By establishing a chapter on campus, it is hoped that students can be assisted in the confusing career process. WICI attempts to open career doors early, and make the job task seem less ominous.

WICI is not all business, however. Some exciting plans are in store for future members. The agenda includes guest speakers from area public relations firms and television and radio stations, a tour of KYW in Philadelphia and attendance at a local talk show.

The meetings will serve as a support group to offer everyone a chance to get together and share in the common experience of what it means to be a communication arts major in today's growing communications industry.

Communications is a broad and growing field with a whole host of job opportunities. The WICI directory lists notable figures in a variety of careers, such as Diane Allen, anchor and reporter from KYW-TV, and a director of public relations in corporate communications. All the exciting and interesting possibilities in communications are there, and the time is ripe for Villanova to establish a chapter.

Communication arts is the largest major within the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and is still growing. The eligibility requirements for WICI are as follows: the student should be working toward a degree, demonstrating a commitment to a career in communications, have an above-average GPA and pay the $30 entry fee.

The first meeting will be Sept. 24 at 8:30 p.m. in the Bryn Mawr Room. All interested people should come out for this introductory meeting.

As a Marine Officer, you could be in charge of a Mach 2 + F/A-18A, a vertical take-off Harrier or one of our other jets or helicopters. And you could do it by the time you're 23. But it takes a special commitment on your part. We demand leaders at all levels. We teach you to be one. If you're a freshman, sophomore, or junior, ask about our Platoon Leaders Class program. If you're a senior, check out our Officer Candidate Class programs. Starting salaries are from $18,000 to $24,000. And you can count on going farther . . . faster.
Go farther... faster.
We're looking for a few good men.

Welcome back my friends. . .

After many months of time spent in composition and rehearsal, ELP has returned from retirement with a new "P," drummer Cozy Powell.

. . .to the show that never ends

By JOE McGOWAN

The local sextet Bricklin opened the final performance of the Mann Music Center's 1986 season. Bricklin's set consisted in five songs with particular emphasis on the drum and keyboard elements which, despite such banal titles as "Need Your Love" and "Even When You're Done With Me," were fresh, energetic and performed with great competence. Bricklin had by their third song, the instrumental "The Wave," begun to endear themselves with an audience impatient for the arrival of the new ELP on stage.

Bricklin finished their brief set with a song oddly suited for the evening — the Beatles' "I Am the Walrus." Theirs was a strong version of the "Walrus" and their performance at the Mann is perhaps a sign that Bricklin will soon be sharing in some of the glory presently being reaped by the Hooters, the local success story in the music business. And Bricklin are not undeserving of such success.

An ELP of a different form opened their set with "The Score" and "Learning to Fly," the first two tracks from the album Emerson, Lake, and Powell. Emerson is every bit as dexterous on the keyboards and Lake's voice still surges above the music — what is different this time is the "P" of ELP. Carl Palmer has opted to remain with the Asia outfit and so in early 1985 Emerson and Lake, then in the process of writing new material, sought a suitable replacement. And so Powell was recruited.

Ex-Jeff Beck Group, ex-Rainbow, ex-Michael Schenker Group, ex-Whitesnake drummer, Cozy Powell has a career both long and remarkable. European fans especially remember Powell for the drumming that powered the Rainbow albums Rainbow Rising and On Stage and the MSG releases MSG II and One Night At Budokan.

While Carl Palmer is a drummer noted for his finesse, Powell is distinguished by the power of his playing. And since ELP is traditionally known for its aural pyrotechnics, Powell is in his element. The live renditions of Tarkus, Pictures at an Exhibition, "Knife-Edge" and "Fanfare for the Common Man" have all been redefined by Powell into new, thunderous versions.

While at times in the course of the show Powell, by virtue of sheer volume, was the focus of attention, keyboardist Keith Emerson nevertheless exhibited his prowess at the keys during the performance of "Knife-Edge," his version of Copland's "Fanfare for the Common Man," and an encore medley combining "Karn Evil 9," the West Side Story theme, and J.S. Bach's Toccata and Fugue in d Minor.

Greg Lake had his turn in the spotlight with "Still . . . You Turn Me On," "From the Beginning," and "Lucky Man." The trio closed their set with the instrumental selection from the Emerson, Lake, and Powell album, the most devastating they have done to date in either of their manifestations — their version of "Mars, the Bringer of War," the first of Gustav Holst's Planets.

While earlier in their set the trio had performed the powerful "Great Gate to Kiev," the finale to Mussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition, "Mars, the Bringer of War" was all the more powerful as the three finished their set with an ending as impressive as any that can be found.

ELP have long been maligned by those rock critics with a strong prejudice against the group's borrowings from classical music. They have been called pompous and overblown by those with little knowledge of an appreciation for the tradition they draw inspiration from. But, fortunately, these critics possess only the power of persuasion, not of censorship, for to ascribe to ELP's Friday performance any other epithet besides "spectacular" would be unthinkable.

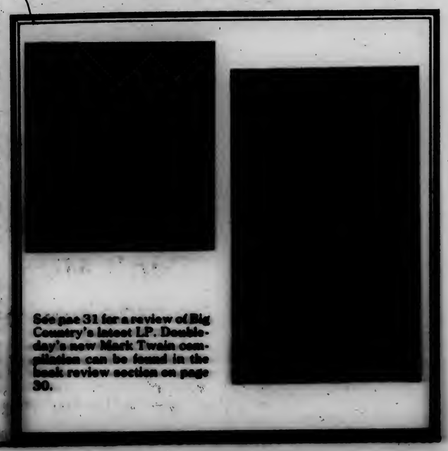
Taste the Old South at Orleans

By MEGAN GUIDERA

If you are tired of the crowded and impersonal atmosphere of Kelly's and the 40-minute wait at Gullifty's, why not try something new?

Orleans Restaurant and Mardi Gras Cabaret is becoming an increasingly popular hot spot on the Main Line. Orleans, located on Lancaster Avenue in Paoli, offers a taste of the Old South with its spicy Cajun cooking. Aside from an ordinary menu, Orleans offers a variety of specialties: Blackened Red Fish, Jambalaya, Shrimp Scampi Cajun Style, Creole Meatballs and many other spicy delights within a reasonable price range.

Orleans' atmosphere accommodates the needs of a variety of people. If you are having a romantic dinner for two, Orleans' candlelit patio or cozy corner booths provide just what you are looking for. However, for the over 21 crowd, Orleans' Cabaret has live dance bands and DJs every Friday and Saturday night. Thursday night is Comedy Night in the cabaret with a sampling of Philadelphia's best comedians. For the more mellow crowd, Orleans' glass enclosed Greenhouse Bar provides live music every Friday and Saturday night after 9:30 p.m. Orleans' outdoor patio bar is the finishing touch with its serene starlit atmosphere.



Orleans' Sunday Brunch puts the Pit and the Spit to shame. For only $8.95 one is offered 14 different buffet items ranging from Scrambled Eggs, Stuffed French Toast, Eggs Benedict, Sausage and Bacon to Beef Stroganoff, Orange Brandied Chicken, Fresh Fish and Blueberry Muffins.

What makes Orleans' food so different is its Cajun cooking. Cajun food is usually described as hot and spicy. An example of this is one of the house specialties, Jambalaya. Jambalaya is Cajun for garbage; however, Jambalaya has quite the opposite taste. It is a tasty combination of ham, chicken and shrimp served on a bed of rice. Another specialty is Blackened Red Fish. The red fish is blackened in a skillet and served with rice.

Not only does Orleans have food specialties from the South, but they also offer special drinks from the South, for the over 21 crowd. A Scarlet O'Hara combines Southern Comfort, cranberry juice and soda water. A Mason-Dixon Cocktail, made up of Southern Comfort, pineapple juice, orange juice and Cream de Almond, is cleverly served in a mason jar. Orleans' Planters Punch is a tasty mixture of three rums and three fruit juices. Other special drinks are: Lynchburgh Lemonade, Wet and Wild Purple Judy, Mellon Coladas, their own blend of wine coolers and much more.

Besides the excellent food and the pleasant atmosphere, Orleans has excellent service. Their young and friendly servers and bartenders make you feel welcome. The majority of the employees are in their 20s, providing a stimulating atmosphere. The service is quick and efficient.

If you are in the mood for going some place different, with good food, good entertainment and lots of stimulation, why not try Orleans Restaurant and Mardi Gras Cabaret. It is located between the Daylesford and Paoli train stations on 1676 Lancaster Avenue in Paoli.

Friendly Floppies....

By RUSS CECCOLA

This week we're going to look at some recent releases from Epyx, the California-based software company that has been around throughout most of the computer game boom. Epyx has brought the industry into a new era with such classics as Summer Games, The Temple of Apshai and Hellfire Warrior. Now, Epyx is perfecting their software dramatically, with better graphics and the best themes and purposes for both games and utilities. The next four programs are Epyx's latest available products — the rest are all classics worth buying.

WORLD KARATE CHAMPIONSHIP

Definitely this week's hit, WKC is the simplest karate game to learn as well as having the best background scenes. The object in WKC is simple — defeat your opponent in red uniform before the time period runs out. You knock him out by executing one of 14 karate moves on the opponent.

Depending on the severity of the attack, you may receive either one point or half a point for your move. Whoever reaches two points first or has more points at the end of 30 seconds wins the round. Three rounds allow movement to the next screen. There are eight background screens, from Egypt to Australia, as well as bonus rounds between each scene for the winner.

Although most karate games are difficult to use, WKC is simple, only requiring a little practice to feel out the moves. Realistic background music and sound effects put the icing on the cake. WKC is an excellent combat game, true to the past work of Epyx.

Most motorcycle games are boring and offer no real differences except in the background graphics — and even they repeat. Super Cycle is definitely the best motorcycle game since Hang On from Sega hit the arcades. The scenes in this game are seemingly endless. While testing, I played for 15 minutes, obtaining a new course every minute or so, from a thunderstorm to Mount Rushmore. Not only do the scenes change, but the road itself adds new obstacles in the form of roadblocks, potholes, bumps, oil slicks and water.

Playing Super Cycle is very easy. There are only two things that you can do: steer left or right and accelerate/decelerate. The best situation is to keep at a high speed on the inside lane of the course — which depends on when it curves — and avoid the oncoming cycles you race against quickly. If racing and beautiful scenery is what you want, then Super Cycle from Epyx is what you need.

VORPAL UTILITY KIT

A product made only for the Commodore 64/128 for now, Vorpal Utility Kit is just that — a utility disk based on the Epyx Vorpal fast load file format. Epyx recently designed Vorpal to save its consumers a lot of time in loading programs. It changes existing BASIC programs or new ones into Vorpal type programs that contain instructions that allow faster loading. There are program files, sequential files, random files, user files and now Vorpal files for the computer enthusiast.

The Vorpal Utility Kit contains everything you need to work with Vorpal files, from performing all of the normal disk functions on them to change existing BASIC programs into Vorpal programs. Also included on the disk are a Commodore 1541/1571 Disk Drive Alignment/Speed Check option that allows simple and fast head alignment of your possibly unaligned drive. A rating is given to your drive based on its speed. Vorpal Utility Kit did make all BASIC programs load in seconds, but my question is this: couldn't Epyx have put this amazing feature together with other utility options and make a larger command choice list? As far as the programs on this disk are concerned — they work fine, but maybe a few more options would have made Vorpal Utility Kit a hit.

PROGRAMMERS' BASIC TOOLKIT

Programmer's Basic Toolkit ●●●●

For all those programmers on the Commodore 64 who find creating a game and graphics difficult, this program's for you. Toolkit is the best enhancement program for the Commodore 64 since GEOS. Toolkit loads in many many, commands for the programmer's use to be understood and performed just like other BASIC statements. Everything from drawing a box with ease to creating a sprite is simpler on the 64 with this disk in hand.

Similar to BASIC 7.0 for the Commodore 128, Toolkit installs the commands into memory via a machine language program that is installed at a certain location. Using the features is as easy as putting the statements into your BASIC programs, bringing the graphics and ease of the 128 down to the 64 with simplicity. If you are an avid programmer, get Toolkit to make your games and pictures more complex while taking less time to design them.

Epyx has many more classics that are out there and worth buying. The best are Temple of Apshai Trilogy, Summer Games, Summer Games II, Winter Games, and three from Lucasfilm Games: The Eidolon, Koronis Rift and Rescue on Fractalus. Apshai is simply the first good adventure D&D-type game for home computers to ever come out.

Released in a new format with all three expansion modules intact on one disk, it still remains the simplest adventure to play. The "games" series are the best sports simulation games, allowing the player to compete in Olympic games in a realistic form. Controls are simple and visuals excellent. The last three are all created with fractal graphics, a system in which the scenery is never the same. The Lucasfilm games are all unusual programs, yet deserve attention. So pick any of the above seven and buy them.

THE MOVIE MONSTER GAME

Look for Epyx's latest release, The Movie Monster Game in which you can be Godzilla and choose the city you want to destroy!

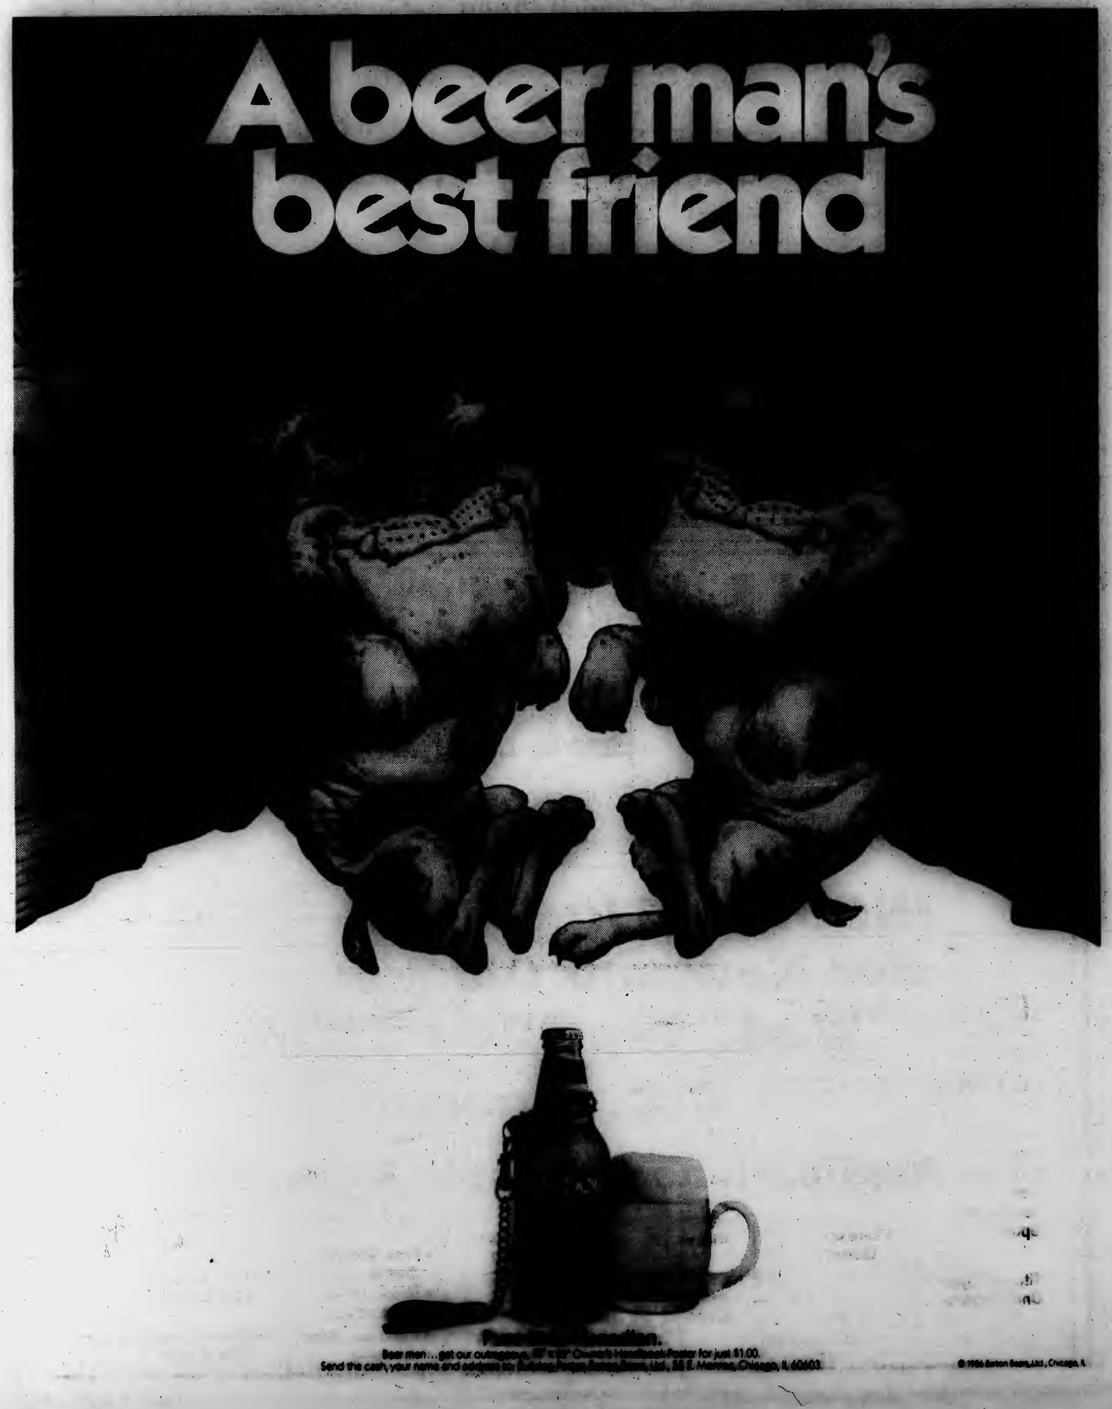
Guide to AC casinos despite the strike

By PHIL KOUSOUBRIS

Even though all of Atlantic City's casino workers have gone on strike this week, there are still plenty open for Villanova students, an opportunity you shouldn't miss. Atlantic City is only one-and-a-half hours away from V.U., by way of the Schuylkill Expressway (Camden exit and Ben Franklin Bridge). There are so many signs directing you there that even the dullest tourist can find it.



Once there — you will know by the skyline — you have a choice of eight or nine casinos from which to choose. Always drive right up to the hotel lobby to park; it makes you look important and worldly. My favorite casinos are The Golden Nugget, Atlantis, and Bally Park Place. There's always the Sands and Caesar's for the big spenders.

Inside the casino you should remember several things: dress smartly, be vivacious, and don't look out of place. Even if you are under 21, there is a good chance you can get in. Most casinos, like the Tropicana and the Nugget, have multiple entrances. Walk in confidently, and start pumping the slots, trying not to jostle the senior citizens. As this reviewer was at the Tropicana though, I must add that you should not wander around, or you will be quickly, but politely, thrown out (as my friends discovered).

The Golden Nugget never cards, and the Atlantis doesn't have to. If your specialty is Baccarat or Blackjack, prepare to lose money the first couple of hands. The house is always, initially, stacked against your favor.

Slots are, if the most popular, the hardest at which to win. This reviewer won a small jackpot, but that was talent (and some luck). Most casinos also have numerous bars, clubs and restaurants. The Trop has a deli, a nightclub and several restaurants. Most casinos are open all night, and offer many diversions. Atlantic City comes highly recommended by this reviewer as a great weekend diversion.

Joel returns with powerhouse

By KEVIN HECHT

The Bridge
Billy Joel
Columbia Records

Billy Joel is not a man set upon complacency. The Long Island musician has always been committed to making each album different from the one before, and his latest effort, The Bridge, produced by Phil Ramone on Columbia Records is a positive and diverse compilation of songs that carry on this tradition and showcase Billy Joel at his best.

The Bridge is a far cry from the light bubble gum pop Joel put forth in his last release, An Innocent Man in 1983. It is a well-crafted album, rich with diversity, containing music that ranges from emotional ballads, to funky jazz, to hard-nosed rock and roll. The album opens with a chiming breakneck piano introduction that explodes into "Running On Ice," a fast paced chronicle of the stress of urban living. With this song, Joel jumps full force into an album that reveals a greatly matured artist who seems more confident than ever.

After "Running On Ice," the album quickly shifts gears with "This is the Time," a moody and unusually introspective song for Joel that reveals a deep and passionate, yet complex man capable of a multitude of feelings, and his uncanny ability to express them through music. The song seems to be a reflection upon his recent marriage to Christie Brinkly, the birth of his daughter, and a realization of how quickly time slips away. ("This is the time to remember, 'cause it will not last forever, these are the days to hold on to, but we won't although we'll want to.") "This is the Time," along with the haunting "Temptation" on side two, are moving songs that live up to many of the fine ballads that Joel has put forth in the past.

Because of the lighthearted nature of An Innocent Man, many fans were left wondering if Joel's Glass House rock and roll days were over, but the hard driving single "Matter of Trust," one of the album's best songs, shows that Joel can still crank out hard-nosed, nitty gritty, sing-your-heart-out-rock-and-roll with the best of them. Its forceful and repetitive drum beat along with resounding electric guitar accent an emotional Joel singing this song, which is sure to become a classic in live performance.

"Matter of Trust" stands out as a great song on the album, but the highlight of this record is clearly a cut co-written with Cyndi Lauper called "Code of Silence." This song is important in two ways. One, it marks the first time that Joel has ever co-written a song with anyone, and two, it's an intense, original tune that can be compared to any of Joel's finest. The interesting use of harmonica, as well as electric and acoustic 12-string guitars provide an unusual and impressive background as Joel builds up a tension-filled crescendo about the painfully repressed feelings of a broken relationship.

He then lets loose in a climactic chorus with Lauper's powerful voice echoing in the background, and an impassioned Joel questions how "It's hard to believe after all these years, that it still gives you pain and it still brings the tears, and you feel like a fool, because in spite of your rules you've got a memory, but you can't talk about it, because you're following a code of silence..." This song is a gem, and its powerful emotion shows that Billy Joel has recaptured and refined the rough-edged hard driving sound present in previous songs such as "Big Shot" and "You May Be Right."

The Bridge is an important album for Billy Joel because it contains a wider diversity of musical styles than many of his past projects. The album contains traditional rock songs and ballads, but it also shows off a new side of Joel with "Big Man on Mulberry Street." This jazz oriented song is highlighted by a piercing horn section and the clever use of acoustic bass. Another example is "Baby Grand," a simple blues song in which Joel is accompanied by Ray Charles, one of his boyhood idols. These songs are examples of Joel's unwillingness to become complacent, and shine a light on his vast range of musical knowledge and ability.

Steve Winwood lends his talent to the album by playing organ on "Getting Closer," an upbeat tune in which Joel puts his rocky past in perspective, and focuses on contractual problems that took place early in his career and that still haunt him today. Joel sings that although he has made a lot of mistakes, he's learned from them, and has become a better man because of it. ("Though I've lost quite a lot I am still in control, they can keep what they've got but they can't have my soul, and if I don't have this all worked out, still I'm getting closer...")

A lot of the credit for the album's great sound belongs to Joel's long time friend and producer, Phil Ramone, as well as his band, which consists of David Brown and Russell Javors on guitar, Liberty DeVitto on drums and Doug Stegmeyer on bass. The Bridge is one of Billy Joel's finest efforts in years. His commitment to original music on every new album is refreshing in a business where it is all too easy to rest on one's laurels. The album shows that although Billy Joel has crossed over to a new stage in his life, he will continue to produce the same quality music that has always marked his career in the past.

Farrah fights back again

By THERESA JONES

Summer vacation is over, fellow students; no more "Club Paradise," because it's "Back to School." You may feel as though your classes are filled with "Aliens," people with whom you have "Nothing in Common." Worse yet, they are probably taught by "Ruthless People." I understand, and would not be surprised if you are already looking for a "Day Off" (as in "Ferris Beuller's"). But at this point I think that would be going to "Extremities," and in this case that may not be such a "Great Escape."

I should become a bit more serious here, for the film "Extremities," as the name implies, is not really a film to be taken lightly. The subject matter and presentation are much more solemn, resulting in possibly one of the summer's grimmest movies.

Knowing "Extremities" was another picture dealing with sexual violence, when I decided to view it I was more interested in Farrah Fawcett's performance than in the story itself. "Charlie's Angels" is a far cry from William Mastrosimone's screenplay, an adaption of his off-Broadway play. As Marjorie, Fawcett gave a strong performance, reminiscent of her television movie "The Burning Bed," in which she portrayed a battered wife who was driven to the limit.

"Extremities" was well done, resulting in a rather thought-provoking presentation of the situation. The emphasis was on mental struggle, rather than the sexual assault, which never actually progressed beyond what would be charged as attempted rape. Early in the movie, Marjorie managed to escape the first attack, though she knew Joe had her wallet and could find her at home. Getting no help from the police, she lived in fear, constantly suspicious and apprehensive that the attacker would return. He did.

Again, more mental abuse took place than physical, for Marjorie was a fighter, and was able to turn the tables and put the would-be rapist on the defensive. But since the rape never actually occurred, nothing could be provided, and Joe let her know that he would probably get off, and he would be back again. Faced with this fact, Marjorie had to decide what to do next. One of her housemates returned to find her digging a grave.

Further mind games and mental manipulation took place until the third housemate returned. Marjorie, somewhat more rational now, used Joe's own wily ways to force a confession, and "Extremities" ended on a sigh of relief.

I have to say the movie was technically good — even the music was complementary to the scenes and action. While Farrah Fawcett again proved she does indeed have acting ability, less can be said of her supporting cast, though James Russo managed to exude an appropriate amount of loathsomeness as a sexual assailant.

Despite the fact that I feel the quality of the film would deem it worthwhile, I cannot say that I would really recommend it. I guess I prefer things a little lighter when I am looking for entertainment, and this type of film seems to have been all too frequent lately.

I do look forward to Farrah Fawcett's next endeavor, although she now has to break from another image. Just as "Charlie's Angels" gave her the talentless but glamorous reputation, "The Burning Bed" and "Extremities" may be trying a bit too hard to lose the old image. Maybe next time a happy medium will be found.

Johnsons emerge from Philly

By KATHLEEN FINLEY

Break Tomorrow's Day
The Johnsons
Restless Records

Out of the Philadelphia club scene emerges a rootsy rock-n-roll band heading for success with lyrical twists to boot. The Johnsons are outgrowing the Philadelphia borders with their debut album, Break Tomorrow's Day, a college radio gem.

Insightful lyrics and scaling melodies of the southern neo-psychedelia movement combine to form this fresh burst of musical energy from the depths of West Philly. Armed with strong Velvet Underground influences, The Johnsons create a well-produced debut album which is hinting of Mitch Easter's musical genius. Although the album is not produced by Easter, it owes much of its brilliance to producers, John Wicks and Glenn Morrow.

Side one begins with "Open Door," a bitter melody about a misunderstanding in a relationship. The whole genre of southern rock is evident in this first track since it is reminiscent of R.E.M.'s melodic guitar, complemented by a strong beat. That same driving beat supports the '60s pop style of "Burning Desire." The Johnsons display their musical dexterity with Adam Miller's mesmerizing vocals and the execution of the band's control.

The first side winds down to a slow southern drawl, with "Call Your Name," much like R.E.M.'s "Good Advices." Guitarist Mike Morrison forms creative chords similar to those of Peter Buck. The edging guitar strings along the entire ballad while Miller mourns the loss of a loved one.

Beginning and ending on the same raw guitar note of Billy Bragg's "The Milkmen of Human Kindness," "Sylvia Plath" (written by Pere Ubu's Peter Laughner) is a cutting rendition of Plath's depressing state of existence. With lyrics such as: "Sylvia Plath ain't into Manhattan/ She could crawl out of one cocoon where there was absolutely nothing happening," this melody weighs down the first side with somber impressions.

Side two jumps into the Beatlesque pop beats of "Hard To Find" and "Different Sun." Both are crowd-pleasers and are sure to set the listener's foot a-tapping. "Love You So" is the album's gem with its layered rhythm guitars and ringing harmonies contributing to an over all well-produced sound.

"Break Tomorrow's Day," the album's title track, combines a throbbing beat with a consistent bass line to create a polished melody. One almost forgets that they are a Philly band when the synchronized backing vocals blend with the R.E.M.-like guitar.

The Johnson's post-pop throng stands out against the white wall of Philadelphia's local music. Just one of the many neo-psychedelia bands that has recently formed, The Johnsons will stray from the trend and head for a competitive spot on today's college charts.

The Johnsons, a local band, are leaving the Philadelphia area and expanding outward. Their influence include the Beatles, R.E.M. and the Velvet Underground.

Tolkien and Twain in print

"A literary sampler" is how Doubleday & Company describe Mark Twain At His Best, a compendium of Twain's works edited by Charles Neider. Twain At His Best is the latest in Doubleday's Collector's Library of Mark Twain Classics, and this the latest volume draws select essays, speeches, sketches and letters, as well as passages from his travel books and novels.

Twain At His Best is more a volume one would send as a gift than use for serious study, but Doubleday has made available this interesting collection in a relatively inexpensive hardcover edition.

The History of Middle-Earth is a collection of works that merits serious attention from fans of J.R.R. Tolkien. This four volume series, under the editorship of the author's son Christopher, at times requires a serious reading effort. The first two volumes of the series, The Book of Lost Tales I and II, presented for the first time the original tale (even before the material compiled for The Silmarillion) that Tolkien would develop into The Hobbit and The Lord of the Rings. Tolkien's original narrative framework had his lore recounted by the seafarer Eriol, in one recension he is called AElfwine, an ancient mariner who alights at the enchanted isle of Tol Eressea.

It is here that Eriol learns of the annals of Middle-Earth, as he sits among elves gathered round the tale-fire for the retelling of tales now lost. The first two volumes in this series of Tolkien papers are now available in softcover editions and the third in hardcover.

The Lays of Beleriand is the third in the series and the first collection of verse works. This volume presents early versions of two of Tolkien's best lays, "The Lay of the Children of Hurin" and "The Lay of Leithian" (and includes a commentary on the latter lay by C.S. Lewis, a friend of Tolkien at Oxford). Like the first two volumes, The Lays of Beleriand is richly annotated by Christopher Tolkien, whose endeavor at times required exercises in textual criticism.

Christopher Tolkien has in his commentaries provide copious notes on the evolution and derivation of Middle-Earth names and places, as well as conjectures on textual corruptions. Thus in this volume of Tolkien poetry one is presented with two versions of "The Lay of the Children of Hurin," in an attempt to exhibit the work in progress.

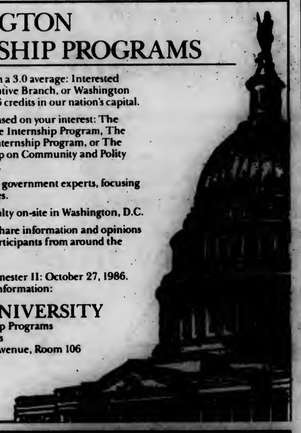
The most striking characteristic of Tolkien's early Middle-Earth tales and lays is the language — it is one filled with archaisms and whose syntax is remote from that of Modern English. Tolkien employed his knowledge of Anglo-Saxon and Celtic culture (he was outside of Middle-Earth a professor of Anglo-Saxon at Oxford) to create a body of literature for the period antedating the earliest examples of Britannic literature surviving today.

The History of Middle-Earth will soon be completed with the Ambarkanta ("The Shape of the World"), a Middle-Earth cosmological account. This last volume will also contain one particularly interesting selection, a translation from Quenya (Elvish) into Anglo-Saxon of the Quenta and Annals by AElfwine of England (the Eriol that travelled to the lonely elven isle).

Also in the realm of the fantastic is Manuel Mujica Lainez's The Wandering Unicorn, a medieval tapestry weaving together elements of fact and fiction from the history of the House of Lusignan. The Wandering Unicorn begins on a twelfth century evening at vespers and later brings the reader to the ailing Crusader kingdom of Jerusalem under the sickly reign of Baldwin IV, the Leper-King.

Lainez's romance operates in the two spheres of the medieval world — the temporal and the spiritual. In the temporal world the reader follows the travails of Aiol of Lusignan, a "natural" son of that noble house, as he rises from an actor in a mystery play troupe to a knight in the service of the Holy Crown of Jerusalem.

In the spiritual world the reader visits the faith and superstitions of the medieval populace, in an age when the woodlands glowed with sprites and wells harbored water spirits. The chief character of the Argentinian author's aethereal realm is Melusine, a fairy smitten with a love for Aiol — though he lives on another plane.



The Wandering Unicorn, a novel so rich in detail, is best described by Lainez's fellow Argentine and author, Jorge Luis Borges: "The novel, as we know, descends from the epic and we would do well occasionally to recall those mighty origins. The Wandering Unicorn is not a reconstruction of time past; it is like a glowing dream set in the past. We neither feel the burden of archaeology nor hear the music of nostalgia, but live out the tale as though it were our own."

Last June Jorge Luis Borges passees away in the eighty-seventh year of his life, and the world lost a man hailed as probably the greatest Argentinian author ever. Borges spent the latter third of his life in darkness, but from a blindness that could not affect his insight.

His great short fictions, ficciones, were noted for their extreme erudition and mystical quality. His were masked fictions, ones which defied the reader to unravel a path out of the author's labyrinths. "Tlon, Uqbar, Orbis Tertius," "Three Versions of Judas," "The Library of Babel" and many other ficciones erected verbal labyrinths in which lurked archaic references, logic puzzles and paradoxes.

Borges was a perennial candidate for the Nobel Prize in Literature, an honor which was, however, never granted him. He was esteemed in his native land especially for his poetry, such as his retelling of such Argentinian folk myths as that of Martin Fierro. Literary references obscure and diverse, whether from an essay by DeQuincey, the Gnostic Gospel of Basilides, or the annals of some heresiarch, were Borges' trademark. There now stands a literary void where once stood Borges.

Big Country hits mainstream

By JIM WENTZEL

One of the primary sentiments that must have been building during the two-year wait before the release of Big Country's new album, The Seer, was an eager curiousity as to what this Scottish foursome could produce for its all-important third LP.

After the release of their first album, The Crossing, the music industry had naturally marked them as a Great White Hope in the pop medium. Coming on the heels of the disappointing Steeltown LP, The Seer more than restores faith in the power and potential that this band owns.

Scotland's biggest band, Big Country, has resurfaced with their latest opus, The Seer.

Starting off with the current single, "Look Away," the album is missing a principle element of the first LP's — the bagpipe guitar. Something of a novelty at first, the sound began to wear thin and the band has had the good sense to change this approach.

The majority of the tracks appear to have a fascination with storytelling and a moody ambiance: an element embodied in lines such as: "I never tire of legends grown/ We dream too much and time has flown."

If the album has one weakness, it lies in the area of lyrics. The band frequently gets caught up in the spokes of its own poetry in lines like: "Time will wear a mountain down/ And make a lover of the clown/ Who laughed too long." Fortunately, all the songs keep a quick pace, which makes this album quite entertaining.

Musically, Big Country has upgraded its production, allowing them to expand on its originally "big" sound. On tracks such as "Remembrance Day" and on the title track, the band shows off its keen but modest musicianship.

In short, what makes this band special is that it has taken the tedious power-popping of concurrent bands and made it all interesting again. This band knows that "bigger" is not always better, and that a good hook is always useful, especially in feature songs such as "Look Away." If this collection of songs is any statement of that purpose, what is in their future may well be worth the wait.

Angus and the Aussies return to Philly

By CAESAR ETTORE

A close-to-full house packed the Spectrum this past week for a night of hard-hitting heavy metal featuring old favorites AC/DC as well as the quickly rising Japanese rockers, Loudness. AC/DC was out to support their latest LP and movie soundtrack Who Made Who while Loudness was out to strengthen their following by promoting their second American release Lightning Strikes.

Loudness opened with what was probably their best known song thus far, "Crazy Nights," with the rest of their relatively short set consisting of material from the Lightning Strikes album. Songs in the set included their most recent single and video "Let It Go" as well as "Dark Desire" and "Ashes In the Sky." The most impressive aspect of the Loudness show, however, had to be the phenomenal guitar playing of Akira Takasaki which had the Spectrum crowd on their feet and cheering in appreciation.

Of course most of the crowd was there to see the always excellent live AC/DC. Playing material from a 10-year plus career, the band mixed new favorites in with some of their older classics such as "Let There Be Rock" and "The Jack."

Using a very simple bi-level stage set with plenty of lighting effects, Angus Young and company launched into their set with the title track of their new LP Who Made Who. Songs such as "Shot Down In Flames" and "Back In Black" followed. However, even with the great showmanship of Angus Young the show basically fell into a rut because it was almost exactly like last year's show..

The energy level picked up to fever pitch towards the end of the show, especially during the enjoyable encores. Contained within the two encores were all of the bands classics including "T.N.T." and "For Those About To Rock (We Salute You)" complete with firing cannons. This put an end to a mostly enjoyable concert.

Hopefully on AC/DC's next tour they will change their show around a little more and make it less predictable to their loyal following of fans.

Last Monday the Spectrum was filled with Japanese metalheads and Angus in his knickers when AC/DC and Loudness came to Philly, the former in support of their successful Fly On The Wall.

Walsh takes fourth

By STEVE SHMUKLER

Despite a predawn wakeup call last Friday, Villanova's golf team finished a strong eighth in a field of 29 at the West Point Invitational Golf Tournament, edging out Big East rivals Providence, St. John's and Boston College.

Senior Paul (Chet) Walsh, following a strong summer season in which he placed second among amateurs in the Pennsylvania Open, finished fourth in the individual scoring with a three-day total of 220.

"Chet had a great summer. He is capable of being a big time player," Coach Don Ficco said.

Jim Clarke, a freshman transfer from Vanderbilt, also performed remarkably well, only nine strokes behind Walsh.

Chris Cappello (237), Dave Rush (239) and Jim Duffy (240) contributed to Villanova's strong team showing.

"It is a good start for the team considering our youth and the fact that we beat all four Big East teams in the tournament," Coach Ficco commented on his team's performance.

Villanova, which is hoping to defend its Big East tournament title at Georgetown in October, will travel to the Norstar Bank Classic in Rochester, N.Y, on Monday.

Mets clinch NL East

The record of 93-49 stands alone in major league baseball. Its owned by the New York Mets who clinched the National League East title Wednesday by defeating the St. Louis Cardinals. The Mets were swept by the Philadelphia Phillies last weekend to postpone the Mets capturing the title for a couple of days.

Bears beat old coach

It was a confrontation of head coach versus ex-assistant. Mike Ditka and the Chicago Bears squeaked by the Philadelphia Eagles led by Buddy Ryan, 13-10 in overtime Sunday. In a defensive struggle, turnovers proved to be costly for the Eagles and the sixth fumble, on the opening kick-off of the overtime, proved to be fatal.

Quarterbacks hurt

Two starting national football quarterbacks have been placed on injured reserve following injuries occurring in the first two weeks of the NFL season. Joe Montana of the San Francisco 49'ers underwent disk surgery on his back Tuesday and there is the possiblity that the injury may force him to retire. Gary Hogeboom of the Indianapolis Colts suffered a separated shoulder Sunday against the Miami Dolphins. Hogeboom, acquired in the off-season from the Dallas Cowboys, will miss the rest of the season.

The Wildcat volleyballers gained their first two wins of the '86 campaign at this past weekend's Philadelphia Big Five tournament. Against LaSalle, the 'Cats won 15-8, 15-5, 15-12, and beat Temple, 7-15, 15-13, 10-15, 15-4, 15-4. Later in the tourney, Villanova lost to Pennsylvania, 8-15, 15-7, 14-16, 5-15.

Men's soccer falls twice

By DANTE SCALA

The men's soccer team suffered a disappointing week after their initial win over St. Joseph's. The squad was shutout in both of their games, losing 1-0 to LaSalle on Sept. 10 and 2-0 to Rider on Sept. 13.

Their defeats dropped their record to 1-2. After the Rider match, assistant coach Todd Zimmerman stated that the squad was "not playing up to their potential" and that their last match was "not a very good overall effort."

The outstanding reason for the squad's poor performance has been its lack of "cohesive play." Zimmerman said that the players have not been able to put together scoring drives, and have missed scoring opportunities.

He stated that no leader has appeared on the field for the young team, which has four starting freshmen and only one senior, goalkeeper Brendan Quinn.

Also, according to Zimmerman, youth has been a factor in that the players are "still learning to play together and to understand each other's abilities and disabilities." This inexperience has hurt the Wildcats, particularly the offense, which has only scored two goals in three games.

Saturday's match was closer than the score indicated; the game was scoreless until late in the second period, when a Rider player chipped an indirect kick over a wall of Wildcat players towards the goal. Goaltender Brendan Quinn had a hand on the ball, but it got loose from him during the ensuing struggle.

A Rider forward gained control of the ball and took a shot, which went off a Wildcat defender and into the goal. The opposition scored again when a lapse in the midfield defense allowed a pass to reach a Rider forward breaking downfield. The player booted a blazing shot at Brendan Quinn, who managed to block the strong kick; however, the forward gathering in the rebound and shot again for the score.

Zimmerman cited that Rider was a good team, with a talented, experienced defense which the Wildcats had difficulty penetrating. However, he also said that "They [Rider] took advantage of their opportunities, and we didn't take advantage of ours." Indeed, the Wildcats did have 14 shots on goal, compared to 19 for Rider. All in all, the team "never got their game going," stated Zimmerman.

The squad had similar problems against Philadelphia archrival LaSalle on Wednesday night at Villanova Stadium. LaSalle scored the lone goal of the game during "a lack of concentration on defense," according to head coach Chris Brown. An excellent crossing shot gave a LaSalle player an easy header in front of the goal for the score.

The Wildcats had several opportunities, including a shot by freshman forward John Bond which was stopped on a great save by goalie Mark Melvin. Brown cited that the team "played hard and with effort," but once again, "[We] didn't use all of our abilities, and could have played better."

Although the squad's recent play has not been encouraging, there are some positive signs. Veteran goalkeeper Brendan Quinn has played well; he has 23 saves and has only given up three goals in as many games. Other noted players include junior Jeff Collins, who scored the winning goal against St. Joseph's, and sophomore Keith Schuster.

Another key member of the team is freshman prospect John Bond; Coach Jones said that one "could expect him [Bond] to come with a goal anytime — he's that kind of player." Generally, Jones described his squad as an "exciting team," with speed and power.

The squad's next few games will be important ones, as the team tries to right itself; Jones described them as "all tough games." Zimmerman said that the team needs to gain confidence before beginning the Soccer Seven and Big East matches, and summed up the Wildcats' situation: "This year, we have to treat every game like a big game."

D'Ascenzo scores three to shut out Hoyas

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

Villanova's field hockey opened its season Sept. 10 versus a perennially tough Lafayette. The Cats looked good and took the offensive when junior Anita D'Ascenzo scored two quick first-half goals. The Wildcats held the lead with a strong defensive stand and went into the locker room with a 2-0 lead.

Lafayette came out in the second half with fire in their eyes and stormed ahead with three-straight goals. They kept their 3-2 lead until 8:01 left in the game when sophomore Sharon Seiz drew blood, evening up the score at 3. Lafayette, however, took the gleem out of the Wildcat's eyes with a game-winning goal with only 16 seconds remaining.

Nova then went up against archrival Georgetown. Wildcat goalie Sue Ruff had three saves, pushing her total to 15 for the week. Junior Anita D'Ascenzo scored Villanova's first goal off an assist from Melissa Grubb. Sharon Seiz followed suit with a goal of her own. D'Ascenzo, however, wasn't done yet, adding another goal before the end of the half. The Wildcats waltzed into the clubhouse with a 3-0 lead.

There was only one score in the second half and, again, it was D'Ascenzo. Off the assist from Sharon Seiz, D'Ascenzo put the icing on the cake. The 4-0 win brought the Cats to an even record 1-1.

The Wildcats are looking to up their record versus Lehigh this week, before going up against Richmond and Towson tomorrow and Sunday.

both figure to be major offensive weapons for the Cats this coming campaign as well as Dan Fortin, Jed Hoban, Gary Pascoe and Jim Cashman.

On defense, noseguard Ted White, 6-foot-3-inches, 260 pounds, will be a major factor to be dealt with by opposing offenses. White is strong and quick and will have to be double teamed by opponents if they intend to clear him out of the middle. The defensive backfield looks strong with two seniors, cornerback Jay Curcio and safety John McGowan, and sophomores Derek McEwen and Bobby Rosato. McEwen has good speed and played well in the preseason as well as Rosato. Rosato played well last season and is looked at for leadership along with McGowan and Curcio. The only question mark is in the linebackers. Graduation hurt this part of the defense but with game experience at Iona they have the potential to come on strong.

George Winslow is back to handle the punting for Villanova which means that this department is in good hands, or actually good feet. Winslow had a 42.1 yard average, including a longest of 72 yards. Winslow also placed 13 kicks inside the 20 yard line. The place kicking will be done by freshman Paul Colonna.

All in all Villanova will field a highly competitive football team this fall, this year'ssquad should make a run at being undefeated for the second season in a row. Coach Talley's four-year plan into the Yankee Conference seems to be proceeding right on schedule.

Talley previews gridiron battles

By MICHAEL IRONS

Villanova opens its 1986 football schedule today in New Rochelle, N.Y., when the Wildcats take to the field against the Iona Gaels. This season is the second for Nova Head Coach Andy Talley and marks the second year of Talley's four-year rebuilding program. Though last year's undefeated record will be hard to top, the confidence level of the team is high going into today's game.

"We are bigger, faster, stronger and more mature now than we were a year ago. There is a lot more confidence now, since the kids have been learning the system for a year and are getting used to it and are understanding it better," Coach Talley said. Villanova's offensive line has bulked up to an average of 252 pounds and is led by six-foot-two-inch, 270-pound sophomore Paul Beradelli.

"The offensive line is developing into a very fine line and is going to be a major strength for the team," Talley said. "The offense overall is going to be better. The kids are used to the system and are learning how to attack opposing defenses better now." Another thing: the young squad, 33 freshmen and 40 sophomores, is going to have to learn how to play week in and week out.

"Last year we played every other week. This year we are going to be playing every week and our kids are going to have to adjust to that," Talley said.

But that does not look like it will be a major problem. What could, is the lack of depth at certain positions of the Wildcat team. The main worry is at quarterback. "If Kirk [Schulz] should go down with an injury we would have major difficulties overcoming it," said Talley.

Barring any key injuries, the Wildcats promise to be highly competitive and highly entertaining to watch.

"We plan to open up a lot more this season. With so many young players last year, we played more conservative than I like. Now, with the maturity of the team you can expect to see 35-40 passes a game," Talley said. In the scrimmage against Lafayette, which Villanova won 31-14, the Wildcats threw 36 passes in the first half alone.

"We have the ability to win all eight games this season but the key will be the first two games. If we can get off to a good start and win both games, it will build a lot of confidence in the team," Talley said. Those two games, today's against Iona, who are 0-2, and next week against Mercyhurst, a Division III nationally ranked power, are not push-overs.

"Even though Iona is 0-2 they are dangerous just because they will be willing to do anything at any time. They have nothing to lose so we have got to expect anything from Iona," Talley said.

Villanova has a good history for season openers, being 46-39-3 overall and won last year's season opener over Iona 27-7 at Villanova. This year's meeting between the two teams will be the second game between the schools. The Wildcats have not lost a football game in 70 months (five years and 10 months) since Nov. 1, 1980, when Delaware beat Villanova 17-7. Coach Talley has a 5-1-0 record in season openers and a 33-18-1 record as a collegiate head coach.

Iona runs their offense out of a Winged-T and likes to run the ball a lot. In last season's game, Ron Sency had 62 yards on 13 carries and Art Condodina had 71 yards and one touchdown on 16 carries. Sency and Condodina

This week's Saco East Athlete of the Week is junior Ann D'Ascenzo of the field hockey team. A native of Malvern, Pa., D'Ascenzo scored five goals and added an assist during play this past week.

D'Ascenzo scored twice in the Ladycats' opener against Lafayette, with both goals in the first half of play. Unfortunately, her efforts were for naught as Lafayette scored four times in the second. The winning goal was scored with only 16 seconds remaining, and ended Nova's hopes for an opening win.

In the contest against the Georgetown Hoyas, the junior forward had another outstanding game. D'Ascenzo scored three times against the Big East rival, twice on assists from sophomore Sharon Seiz and the other time by senior Melissa Grubb. D'Ascenzo added to her point total by tallying an assist to Seiz in the first half.

D'Ascenzo is the Ladycats' leading scorer at this time.

Women tennis nets two wins

By JOSEPH RUSCAVAGE

The women's tennis team recently opened its season with two victories and a loss. The Ladycats defeated Catholic University and Mount St. Mary's but lost to a talented Georgetown team.

Dr. Bob Langran, the team's coach, said the Ladycats put in a "nice team effort" in winning two of their first three matches. The team has three freshmen among the top six players and Coach Langran believes they played "about as well as they can" as the team recorded its first two wins. He also felt that number 1 player freshman Lynn Slowinski was "impressive" in beating two more experienced upperclasswomen.

The Ladycats first victory was against Catholic University. Catholic did not win a set as the girls shut them out 9-0. The top six of Cheryl Dorward, Stacie Hall, Beth Lemon, Jeanne O'Connor, Lynn Slowinski and Laura Smelas all recorded victories. The doubles teams of Lemon and Smelas, Hall and Janet Lowe, and Jill Morley and O'Connor also won to complete the shutout.

The Ladycats then faced Georgetown on Saturday when they were humbled 9-0. Only one match went past two sets as the girls suffered their first loss. Coach Langran said the Hoyas were just "too good" for his young team to win.

The Ladycats then rebounded with a 9-0 victory over Mount St. Mary's. The team duplicated their earlier victory by winning every set on their way to a second win of the season.

By defeating Mount St. Mary's, the Ladycats showed that they are at least "one game better than last year" as they avenged a loss to Mount St. Mary's last year. With a young squad, Coach Langran hopes to gain victory two hundred in the team's history in their next match and to win many more times this season.

Correction

In last week's sports edition, the positions for tennis coaches Ellen Quinn and Chris Jones were inadvertently reversed.

Dryer causes fire in Corr Hall

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

A small fire, caused by a defective clothes dryer, broke out in the basement laundry room of Corr Hall Sunday night, prompting authorities to evacuate the building and temporarily close the facility.

According to the report filed by Security Officer Roderick Vosburgh, "The general rundownness and deplorable condition of the [laudry] room and the dryers prompted maintenance [after the gas was shut off] to request the room be closed until it is cleaned and repaired."

Corr Hall Resident Assistant Brett Datto was on duty Sunday evening when he was informed that there was a "little fire" in the laundry room. Datto immediately telephoned Security and Residence Life, then went downstairs to investigate.

"When I got downstairs I noticed that the room was filled with smoke, but by this time the fire was out. As a precautionary measure, I evacuated the building and waited for Security and Maintenance to arrive," said Datto.

The Security and Maintenance departments arrived and immediately turned off the gas. The malfunctioning dryer was reportedly very hot and had not turned off when the cycle should have been completed.

A Sullivan Hall resident, freshman Steve Iandoli, smelled smoke as he was nearing Corr Hall to retrieve his clothes from the dryer. Upon entering the laundry room, Iandoli found "three or four security guards taking clothes out of a dryer and stomping on them."

The smoldering clothes belonged to Iandoli. The load of laundry, consisting mainly of towels, socks, shorts and tee-shirts, was rendered unwearable. Iandoli reported, "A few [clothes] were black and crispy. The others were dark yellow and smoky."

Dan Remley, assistant director of Residence Life, was present to assess the damages caused by the fire. Iandoli will be fully reimbursed for his ruined load of

V.U. reacts to Curran case

By SUSAN TOLVE

After his views on sexual ethics were judged unacceptable by the Vatican, the Rev. Charles E. Curran, professor of theology at Catholic University, was notified on Aug. 18, that he would "no longer be suitable or eligible to teach Catholic theology."

This message came in a letter from Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, prefect of the Vatican's Congregation for the Doctrine of Faith, and marks the first time that the Vatican has reached into an American university to remove a professor.

Unlike other Catholic colleges, Catholic University is an official [illegible] by the U.S. bishops. Therefore, the Curran case, however, has implications for all Catholic institutions.

Dr. Roger Van Allen, professor of religious studies at Villanova, was one of the nine past presidents of the Catholic Theological and the College Theology Society who originally drafted and signed a statement in support of Curran.

The statement, which was signed by 750 theologians, pointed out that "very many" theologians dissented from non-infallible positions and asked if they too would be punished.

Van Allen believes that the case is "a clear violation of the principles of academic freedom."

According to Van Allen, the move is "intended to be intimidating and it will be to some degree. If you are one, you bury the truth it's not a bad policy, but the Catholic tradition is open to reason," said Van Allen.

Another controversy involves the separation of church and state. "If the ultimate conclusion is that the university is no longer

Driscoll: V.U. has divested

By SIOBHAN A. RODER

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, stated last week, "It is my understanding that Villanova, in its investments portfolio ... has completely divested from South Africa." He added, "In the common fund, we have followed their principle which is to divest and ... certainly to abide by the Sullivan Principles. I don't know exactly what they have done, whether they have divested or not.

"We have done as much as we are going to do and can do in responding to the situation," said Driscoll. "We have made efforts in both areas [the common fund and the investments portfolio] to respond to the situation."

According to Driscoll, Villanova's endowment is divided between a University investment portfolio, which is managed by an investment counseling firm, and the common fund which is "a pool of funds that colleges and universities throughout the country have invested in and which is managed as a whole."

Members of the Villanova Anti-Apartheid Coalition, who represent various student groups on campus, have been in contact with Driscoll concerning Villanova's policies of investment in South Africa since early this year.

The Anti-Apartheid Coalition originally met with Driscoll on March 11 of this year. At that time, discussion revolved around three major issues. The first issue concerned what the University had done since Driscoll's October 1985 announcement, on behalf of the Board of Trustees, that apartheid is a "grave moral issue ... which the University should both recognize and appropriately act upon."

According to the coalition's meeting summary, the second point involved "what concrete plans had been made by the board [of Trustees] for further efforts" to work to end apartheid.

The third issue the coalition members conferred with Driscoll about, according to the summary of the meeting, was "how, if at

Student leaders hold assembly

By DANTE SCALA

Student Government held its first student assembly Sept. 17 to discuss important University issues and gain students' ideas and opinions, but few people besides the student governors attended.

One of the main topics was the ongoing conflict between off-campus students and Radnor Township. A law recently passed by the zoning board of Radnor Township states that only two unrelated people can live together in one house. According to Phil Brach, secretary of external affairs, this ruling "is obviously a law passed discriminating against students."

At the assembly, Brach announced that consultation with a lawyer had revealed that this law is unconstitutional, because it defines a family only by blood and denies students due process of law. As a result, the lawyer asserted, this law will not hold up in the courts. Student Government President Joe Allman stated, "They're [Radnor Township] violating fundamental rights. They're trying to define what a family is, and you can't do that." Allman hopes to improve relations with Radnor, and feels that this new information will give students the leverage to do so.

Brach also brought up the subject of student voter registration, which he said has been poor in recent years. The government wants to increase registration and thereby boost student awareness, and is looking for a plan to

An amendment to the Constitution to make the tenure of the faculty on the Academic Policy Committee three years instead of two, was passed at the University Senate meeting last Friday.

Dr. Richard Neville, vice president of Student Life and 1985-86 Chairman of the Rules and Review Committee, made the motion in order that the faculty involved would have enough time to become familiarized with this committee. The tenure for faculty in most of the other committees is already three years.

Fewer freshmen admitted this year

By MARY E. CHAREST

Approximately 1,570 freshmen, 80 less than last year, began classes at Villanova this semester; the Rev. Harry J. Erdlen, O.S.A., dean of Admissions, said this week.

Erdlen explained that the Admissions officers had "tried to control" the number of freshmen enrolling this year because of the overcrowded classes and dormitories caused by Villanova's largest freshmen class ever last year.

"We accepted fewer freshmen than last year," Erdlen said, explaining that of those accepted, 40 percent enroll. Out of 8,442 freshmen applications received, 3,946 applications (47 percent) were accepted.

Erdlen noted that the number of applications received for this year was close to the number received for last year (approximately 8,478). "So we don't think the NCAA [basketball championship] win resulted in more applications," he said.

According to Erdlen, every college except for Arts and Sciences, received fewer applications. Approximately 100 fewer students applied for the College of Engineering. Applications to the College of Nursing have decreased 40 percent over the last three years.

The College of Commerce and Finance received 2,680 applications, about 200 less than last year. "Still 2,700 applications for 400 some spaces isn't bad," Erdlen said.

The College of Arts and Sciences received 4,407 applications, "a substantial increase over last year," Erdlen said.

According to Erdlen, the caliber of students applying was up this year. The average combined S.A.T. score was 1,124, up approximately 24 points over last year.

Erdlen said that acceptance was based on performance in high school, class rank, courses pursued, S.A.T. scores, and to a lesser degree the high school attended and extracurricular

Voter registration studied

By NATALIE McKENNA

Student Government is currently reviewing plans to hold a campus-wide voter registration. Joe Allman, Student Government president, said this week, "It would be ideal to register as much of the study body as possible in Radnor Township. However, there is much more to it than that."

Philip Brach, secretary of Student Government's department of external affairs, said that the University has been divided into three wards. Moriarty Hall is in Ward Four. Stanford, Katharine and St. Monica's are in Ward Seven. Good Counsel Hall is also in Ward Seven, but in a separate district from the other South Campus residence halls.

Brach believes that the University was divided to prevent students from unifying and thus having a say in Radnor Township decisions. Brach stated, "If all on-campus residents lived in one ward, there would be no problem electing an official to the township board."

Brach believes that one strike against a campus-wide voter registration is in fact that if students choose to register at school, they forfeit their rights to participate in local and state elections at home.

Brach also pointed out that not all off-campus residents reside in Radnor Township. "Many off-campus residents live in Lower Merion Township, the area around Kelly's," he said.

Another major problem with registering off-campus residents is that many are in violation of the township housing codes. The

V.U. professor named to top 10

Dr. John Immerwahr, a philosophy professor at Villanova, was named this week as one of the top 10 professors in the Philadelphia metropolitan area, according to The Philadelphia Inquirer magazine.

The Inquirer cited Immerwahr for "the careful attention he gives to each student."

The Inquirer spoke with key administrators, faculty members, editors of student newspapers and students before choosing the top 10.

Immerwahr is one of the three professors who teach Villanova's interdisciplinary humanities course, a three-semester course, which combines philosophy, history and literature from ancient Greece to modern times.

In addition to teaching at Villanova, Immerwahr has been a researcher for Ralph Nader, a consultant to the Daniel Yankelovich's Public Agenda Foundation and has collaborated on several books.

Computer room nears completion

The new computer center currently under construction in Bartley Hall should be completed by next semester, Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, said this week.

The new computer room, which will contain 15 computers when completed, is expected to cost approximately $100,000. There are currently 26 IBM PC computers wired to a central processing unit in Bartley's existing computer room.

According to Clay, the present number of computers became inadequate because of the growing number of computer classes and business courses that have computer applications. "It is necessary that our computer centers have the proper hardware and software for all the disciplines taught in business, and ours does," Clay said.

The money for the project was raised by the accounting department, which received large grants from Coopers and Lybrand, du Pont, and several other companies.

Allman also delivered a message of welcome as well as a few goals and challenges for Student Government and the student body as a whole. Allman also challenged Student Government "to be a pivotal force within the University community, and to be a voice of unification and progress, as opposed to one of polarization and stagnation." He then called upon the students to become more involved, and concluded, "To those present today, I extend to you this challenge, to work with us, in creating a new Villanova."

The meeting was presided over by Chairman Philip A. Maurone. The next Senate meeting is scheduled for Oct. 31 at 4 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

The top 10 geographical areas of application in order were Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Maryland, Massachusetts, Virginia, Florida, Illinois and Rhode Island.

There were also applications from as far away as the Philippines, Taiwan, Greece, France and Germany.

Erdlen also noted an increase from 28 to 53 applications from California. "One girl from California scored 740 Verbal and 780 Math on her S.A.T. and received a presidential scholarship," Erdlen said.

Villanova reacts to Curran case

in control of its own affairs, then the question of accreditation would come into play," said Robert Kirkwood, executive director of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools. If Catholic schools are not independent, government loans could be threatened.

Another professor of religious studies at Villanova, M. Barbara Agnew, C.P.P.S., also has strong interest in the Curran case. One of Curran's first students at C.U., Agnew said he is "known as a prince; the simplest and kindest of persons."

In 1967, when Curran was fired by Catholic University's board because of his liberal views on contraception, Agnew took part in the campus-wide strike which led to Curran's reinstatement.

Curran was first contacted by the Vatican in 1979 when he received a 16-page list of the "principle errors and ambiguities" of his writings. For seven years this correspondence continued, and Curran was warned to retract his views.

Curran's final letter to Ratzinger in April stated, "In conscience at the present time, I cannot and do not change the theological positions I have taken."

Although Curran refused to alter his views, he did offer to teach moral theology, but not in the field of sexual ethics. This compromise was rejected by the Congregation in its final letter because of the "organic unity of authentic Catholic Theology, a unity which in its contents and method is intimately bound to fidelity to the Church's Magisterium."

The debate about Curran revolves around his belief in the following: birth control is necessary for responsible parenthood; abortion could be justified to save the life of the mother; remarriage after divorce should not be banned; and in some cases of "a loving relationship striving towards permanency," homosexual acts could be moral.

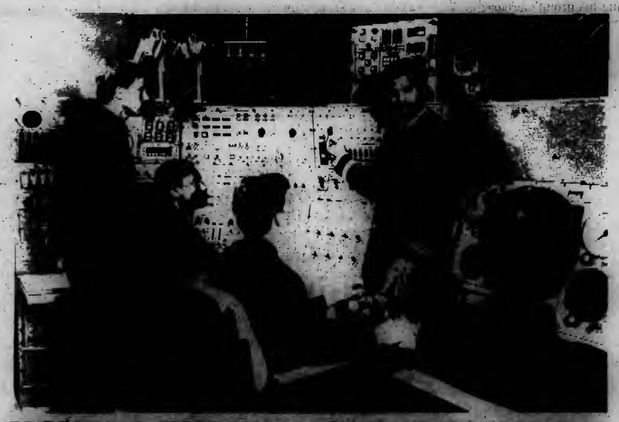
DAVE FACER



Order of Omega is pleased to announce that this week's Greek of the Week is Dave Facer. This Pi Kappa Alpha brother is a senior marketing major. The business world obviously agrees with this yuppie as he is a member of the Gamma Phi Honor Society and a perennial Dean's List student. When not seen in the halls of Bartley, Dave can be found meal checking at the Pit or hanging out in the Pie Shop with his brothers.

Hailing from the booming metropolis of Byram, N.J. (population 10), Dave quickly adjusted to life in the big city, becoming an O.C. his sophomore year. Things were never quite the same for the NSOP after that, as Dave was a Steering Committee member both his junior and senior years! Quite an accomplishment by any standards.

Since becoming a Pike last fall Dave has contributed greatly to the Greek World. As Chairman of the Leadership Development Committee, he is responsible for planning various workshops for the fraternities. Utilizing his marketing and advertising skills Dave coordinated the publicity for the Welcome Back Weekend Clambake that the IFC and the Panhellenic sponsored.

Weekends this fall will find "Mr. Clean" patrolling the Sheehan Beach of a member as the newly formed tailgating committee, referred to by insiders as the "Funbusters!"

With not nearly enough hours in the day to devote to all of these activities, Dave will take a course in stress management next semester. Order of Omega congratulates Dave on all his achievements!

Jake's Place opening delayed

By ELIA DiTADDEO

Jake's Place, a non-alcoholic pub held on Thursday nights in the Belle Air Terrace last year, is undergoing reorganization this year, according to Lucyna Gorski, director of Student Activities.

Gorski said this year more stress will be placed upon live entertainment. She also noted that Jake's will become a student-run organization under advisor Bill Matthews. Matthews was unable to be reached for comment earlier this week.

Although very popular in the beginning — 700 to 800 students every Thursday night during the first month, according to Student Activities' records — students began to lose interest as the school year progressed.

Gorski believes attendance dropped as the novelty of Jake's Place diminished. According to Gorski, "Orientation Counselors talked it up with their freshmen as a place for the group to meet after Orientation finished." Jake's Place was a new idea that the students wanted to try out, but as time progressed, students were limited by both schoolwork and other social interests, she said.

A specific date has not yet been set for the reopening of Jake's Place this year. In the meantime, the University is continuing with its schedule of events, which includes such activities as "Welcome Back Weekend," dances and concerts.

Respect Life Week planned at V.U.

By DANTE SCALA

Villanovans for Life will host its third annual Respect Life Week next week. During this time, "The group sponsors speakers and films to raise campus awareness about the issues that make up the pro-life movement," said Michael Bailey, chairman of Respect Life Week.

Bailey emphasized that abortion will not be the only issue discussed during his group's program. "We go beyond that," he asserted. "This year's programs reflect the recent adoption of the 'Seamless Garment' approach of Archbishop Joseph Cardinal Bernadin of Chicago. This philosophy stresses reverence of life in all its stages; one must respect life ... whether it be with the unborn, the sick, or the elderly. The group now embraces many issues concerning current world problems such as the homeless, apartheid, Nicaragua and the suppression of human rights around the world."

The program will begin Sept. 28 with a social actions forum. During the week, Bailey said the group will show three movies: 'Mask,' about the breakdown of social prejudices, "Gandhi," which is relevant today with the active non-violent resistances, and "The Everyday Miracle: Birth."

Vanderbilt may regulate pledging

Vanderbilt University's Community Affairs Board recently recommended new regulations for campus fraternities and sororities that will prohibit hazing and emphasize lessening the conflict between pledge activities and academics.

Under the proposed guidelines, any drop in the grade point averages of pledges from the previous semester will be a factor in deciding whether a fraternity or sorority's status will be renewed. As a result, pledge activities will be restricted to no more than 12 hours per week, and no activities may occur from 12 p.m. to 7 a.m., Sunday through Thursday.

Also, "demeaning" personal servitude and physical activity as punishment are prohibited.

Finally, the board also urged that fraternities and sororities support learning and academics and encourage faculty-student contact outside the classroom.

Need for English fluency stressed

Northern Illinois University (N.I.U.) recently issued directives to its academic departments stressing the importance of clear communication in the classroom.

N.I.U.'s graduate council, a policy-making body of graduate faculty and students, expressed concern about graduate teaching assistant's abilities to communicate in the English language.

"All academic departments are being reminded of their responsibility to ensure that English speaking ability is a criterion in placing graduate students in a classroom situation," said Jerrold Zar, associate provost for graduate studies and research and dean of the Graduate School.

One of the council's recommendations was that only graduate assistants with adequate competence in the English language should have instructional duties.

Assembly discusses issues accomplish this goal. It was also speculated that if students registered in Radnor, a message would be sent to the township. Furthermore, Allman said that it might then be possible to try to get a student elected to the town board or as a town official.

The discussion then shifted to on-campus issues. John Floyd, secretary of internal affairs, talked about changing the structure of the meal plan, improving the laundry facilities and the problem of on-campus parking. He also introduced the idea of a "Book Buy-Back" program and creating a used book section in the bookstore, which would allegedly reduce book costs.

Allman reacted to the report that bookstore profits go to the University's general fund by commenting, "We [the students] shouldn't be subsidizing other portions of the University [by paying for books]."

Paul Mullen, secretary of academic affairs, said that the administration is not backing the idea of an extended semester. This proposal was introduced last year by the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president of Academic Affairs.

Also, Mullen said that Villanova presently has a number of school days comparable to such highly regarded universities as Notre Dame, Georgetown and Boston College. Allman stated later that there was "not as much support [for an extended semester] as we thought." However, he said that some administrators are still in favor of it, and that the subject will be debated further. He commented "I, personally, would like to see more class days, to improve the academics," and said that Student Government will continue to "bounce this idea off the students, faculty, and administration, as we have been."

Other issues were also discussed including improving the registration process, obtaining more academic scholarships, improving the curriculum, introducting an honor code, and conducting a student survey about academic advisors.

It was also announced that a western civilization interdisciplinary program may be created for the fresman class. This program is now offered in the Honors curriculum, and may be offered to other majors.

In general, Student Government has been doing research on universities ranked higher academically than Villanova and has gained ideas and comparisons in order to try to improve the University's academics.

According to Seana McAnniff, assistant secretary of public relations, the student directory will be out shortly after Fall Break. Also, the government will be printing its own newsletter to keep students informed of its activities.

McAnniff stated, "Students don't know what Student Government is doing," thus, "People think we're not doing anything."

Campaign nears goal

By MEG KLUCSARITS

Covenant II, Villanova University's capital fund raising drive, has raised $19.8 million and is expected to go "sizably over" its $20 million goal by its Dec. 31, 1986 closing deadline, the Rev. George F. Riley, O.S.A. vice president of University Relations, said this week.

Villanova received $5 million to date from "enthusiastic" alumni, largely through face-to-face solicitations in 15 metropolitan areas, according to Edward A. Morosky, director of the alumni annual fund. This compares to $500,000 given by alumni during Covenant I.

Riley added that the 1985 NCAA basketball championship and the return of football brought about even more enthusiasm.

Villanova was also the recipient of $500,000 from the Kresge Foundation, as well as smaller grants from other groups and corporations.

laundry, Remley said.

The laundry in the washing machines and other dryers at the time of the fire were removed from the room and can now be reclaimed from Datto or Head Resident Ron LaPointe, both located on the third floor of Corr Hall.

Students who were doing their laundry in Corr Hall early Sunday afternoon reported that they noticed something strange about one dryer. One student said that she saw some flames coming out of the back of the dryer, but she was not sure if that was the normal situation.

The dryer never shut off all afternoon. According to some students, everyone in the laundry room was taking advantage of the free dryer and the dryer was so hot that it only took 10 minutes to dry a load of wash. The clothes of one student who used the defective dryer were reported to smell slightly smoky.

Solon, the contractor for the washing machines and dryers on campus, was contacted and will repair the faulty machine.

Lt. John J. Harrity from Villanova Security said that Solon was working on the problem on Sept. 23, and that work should have been completed that day. However, as of that night, the facility was still closed.

In the meantime, with the largest laundry room closed, there is a shortage of laundry facilities on the main campus. There are now three functioning washing machines in Sheehan Hall, two in Alumni Hall, two in O'Dwyer Hall and three in Delurey Hall to serve the central campus community until the Corr facility reopens.

Divestment completed

all, might the board's attitude towards complete divestment from companies in South Africa be changed, in light of the Rev. Leon Sullivan's recent rejection of sole reliance on his 'Sullivan Principles'... which, [the coalition maintained was the University's policy last spring] as an effective sanction against corporate encouragement of South African apartheid."

The Sullivan Principles were established by Sullivan as a voluntary code of conduct for American businesses with subsidiaries in South Africa. The basic tenets of the code are non-segregation of workers, equal and fair employment practices, training programs for black and Asian employees and an improvement in the qualify of employees' lives outside the work environment.

Members of the coalition met "informally" with Driscoll on July 22. Michael McGinnis, a member of the coalition, quoted Driscoll as having said at that time and again in a telephone conversation with a member of the Student Government last week, "To the best of my knowledge, Villanova University has completely divested from South Africa."

Tony Ryba, another coalition member, emphasized the use of the phrase "to the best of my knowledge."

"If the president of the University doesn't know [the exact status of University investments in South Africa], then I don't know who does," said Ryba.

Dr. John F. Stehle of the Economics Department, who has an interest in the Anti-Apartheid Coalition and has recently met with the student members, defended Driscoll's phraseology. He explained that investors cannot know exactly where all their money is because companies are continually buying and selling other companies.

"Father Driscoll has to say 'to the best of my knowledge' because of all the changes in the marketplace," Stehle said. "It is the only position he can take. I don't really think he is waffling."

In early April, the coalition members submitted a series of questions to Driscoll in order to clarify the extent of the University's investment in South Africa.

The questions concerned 16 companies involved in South Africa (mentioned by Driscoll in the March 11 meeting) in which the University had investments. The coalition members requested information concerning the name of each company, the amount of capital invested by Villanova in each company, the number of stock shares owned in each company, the date the shares were bought, and where, if applicable, the date when they were sold.

Several questions submitted also dealt with the Board of Trustees' opinion on how well the 13 (of the 16) companies which were signatory to the Sullivan Principles complied with them, and with the investment practices (as they relate to South Africa) of the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association — College Retirement Equities Fund (TIAA-CREF), the nationwide pension system tied to the Villanova faculty's pension fund.

When no answer came from Driscoll, the questions were re-submitted with a letter dated June 27. According to the coalition members, there was again no response from Driscoll.

Following their "informal" meeting with Driscoll, which was not scheduled in advance, on July 22, the Anti-Apartheid Coalition did receive information regarding TIAA—CREF, but nothing on Villanova's investment portfolio.

A newsletter from TIAA-CREF dated July 23, 1986, stated that "until now TIAA-CREF has supported the continued U.S. corporate presence in South Africa so long as portfolio corporations could be an effective force for change."

The TIAA-CREF newsletter then stated that, "Events of recent months, however, have 'eclipsed the ability of private good works to translate into positive public policy ... [and thus] we view the withdrawal of U.S. corporations from South Africa as a potent action against the Botha regime at this time, as well as a prudent economic judgement that is in the best interest of shareholders.' "

Joe McGowan, a coalition member, said that the decision by TIAA-CREF to urge its portfolio companies to withdraw from South Africa was not related to any initiative by Villanova.

Regarding the lack of information provided by Driscoll concerning the 16 companies with involvement in South Africa in which Villanova had investments, McGinnis said, "We feel like we've been ignored. There's a disappointment as well. Intelligent debate can't begin on whether to divest or not until we get information."

McGinnis added, "It's a sense of anger that we have conducted this [investigation into the University's investment policy on South Africa] in an intelligent and respectful manner, and their [the Administration's] lack of response makes it difficult for us to believe that they share our concern.

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, said last week that Villanova has completely divested from South Africa.

The coalition members have reservations about whether Villanova has truly divested. They point out that many people misuse the word "divest."

McGowan defined divestment as "complete disassociation from South Africa economically."

McGowan questioned why the University has not publicized its divestment from South Africa if it has truly divested. "If he [Driscoll] has done all that we can, why doesn't anyone know?"

Student voters

current Radnor Township housing code states that no more than two unrelated people are permitted to reside together. Brach said, "A lot of students are living illegally; they are not going to volunteer information about their school addresses."

Brach also stated that there is "a very quick turnover of residents" in college communities. "By the time we got most of the residents registered, they will have moved off campus, and a whole new freshman class will have moved in.

"It is a lot more complicated than anybody thinks," noted Brach. "We feel we should have more say in Radnor Township... whether registered or not, students need to be considered part of the Radnor Township community."

The College Democrats plan to hold voter registration sometime before the Oct. 7 registration deadline. They will be working with Student Government on a possible campus-wide registration in the future.

"We really think it is a good idea to get people involved in the democratic process," Allman stated.

Divestment: Will it change apartheid?

Divestment is not the simple solution it appears to be for the South Africa problem. The essential question is what will be the most effective way to change their system, and, by leaving our only foothold in the country, we can never hope to do this.

Of course apartheid is unjust. No one wants to support such a government, economically or otherwise. But even if all American companies divested, South African economy could absorb the loss, according to experts. In order for divestment to bring any significant pressure on the South African government, it must be a worldwide policy. The Western European nations have already expressly stated that they will not divest, and they are major contributors to the country's economy.

This leaves the companies from the United States as the only major ones who divest. We would be secure in the knowledge that we have a moral statement, but what good is this moral statement when it has no beneficial effect on the problem? We can pat ourselves on the back for not having any ties with a country that practices a policy of racial segregation, but we are only disengaging ourselves from the problem. South Africa and all the other nations will continue to conduct business as usual, and fill up the economic gap left by the United States.

Studies show that 80 percent of the American people believe in divestment. It has become a popular topic — an easy decision for people to jump on the bandwagon about. Yet no one seems to be considering the consequences of this decision.

Can the United States alone bring enough economic pressure on South Africa? And even if we could, do we suppose that they will so readily exchange their beliefs for our money?

Everyone recognizes the flagrant injustice now existing in South Africa. The question is how to change this, and it cannot be answered in one action. If we are to truly help these people, we must consider the consequences of any steps we may take. Will divestment cause a change in the government or will it simply leave the United States out of the debate?

Respect life

Respect Life Week will show the Villanova community the importance and variety of life issues next week. Every student, faculty member and administrator should attend at least one or more of their activities.

It is so easy to forget the rest of the world because we become involved in our school work, jobs, friends and family.

We have freedom, health and most basically-life. These things do not exist for many people all over the world who are denied their basic human rights. The sick, the political prisoners, those on death row, the elderly and the unborn who are killed, are only a few of the groups suffering in our society.

The Villanovans for Life, who are hosting the week, have made a significant distinction by showing us that "respect life" just doesn't mean to condemn abortion. Too often the abortion issue overshadows the whole concept of the phrase "respect life." The idea which the week helps to emphasize is that there are many other significant issues besides abortion, and also that we should respect life at all stages. If one condemns abortion, one should also condemn the death penalty. Respecting life doesn't mean respecting only certain phases of that life; it means giving dignity to all human beings in all stages of their existence.

Most of us in the Villanova community have been lucky. Most of us haven't been affected by any of the human rights violations that go on now. We weren't denied the right to be born or the right to be free. We should remember this and make it a point to attend a lecture of film next week. Awareness of the issues is the first step towards changing them.

Change Stanford loft policy

To the Editor:

On behalf of the residents of Stanford Hall, I would like to bring up the current University policy regarding loft construction and bunk beds.

There are 543 residents in Stanford Hall, many of whom wish to create more living area in their rooms. Loft construction and bunk beds create the opportunity for students to obtain the environment they wish to live in. Stanford Hall provides the housing for 543 students, nine months of the year, why not let them make it their home?

According to sources, the current policy allows for loft construction in Delurey Hall, permissible by the signing of a contract including a deposit for any and all damages that may occur in the process. Other men's residence halls supply bunk beds as for standard furniture. Stanford Hall has neither. The same applies for some of the female residence halls.

An attempt to mollify the situation was made in 1982 by the then Student Government president (and former head resident of Stanford Hall) Paul Tufano. Four years have passed and the situation remains stagnant. The residents of Stanford Hall request that special attention be focused on this ongoing problem concerning University policy on loft construction and bunk beds in our dormitory.

The present policy that governs Stanford Hall is that no man-made lofts are permitted whatsoever. What is allowed, on the other hand, is commercially built bunk beds and/or lofts. Also, the beds may be supported by the room furniture only (desks, closets, cabinets). If you own a commercially built loft, it must be approved by the area coordinator.

What myself, and the other 542 residents of Stanford would like to see happen is that a policy, such as the one that governs Delurey Hall, be put into effect in Stanford as soon as possible. As of Sept. 22, residents in Stanford who have lofts in their rooms which have not been approved by the proper authorities are being fined $25 a day until the lofts are dismantled. Therefore, immediate action is requested.

Apartheid: two roads we can go

Stay and work

By BRIAN D. WEBB

Earlier this month, a crowd of black people in South Africa forcibly placed a car tire around a black teenager and publicly torched him. As the flesh of his body smoldered, hundreds of blacks danced nearby and applauded. Their "necklace" execution had been successful.

Such acts of barbarism are occurring more and more frequently these days in South Africa. Radical blacks in this strife-torn nation appear ready to resort to any form of violence to end the current government-imposed system of apartheid. Unfortunately, these actions, as well as many anti-apartheid actions here in America, serve only to increase the black misery and ultimately prolong the system that they despise.

Villanova should be proud of its financial ties to South Africa. These investments prove this school is willing to stay and work against apartheid — not divest and run away.

Only a racist would enthusiastically support apartheid. The white Africaners instituted an absolutely repugnant form of government. But to support violence as a means of ending this system is neither prudent nor historically necessary.

We should all be concerned with the apartheid debate because it is a classic example of how a mediafed morality can snowball into an international crisis. After almost two years of extensive media coverage, the issue now seems to be reduced to a simple acid test: If you do not support divestment and sanctions, you must be a racist.

The movement for disinvestment and divestment should be discouraged. The radical House bill, which calls for U.S. companies to disinvest from South Africa, would result in U.S. assets (i.e., buildings and equipment) being sold at fire-sale prices to private South African or Japanese businessmen. As a result, the racially progressive U.S. companies would lose their chance to affect change and ultimately could be replaced by racially repressive apartheid supporters.

As more and more U.S. companies leave South Africa, the United States loses more and more influence. This is why we have a moral responsibility to encourage additional U.S. investment, certainly not less.

Those who support disinvestment (as well as other sanctions) apparently hope that the government of South Africa will somehow yield to the pressure from the United States. But experts believe their economy will eventually be able to adjust to the loss of U.S. investments. And, in the meantime, any loss of jobs will hurt blacks much more severely than whites.

The most severe proposal of all is the call for a world-wide trade embargo against South Africa. This would result in massive unemployment, suffering, and eventually a revolution that could result in millions of deaths. Clearly, for anyone who values life, disinvestment must be opposed.

The call for divestment must also be opposed. Many institutions, including Villanova have been pressured to sell their investments in corporations that do business in South Africa. While this placates the activists, it does nothing to attack apartheid. It merely shifts the power from those who are concerned about apartheid to those who may not be concerned.

Villanova should be proud of its financial ties to South Africa. These investments prove this school is willing to stay and work against apartheid — not divest and run away. When Villanova sells its stock in a company with an operation in South Africa, it sells its most effective weapon against apartheid. Divesting would just take Villanova out of the debate.

The best hope for South Africa lies in trying to negotiate a power-sharing agreement between the whites and such moderate blacks as Zulu Chief Buthelezi. But for this to occur, blacks must calm down and stop murdering blacks who try to conform to the system. Until violence is eliminated, there can be no settlement and there will be no peace.

Change in South Africa will come slowly. After being liberated by Lincoln, it took blacks in this country nearly 100 years to achieve civil rights. Although apartheid is more severe than America's segregation was, the blacks in South Africa could benefit from paying closer attention to the manner in which America's blacks achieved equality.

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., along with the Kennedys, tried to get blacks into schools. He would have been disappointed with the recent school boycotts by blacks in South Africa.

King called for peaceful protests and economic boycotts. He certainly would have condemned the violence and the lack of any economic boycotts so far in South Africa.

South Africa has a long and difficult struggle ahead. And it is easy for compassionate people around the world to try to dictate what they believe is the best alternative to apartheid. But real solutions must come from within the nation. This is why Americans must maintain their influence and try to guide South Africa toward democracy.

Brian D. Webb is a senior economics major and the Associate Editor of the Villanovan.

Divest now

By JOE McGOWAN

One cannot escape mention in daily newspaper and television reports of South Africa's immoral policy of apartheid. And many Americans ask why — Why is it that we must concern ourselves with apartheid?

It is difficult to believe that so many Americans claim unfamiliarity with the system of apartheid. Our own nation practiced apartheid officially until 1965. And it was not so long ago that parts of our nation, fought fiercely to defend their "right" to practice racial discrimination and segregation.

We simply do not know how many blacks have been killed by the government of South Africa. Those prominent South African blacks whose deaths cannot escape notice have been accounted for by the government with stock phrases, each chilling in its simplicity: "suicide by hanging," "slipped in shower," "fell down stairs," "leapt from tenth-floor window during interrogation."

The world was incredulous at reports from South Africa in September of 1977. The world learned that Steve Biko, the founder of the "Black Consciousness" movement and leader of the nonviolent Black People's Congress, had been murdered by the government.

In Room 619 of the Sanlam Building in Strand Street, Port Elizabeth, Steve Biko received the blows that took his life. No mere words can express such an outrage.

But we must at least try to voice our outrage at the atrocities of the apartheid regime. Ray Swart, a white member of South Africa's segregated three-chamber of Parliament told The New York Times that: "There is probably less freedom in South Africa than there is in Communist Russia. The Government is going beyond the Kremlin when it comes to denying democratic rights to people."

And yet Ronald Reagan and Margaret Thatcher insist that divestment coupled with punitive economic sanctions is not a viable form of protest. There are economists too who insist that we could have more leverage with the apartheid regime if we increased investment in South Africa. If this is so then why do we not increase investment in and repeal the economic sanctions against Nicaragua so that we might have more leverage with the Sandinistas?

What economic leverage can we have in South Africa without the threat of divestment? Even if we owned a dominant share of that nation's industries and land we would not own a controlling interest in the fuel of apartheid — racial hatred and that laborious fiction known as the "political mythology" of South Africa. Will the racial hatred deeply imbedded in the Afrikaner consciousness dissipate with the infusion of more American capital?

To invest further capital in the Republic of South Africa is the moral equivalent of providing the weapons used in a Sharpesville or Soweto massacre.

Others argue that divestment will only lead to greater violence in South Africa. But what greater violence is there than civil war? Blacks have been murdered by the government of South Africa not for only the past few years, but for over a century.

By allowing increased investment in South Africa we seek once more to have American business demonstrate its moral laxity. Big business has never been a major catalyst for social justice and change. In fact, it has been one of the most repressive forces in all of history. To place our hopes in this fallen idol is extreme foolhardiness. To invest further capital in the Republic of South Africa is the moral equivalent of providing the weapons used in a Sharpesville or Soweto massacre.

There is a most interesting passage in the African Anthem: "Sikelela kwa nomlissla/Ulitwal' iliizwe ngomonde." — "Bless also the young/ That they may carry the land with patience." We have before us a choice — will we make clear to the Republic of South Africa that we will not subject new generations of black South Africans to apartheid or will we invest further in this profitable atrocity? Shall we divest? Shall we as Americans attempt to regain some sense of moral decency or have we already sold the blacks of South Africa for 30 Krugerrands?

Joe McGowan is a junior English major, classical studies minor, and a member of Villanova's Anti-Apartheid Coalition.

Quote of Note

"Victims of an economic boycott of South Africa would be the very people we seek to help. We need not a Western withdrawal but deeper involvement by the Western business community, as agents of change and progress and growth ... We must stay and work, not cut and run."

— Ronald Reagan in a speech this summer.

Family ties grow stronger through business

By JOHANNE C. SHARP

In 1953 my grandmother and grandfather, whom I never met, established the first motel in Atlantic City, John's Motel. It became an official city landmark the year I was born, and a large part of our family business. We actually had two motels, John's I and John's II.

I cannot remember a summer when I did not work at my family's business on the Atlantic City boardwalk. Every morning my mom, dad, two brothers and I got up around 5 a.m. and went to work at our bicycle rental. Later in the day, we operated a miniature golf course and parking lot.

Everybody in my family had a special job at our business. My late great-grandmother ran the continental breakfast coffee shop we had for the motel guests, while my late great-grandfather cashiered at the golf course in the afternoon. My aunt was a front desk clerk at the motel and even my cousin from Arizona visited and worked every summer that I can recall.

We were (and still are) a family — a very close family — and we operated a successful variety of businesses that catered to visiting tourists and families. We worked together. We had (and still have) a special bond that spans four generations.

I consider myself extremely fortunate to have worked side by side with both my grandmother and great-grandparents on a daily basis. Our special bond was more than a loving relationship that most grandparents and their grandchildren have. We became very close friends.

A recent study by Kornhaber and Woodward indicated that only 5 percent of the grandchildren and grandparents surveyed were closely involved with each other. Another 5 percent had no contact at all, while the remaining 90 percent visited occasionally but did not develop intimate relationships.

From a family of the first 5 percent, I find it hard to believe that most of America's families are not taking advantage of the knowledge and experience that grandparents can offer. Their family history can only be explored with the help of these special people who are sometimes not appreciated until they are no longer here.

Today, our family business consists of two large parking facilities. The small businessman was pushed out of business by the wealthy casinos. Atlantic City is no longer a summer resort and there is no place for the vacationing family.

Since the days of Frank's Bicycle Rental and John's Motels, we have lost two integral persons of my family, my great-grandparents. But I cherish the opportunities that I had to spend time with them. Only now do I realize that our family situation was unique in that everyone does not grow up working side by side with their great-grandparents.

Only now do I realize how special my grandmother truly is. After losing her husband to cancer, she assumed full responsibility for the motels and other businesses. She was a competent businesswomen in a businessman's world. And she continued to care for her family — the most important part of her life.

My attendance at Villanova is my grandmother's fulfillment of her dream. Through me, she is finally experiencing the college she was denied a half century ago. Money was scarce then and women just did not have the opportunity to attend college.

Frances Ginnetti is my grandmother, known to the press as the woman who turned down a reasonable offer from the Golden Nugget Hotel and Casino to sell her properties. She believes in fair competition and her right to remain in business. Throughout her many struggles with planning and zoning boards, city hall and the legal justice system, I stand tall and proud by her side. She is certainly not your ordinary grandmother, but an intelligent businesswoman who refuses to be intimidated by anyone. I can only hope that I have her courage and conviction to stand up for my rights throughout the rest of my life.

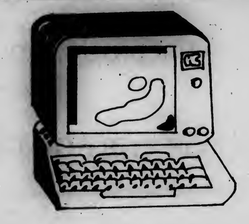
Saferides needs some cooperation

To the Editor:

Villanova Saferides still exists. Right now we are in the process of reorganizing. Therefore, service to the Villanova community has been delayed. We are presently involved in the mechanics of achieving organizational status within the framework of Student Activities (previously, Saferides was a program sponsored by the Office of Residence Life).

This year for the first time, Saferides is being funded through the Alumni Association, thanks to the support of the Director of Alumni Robert J. Capone. Capone will serve as advisor of the Saferides organization with some assistance from Dr. Nick Rongione of the Business Law Department.

Our goal is to provide the most responsive and extensive service as is possible. To do that we are doing everything that is within our power and ability, to provide the most efficient service possible to you, the Villanova community.



Please understand that part of the responsibility for the success of this organization rests with you as a member of the Villanova community. Saferides is not a division of SEPTA, nor is it a cut-rate (free) version of Yellow Cab Co. Unfortunately Saferides has been abused in this manner in the past, which forced the exclusion of those legitimately needing Saferides assistance.

Please remember that Saferides is designed to be an alternative for people to avoid potentially being involved in a DUI situation. It is not just an alternative to SEPTA or not having a car.

We hope to be in full service sometime in early October. In the meantime remember: When you go out drinking, do not drive afterwards. You won't be able to do it right. Trust me.

Rushing to sororities

By STACEY WILKINS

Why does your roommate need three hours to get ready for a party? The answer is that rush season is upon us.

In preparation, prospective pledges are heating up their electric rollers, making up their faces and worrying about the right dress to wear.

While the young coeds prepare for the rush ritual, the sorority sisters begin the process of attempting to choose the girls who will carry on the sorority. This involves a serious and difficult selection process, and the competition among the girls is stiff.

This season's pledge class is the largest to date, with 390 girls rushing. By the time it is all over, five percent will have dropped out and 10 percent will have been cut.

According to Betsy Stanfield, president of the Panhellenic Council (Panhel), the number who are chosen to join a sorority depends on the quota set by Panhel. The quota is determined by dividing the total number of girls rushing by six.

According to Stanfield, it is to each sorority's advantage to take the total alloted by their quota. If most do, Panhel will bring a new sorority onto campus next year, Alpha Phi.

The high cost of belonging to a sorority prevents some girls from ever joining. The costs include: $23.50 to $40 in pledge fees; $80 to $140 in initiation fees; $80 to $151 per semester in dues.

Further, the total cost for the first year of pledging can run between $353 and $417, and the total cost per year for activities between $160 and $260.

How does a girl make her investment payoff by receiving a bid? A spokesperson for Villanova's only female fraternity, Kappa Alpha Theta, claims they look for leadership qualities, a person involved in campus activities and, most importantly, uniqueness and a girl who can stand on her own.

The newest sorority on campus, Alpha Omicron (AO Pi), claims that they look for enthusiastic and sincere girls who want to give a lot to their sorority. Leadership qualities are a must for an AO Pi sister. As a relatively small sorority of 50 girls, they have come to demand more of their sisters than many of the larger sororities.

AO Pi hopes to reach quota this year. One factor in their favor is the practice of cutting girls after the first night of parties, encouraging those girls to look at the smaller sororities, as is AO Pi.

For prospective pledges, rush week is time-consuming and ridden with anxiety. In a one-week span, the girls must attend four nights of parties, where they meet the girls already in the sororities and determine which sorority is for them.

Often, the sorority a girl chooses may not select her, so it is best to go into the process with an open mind. To make it in to a sorority, a girl must receive "bid" from one sorority. Once she receives a bid, she must go through a four-month pledge period before becoming a sister.

This is no small undertaking, as a girl tries to select a sorority that will give her more than just a chance to meet fraternity brothers.

The sudden resurgence in sororities' popularity is a reflection of society's trend to embrace more traditional ties and have the support of a group. Some, however, believe sororities place the group ahead of the individual and resent this tendency to stifle individual identies.

Nevertheless, Greek life continues to grow in popularity at universities and colleges across the United States.

Pi Beta Phi sister Becky Carlton, a 1970 graduate from the University of Illinois, recalls that "when I went through rush it was an embarrassment. People laughed in your face; now it is a mark of distinction."

As political activism and social consciousness heightened in the 1960s, sororities were left by the wayside. At UCLA, half of their 28 sororities and fraternities had fallen by 1970.

The jeers of protesters have lost their sting today. TG's (Friday afternoon parties) and formals are remorselessly replacing ideological rap sessions that formed the cornerstone of social life in the 1960s.

Call it enlightened apathy if you will. The energy is still there, although it has been rerouted.

Greek Week is planned with the same energy used to storm administration buildings 15 years ago. The students of the '60s were protesting a generation of elitist sorority attitudes held in the '50s.

The antiestablishment fire has smoldered and a new sorority has emerged. The national board of each sorority has seen to this. Each sorority must devote a certain amount of time and money to serving the public welfare.

That does not mean that you will see your sisters picketing U.S. involvement with Contra rebels in Nicaragua, however. The protest has assumed a more refined note than the ones of the '60s.

This week, hundreds of Villanova girls partied for bids to join their favorite sororities.

Student volunteers feed Philly's poor

By NANCY NEILL

The Campus Ministry Committee for the Homeless, which helps Franciscan brothers and sisters provide food, clothing and shelter for Philadelphia's poor, held a commitment meeting on Sept. 23. The purpose of the meeting was for volunteers to organize plans for aiding Philadelphia's 8,000 homeless persons.

The 8,000 consist of poverty stricken families and small children. This figure does not include the elderly and those who have been institutionalized, at one time or another.

The first area where volunteers are needed includes campus education, public relations and funding. This committee makes peanut butter and jelly sandwiches in St. Clare's Hall on Tuesday nights for the street committee to distribute in the city.

Getting involved with this committee is an excellent way for those who feel uncomfortable confronting the street people in Center City, face to face, to help the poor.

Others, who are not so intimidated, can join the street committee. These people drive into Philadelphia every Wednesday and Thursday night to distribute the peanut butter and jelly sandwiches to the homeless.

In the city, the volunteers give the sandwiches to the street people at 30th Street Station. The van also drives down various side streets in the surrounding area and distributes the sandwiches.

The third committee works at the St. Francis Inn in Philadelphia, which is run by the Franciscan brothers and sisters. This committee helps serve food and clean dishes on Thursday and Saturday afternoons.

Although the St. Francis Inn is run by the Franciscans, its successful operation depends on volunteers and contributions. In addition to the soup kitchen, the Inn houses a men's and women's shelter, as well as two thrift shops.

The environmental committee is another perfect opportunity for those who would like to help without dealing directly with the street people. The committee members go to the Inn on Saturdays with the soup kitchen committee and take care of maintenance and repairs.

Anyone interested in helping the less fortunate amongst us, should stop by the Campus Ministry office in the basement of St. Rita's Hall and volunteer their time. Donating even just one afternoon of your services will likely result in a most rewarding and enlightening experience.

Students snack in Harmony

By FRANK ORZECHOWICZ

A change occurred in Connelly Center this year. No, it was not a new meeting room or added seats in the Cinema. It happened behind the information desk and in Campus Confections.

The freshmen may not notice (how could they), but many upperclassmen have. It is a change in the candy that is for sale.

The Connelly Center is now offering a variety of nutritional health food snacks along with the traditional candy fare. Such unusual offerings such as "Oriental Party Mix," "Tropical Trail Mix," and "Yogurt-Covered Raisins" are neighbors to the more familiar M&M's and Reese's Peanut Butter Cups. The credit goes to Villanova's new supplier of snacks, Harmony Snacks of California.

The decision was made this summer to offer the students more variety and to throw in a little nutrition to boot. Marc Tuchman, director of Connelly Center, decided to deal with Harmony Snacks, making Villanova the second university in the area to incorporate this system.

What Harmony Snacks does is offer nutritional snacks and candies that also taste great. "Oriental Party Mix" contains sesame sticks, rice crackers, roasted peas, Georgia peanuts and an Oriental flavor that is truly different.

There are also such items as yogurt-covered pretzels and raisins, a wide variety of trail mixes, gummy-bears and carob-covered candies. Carob is a chocolate substitute which tastes and smells exactly like chocolate.

This reporter couldn't taste the difference. It is also low in sodium, carbohydrates and sugar.

Another big plus for the new candy is that the nutritional information for each snack is right on the container. This way you can check exactly what is in what you are eating (which is not a bad idea).

Most of the snacks are low in sodium and carbohydrates, so even those on the most strict of diets can splurge a little without too much worry. The snacks are all the same price, a dollar for a quarter pound, so you can mix your favorite snacks as well as create your own versions.

For those of you who still love your high carbohydrates and intense sugar levels, fear not! Favorites such as M&M's, Reese's Peanut Butter Cups, and Gummy Bears will still be there.

Some unpopular items will be phased out to make room for new items, but the biggies of the candy world will live on.

So that is how it is at the Connelly Center. Harmony Snacks has hit Villanova's hallowed halls. For their low price and high quality and flavor, these new snacks cannot be beat.

There are brochures in Campus Confections describing some of the new offerings, recipe ideas and an address for more information. Until next time Villanova, Aloha!

Friends gather to overcome tragedy

By MARK DiSTASIO

While President of Egypt, Anwar Sadat once wrote, "Faith means that a man should regard any disaster simply as a fate-determined blow which must be endured."

This past summer, while most Villanova students were home enjoying their vacation, tragedy struck the Delaware Valley. On June 21, 18 year-old George Butera of Norristown sustained a traumatic injury, which left him a permanent quadraplegic.

This Sunday from noon to dusk, a benefit concert will take place at Mermaid Lake in Blue Bell, with all of the proceeds going to the George Butera Rehabilitation Fund.

Like most aspiring 18-year-olds, George Butera had a good idea of what he wanted out of life. Last year and again this spring, Butera studied computer science at Temple University.

Everything was going great for the former Wissahickon High School athlete, until that fateful June day off the Jersey shore. George had gone swimming with a few friends at the resort of Ocean City. Seconds after he ran

Following the initiation, which was held at St. David's, the new sisters and their guests attended a luncheon to celebrate the occasion. During this time the new sisters received certificates of membership and were once again congratulated for all their hard work. Present at the proceedings were representatives from the Zeta Alpha Advisory Board as well as area alumnae representatives. Among these were Diana Harris, Chairman, Tamara Balding, Expansion Coordinator, and Nancy P. Gustafson, Council Appointed Chairman as well as numerous guests from the Philadelphia area.

The luncheon was a great success as the sisters exchanged sad goodbyes with many of the women who had come to mean so much to them over the past few months.

The Delta Gamma sisters have great expectations for their first year as a national sorority and are being kept quite busy with all the new responsibilities. Each and every one is proud to be a full-fledged member of Delta Gamma.

IFC-PANHEL HOLD LEADERSHIP TRAINING WEEKEND

By BETSY STANFIELD and KATIE VAN ALLEN

The day was Friday, Sept. 12; the time was 4:22 p.m.; a blue van pulled in front of Dougherty Hall to pick up an ambitious young group of student leaders. The Executive Boards for the Panhellenic and Interfraternity Councils, driven by their fearless leader Gary Bonas, Jr., began their long and arduous journey to Sea Isle City, N.J., unaware of the challenges and adventures they would encounter throughout the leadership training weekend.

After a quick stop at Burger King and a scenic drive through southern New Jersey, the group arrived at the Gruccio beach residence (known for its rare collection of mirrors). That evening Bonas challenged the group's morals with a hot round of Scruples, a game that disclosed much about the true nature of the Boards and served the purpose of helping the students develop stronger interpersonal working and communication.

The weekend also served as a time of reflection on their strengths and shortcomings. Their work from the spring 1986 semester was reviewed and overall the officers were pleased with the organizations success at effectively working towards their goals.

The group developed plans and formulated strategies for the fall semester. The Panhellenic will be working towards meeting the needs of the expanding sorority system, and raising Panhellenic awareness among its chapters, by focusing on pledge education and effectively hosting the NEIFC/NEPC Area III Workshop. They will continue their educational series for V.U. students as well as their effort on strengthening relations with the administration and supporting the other student organizations.

The IFC will investigate possibilities of expansion, and work towards developing a stronger chain of command through more efficient operations. In addition, the IFC will be focusing on strengthening system-wide relations among separate fraternities and improving the scholarship program.

Sunday night at 9:14 p.m. the van safely returned the Greek Executive Boards to the Villanova campus — with a little sun and 19 minutes of fun. It was a weekend of sharing. It was a weekend of growth — for the Executive Boards as well as growth in their commitment to excellence in the Greek System at Villanova and the entire Villanova Community.

Recognition earned by V.U. cadets

By AMY TORACK

Have you ever wondered where all the short-haired, white clad Army Reserve Officers Training Corps (ROTC) cadets go when classes end in the spring? Do you know how they occupy their time in those same three months that you spend sunning, swimming, and relaxing?

Villanova's ROTC cadets were recognized this summer for outstanding achievement at the Advanced Training Camp.

This summer, five ROTC cadets from Villanova spent six weeks at the 1986 Camp All American ROTC Advanced Camp Training held at Fort Bragg, N.C. In addition, three Villanova students completed the Army ROTC Nurse Summer Training Program held in various military hospitals along the East Coast.

These eight cadets managed to do quite a bit more with their summer vacations than the average student, gaining valuable experience, added qualifications, and in some cases, a deserved sum of money.

The ROTC advanced summer camp does more than give cadets the opportunity to experience an extremely physically demanding six weeks. The camp also provides ROTCs with the best training available in the Army today.

The cadets, who come from some 111 universities along the East Coast, were evaluated on their performances in the areas of skill and leadership. Among those who achieved excellence was Villanova Cadet Doug C. Melvin, who was ranked No. 25 out of a group of 3,650 cadets.

Melvin was awarded the Platoon Leadership Award, Military Proficiency Award, Land Navigation Award, and Physical Proficiency Award.

Also worth commending are Cadets Michael J. Bochna, who ranked in the upper 30 percent of the group, and Vincenza M. Johnson, a recipient of the Military Proficiency Award and Land Navigation Award.

Other Villanova cadets who successfully completed the course include Jeffrey A. Voice and Joseph G. Williamson.

The three Villanova students who completed the ROTC Nursing Program were Stacey A. May, Ann Marie Brennan and Mary E. Gorden. They were stationed for five weeks in Fort Bragg, Fort Belvoir, Md., and Washington D.C., respectively.

The three women learned advanced nursing skills while putting this knowledge to work on a large number of patients. In addition to this program, Cadets Brennan and May served three weeks as cadet officers in active army hospitals in what is called the Cadet Troop Leadership Training Program (CTLT).

This experience was a fascinating one in which real-life situations were encountered and faced diligently by the participants.

Villanova ROTC cadets who lead an active summer life, as well as take on a demanding schedule during the school year should be commended for their extreme dedication and hard work exhibited throughout the year.

Overcoming tragedy

into the swirling surf, George was spotted floating on the salt water.

Immediately, the life guard on duty sprinted into the water and pulled the semi-conscious teen onto shore. An ambulance rushed him to Shore Memorial Hospital in Somers Point, where doctors diagnosed that George had fractured his fourth cervical vertebrae; the part of his backbone near the spinal column.

About four days after the "freak" accident, George was flown to the Thomas Jefferson University Hospital in Philadelphia. He is expected to spend about a year in rehabilitation therapy before returning home.

Fortunately, with the help of his loving family and friends, George is regaining his sense of pride and self-confidence. He has been described as "A strong-minded, very likeable boy."

Obviously, with such a traumatic accident, the extensive rehabilitation process demands a tremendous financial responsibility. To help George's family with these medical and other expenses, about 30 of his friends recently formed the "Friends of George Butera Committee" and have come up with several fund raising projects.

On Aug. 16, they had a beef and beer party. That, in combination with other activities, has brought the total monetary contributions over the amount of $11,000.

This Sunday, Sept. 28, three outstanding Philadelphia area bands will co-headline a benefit concert for George

The concert, hosted by WMMR, will feature Tommy Conwell's Young Rumblers, Beru Revue and CBS recording artists Smash Palace. Also included in this impressive slate are Flamin' Caucasians and comedian Craig Shoemaker.

The doors for this outstanding effort will open at noon. For those of you unable to attend this worthy cause, donations can be made to George Butera Rehabilitation Fund, c/o Meridian Bank, 2716 DeKalb Pike, Norristown, Pa. 19401.

As I look back to the words of Anwar Sadat, certain patterns begin to form. It is clear that George's family and friends have found inner strength through their faith in George.

Most importantly, George has accepted his condition through confidence, courage, and a desire to live his life to the fullest. Good luck George, and God bless you.

VILLANOVANS FOR LIFE

Campus Ministry

By REV. RAY JACKSON, O.S.A.

In moments of disappointment, or times of doubt and confusion, the words of Jesus frequently offer comfort. "Learn of me for I am meek and gentle of heart. Do my work, follow me; for my work is easy and my burden is light."

Jesus invites us to enter into his life — the life of living each day in building up the kingdom of God.

To learn of Jesus is to learn of God. But is not God powerful and strong? Is not God the one who will smite down the enemy and punish the wicked?

Our ideas about God need constant clarification. No one has ever seen God, but many people did see Jesus and came to know him as a man of gentleness, compassion and love.

The more we reflect on his life of healing and forgiveness, the more we will learn to forgive each other and heal those who suffer the wounds of conflict.

To be meek and gentle does not mean becoming a wimp. In fact, only a strong character and conscience are able to develop a sensitivity in their relationships with others.

We are all aware of the social diseases of racism, sexism, the drug culture and the obsession with wanting more and more things. These are the weaknesses of people who do not trust in God and have little concern about working for peace and harmony in a hard world of pain, anger and greed.

To be meek and gentle as Jesus bids us is to put away our own personal agenda of wants and seek to feed the hungry, shelter the homeless and comfort the sorrowful.

To learn of Jesus is to study his life. Just as the learning process from kindergarten through college takes much time and energy, so too does our growth in the spiritual life.

Developing the best of our human qualities, generosity, kindness, sensitivity and care is a lifelong task. To live a fully human life is ultimately to imitate Jesus.

Can we learn of him? Can we see God as meek and gentle?

Rust and Crazy Horse unite again

By TORCH DANIELS

Neil Young proved that rust never sleeps, with a rocking show last Wednesday night at the Spectrum. Making a long-awaited tour with Crazy Horse, his most famous band, Neil showed the sold-out spectrum crowd that he has yet again passed through another identity crisis to return to his rock 'n roll roots.

The show was part of the first leg of an extensive North American tour that started with dates in Albany and Lake Placid, NY. Neil's previous two tours included a small solo show and a tour supporting the album Neil Young & The Shocking Pinks, which were somewhat disappointing. So, for the first time in three tours, he is joined by Crazy Horse, and performing his classics.

Neil appeared at about 8:30 p.m. on an unelaborate stage that was fashioned as a broken down garage — and proceeded to play for almost three hours. Large mice were seen scurrying through the garage. And a giant roach circled Neil's feet throughout his "Cinnamon Girl" solo.

Lunar landscapes and outer space scenes gleamed through a window at the back of the garage, creating a soft background that would be shattered by the rock band's rehearsal. But as you could guess, the neighbors soon complained about Crazy Horse's incessant jam session. The cops eventually arrived to bust the band, only to have them escape for their encore.

Neil and the band were full of energy throughout the show, and therefore opted to play more rocking material, staying away, for the most part, from Neil's mellow tunes. This trend immediately became obvious to the crowd as Crazy Horse opened the show with "Mr. Soul." They continued into "Cinnamon Girl" and "When You Dance I Can Really Love."

Neil then played two songs from his new album, Landing on Water, "Touch the Night" and "Bad News Beat," as he continued on this high energy level.

"Down by the River" came next, and was performed exquisitely. Neil's solo jam lasted eight minutes to the tremendous delight of the crowd.

Finally, he slowed the tempo with "Heart of Gold" and "After the Gold Rush" with the full moon in his eye. For these songs the Spectrum gave Neil its full vocal assistance.

At this time, Neil played a few songs which the audience appeared unfamiliar with, including "Some Things Never Change," before closing the set with a fine "Cortez the Killer." With the closing of the set, the garage door creaked close, with the mice informing us of the intermission.

Neil opened shop for the second set with the bizarre sounds of his album Trans, before a distinctive "Powderfinger." Also from Rust Never Sleeps, the hit 1979 album, we heard "Hey, Hey, My, My, (Into the Black)," which the crowd greatly participated in.

Neil played two more selections from his new album, "Violent Side" and "Weight of the World." Evident in these songs was the drumming of Ralph Molina, as were Steve Jordan's percussions within the album.

Taking the mood down was a lone Neil with his acoustic guitar performing "Needle and the Damage Done." But, once again, Crazy Horse exploded with "The Loner" and the outstanding classic "Like a Hurricane," accompanied by spectacular scenes of the Sea of Tranquility on the screen. The show ended obscurely, however, with the garage door unexpectedly shutting on the band, with as many blazing lighters as I've ever seen.

Philadelphia did not see the great rapport with the audience that Neil has shown in the past, but it did witness a serious band perform their music as they have not done for years. Neil Young & Crazy Horse were at their legendary best for this show, regardless of their more remote selections, and some disappointing absences, such as staying away from his softer material. Even with the band playing a solid three hours, it was, of course, impossible for them to play all of their classics.

This weekend the band will be in Fairfax, Va., and East Rutherford, N.J., before heading up to Montreal. So, if you missed the show, (you should be ashamed of yourself), you still have a chance to catch it nearby. I hope to see you there.

Veteran rock 'n' roller Neil Young returned with Crazy Horse Sept. 17 to support the Landing On Water lp.

And then there were three with 'Invisible Touch'

By MEGAN GUIDERA

Invisible Touch
Genesis
Atlantic Records

What is it about Phil Collins, Mike Rutherford, and Tony Banks that made them sell out four shows at the Philadelphia Spectrum this week? Perhaps it's their "invisible touch."

After three years of breaking out on their own, the three original Genesis members have compiled one of their best albums yet. Invisible Touch, which was preceded by Genesis in 1983, is the product of three men peaking in their musical careers. Just last spring Phil Collins won the Grammy Award for best album with his smash record No Jacket Required. Mike Rutherford's recent album Mike and the Mechanics is steadily climbing the charts with hits like "All I Need is a Miracle" and "Taken In." Tony Banks has done a great deal of work with the up and coming group GTR. Invisible Touch craftily combines the musical genius of these three men.

The prevalent theme dominating the lyrics is the "invisible touch" of a lost lover. The classic example of this theme is the album's title track, "Invisible Touch." "Invisible Touch," which stayed on the top 10 charts for several weeks this summer, has a danceable pop beat. The song discusses the inevitability of falling in love.

"Tonight, Tonight, Tonight" begins with a slow-paced jungle beat that intensifies as the song progresses. This song has an air reminiscent of Peter Gabriel, the group's original leader. The song, like many of Gabriel's, has an unusual sound and the jungle aura that is common on Gabriel's recent album, So. "Tonight, Tonight, Tonight" tells of the false hopes of redemption of someone who has fallen into a deep rut.

The presently popular soft hit "Throwing It All Away" once again exemplifies the theme of the pain involved in losing a lover. The strong drum beat reminds one of old slow Genesis hits like "It's Gonna Get Better" and "Follow You, Follow Me." "In Too Deep" is sure to be another slow-paced Genesis hit with its beautiful lyrics and soft music.

The song "Domino" is broken down into two parts: "In the Glow of the Night" and "The Last Domino." "In the Glow of the Night" begins with percussion similar to that found in "Mama" on Genesis. This part of the song tells of a man alone in bed at night longing for and fantasizing about his former lover. "The Last Domino" has a desperate driving drum beat, expressing the fear of the domino effect in love relationships.

"Anything She Does" will prove to be another fast tempo Genesis dance tune. This is achieved through the use of its trumpet and percussion.

"Land of Confusion," which is one of the best songs on the album, strays from the general theme. The best is similar to Phil Collin's "Sussudio" from No Jacket Required. "Land of Confusion" is a reflection and a suggestion. It reflects on the confusion, clutter, and lack of compassion in modern society. ("This is the world we live in/ these are the hands we're given/ Use them and let's start trying/ to make it a place worth fighting for.")

The quality music of Genesis' Invisible Touch proves that it was well worth the three-year wait for this composition of Phil Collins', Mike Rutherford's, and Tony Bank's musical intellect.

Now in the midst of their stay at Philadelphia, Genesis have touched millions with their Invisible Touch.

This week we're going to talk about some titles from the Maryland-based software company, Mastertronic. Mastertronic is one of the most prolific software companies, with over 20-25 pieces of software available in both recreational and educational areas. I would recommend anything made by them, for Mastertronic product is wrapped in an attractive package, a mirror of the excellence inside. Although the seven pieces I was sent sound like nothing unusual, Mastertronic is one of the most innovative companies around. Who else would dare base a game on the Monty Python classic, "The Quest for the Holy Grail"?

ELEKTRAGLIDE •••• / SPEED KING •••

Both of these packages are racing games, the catch being that the graphics are something to be reckoned with. Elektraglide is a futuristic motorcycle race in which the player must reach the next tunnel before running out of time, while avoiding obstacles in the road and the ever popular and annoying attacking spheres. Choices of track and steering control are allowed. The scenery changes with movement — very good.

Speed King is a motorcycle version of Atari's Pole Position. The player can choose 10 different tracks, the number of laps in the race, etc. The game is hard to win, but worth the challenge. The object is to beat all of the 19 opponents to the finish line. It sounds like your standard race game, but this one is pretty good.

FIVE-A-SIDE SOCCER •••• / THE SLUGGER •••

I'm not much for sports games, but these two new releases from Mastertronic are easy to use and a real challenge to beat the computer. Five—A-Side Soccer has the touch of speech, adding that extra something to an already great program. Penalty kicks are included, along with fights down on the field when two players are struggling for possession of the ball. Pele would have been happy with this simple simulation.

The Slugger has a different flavor altogether. Rife with dancing cheerleaders, The Slugger is a few presses of the button away from a tough battle of computer baseball. Makers of sports games tend to be over-pretentious and tell you how quickly the computer responds to the change in batting average for last season's players, etc. No boring statistical data in these two winners from Mastertronic. Just pick them up and begin playing.

LAS VEGAS VIDEO POKER ••••• VEGAS JACKPOT ••••

These two popular casino games are packaged on the same disk and worth the price for all you gambling addicts. These two programs are simply the best casino slot and video poker machine simulators available. Betting is as simple as pressing the button to deal the cards or pull the "handle" on the slot machine. Addicting in nature, these two had my parents, casino lovers at heart, hooked to the computer for a long time.

THE QUEST FOR THE HOLY GRAIL ••••• / SE-KAA OF ASSIAH •••••

These adventures are two of the most interesting adventure games to hit the market. Finding Holy Grail may be hard, but find you must. This quest is every bit as amusing as the movie from which its plot is drawn. The object is simple enough, find the Holy Grail. Although finding it is not simple — one must pass the exploding rabbit, the three-headed knight and even the knight that "says ni."

Se-Kaa is along a whole different bent than Grail. The aim of the game is to penetrate the Dark Hordes and rescue the Great Artifacts of the Wise Ones, returning them to their rightful places and saving the countryside. Graphic text adventurers take heed. Se-Kaa is a strong challenge with many twists that must be mapped out. It is exactly a two-part game, with 50K of memory for each part.

Queensryche out-barks Ozzy

By RUSS CECCOLA

The bat-biter himself returned to Philly on the second leg of the Ultimate Sin tour last Thursday. Unfortunately, those of you who missed this show didn't miss much — everything was the same as it was last April. The best part was seeing Queensryche, just like April's runaway hit at the Ozzy show was Metallica.

We know Ozzy has to stay up late to change the diapers of his little tots, but come on Ozzy, get rested and give us a longer concert. Osbourne played 12 songs and was on stage for barely an hour and a half. Queensryche lasted 10 stunning numbers at an hour stage time. Now don't get me wrong — Ozzy was great, but I just feel ripped off. I thought the reason Ozzy came back to Philly was to make up for last year when everything was messed up by some sports event at the Spectrum. Boy, was I wrong. He's just getting old and doesn't have that Sabbath spunk anymore.

Queensryche played a lot from their new album, Rage for Order, including their opening number, "Neue Regel." Although only playing for an hour, the Ryche gave Philly 10 of their strongest tunes, also including "The Whisper," "Gonna Get Close to You," "Chemical Youth (We Are Rebellion)," "Walk in the Shadows" and "Surgical Strike" from Rage for Order. The rest of their set was made up of "Night Rider," "Deliverance," "Queen of the Ryche" and "Take Hold of the Flame" for an encore.

Queensryche are an excellent talent — Philly has been waiting for them to return for a while. Lead singer Geoff Tate puts Bruce Dickinson and Michael Sweet to rest with his voice. He has one of the clearest voices that goes high — and he can control it rather than just hit the notes. Tate promised the audience that Queensryche woulld be returning soon, seeming apologetic about not hitting a Philly stage sooner. Maybe they'll come back with another big band soon.

Other members include Eddie Jackson on bass, Michael Wilton and Chris DeGarmo on guitar and Scott Rockenfeld on drums. Rockenfeld has an unusual set, made of the drums and silver pipes — a futuristic-looking thing that fits in well with the new image of Queensryche. Rage for Order is an excellent buy — here's a band that will be big soon.

Now I guess I have to say something about Ozzy — after all, he did headline the show. Osbourne went through a fairly, standard repertoire, coming on stage in his throne which was lowered from rafters of the Spectrum to the stage. Ozzy is one of the last vestiges of heavy metal past, and with all due respect my friend, you need a longer show to legitimately be the main attraction in this town.

The problem is this: The bands get in the Spectrum and lose their heads. They decide that everybody gets a solo. So did Ozzy, with guitarist Jake E. Lee and drummer Randy Castillo both playing alone for about 10 minutes. Their solos were excellent, but the time for more songs was lost. Opening with "Bark at the Moon," the metal massacre began. Only "Shot in the Dark," "Killer of Giants," "Thank God for the Bomb" and "Secret Loser" were played from The Ultimate Sin. Others included "Suicide Solution," "Mr. Crowley," "I Don't Know," "Flying High Again" and "Crazy Train" as well as "Iron Man" and "Paranoid" from Ozzy's Black Sabbath days.

The crowd was in a frenzy, but not many were there, reportedly only 7,000 people. Still, everybody was out of control. Ozzy's show has many bombs and a lot of fire pots, but what made it all worth it was the dove-eater's presence. Ozzy has remained one of the strongest voices in hard rock/metal these days. The light system that Osbourne has is massive. Filling all of the areas around the stage, the trestles were manned by computer and man, proving Ozzy's journey into the modern times. Ozzy was great, but he better play longer next time.

Ellington's musical sounds fill 'Queenie Pie'

By RICHARD ABRAHAM

Queenie Pie
Music by Duke Ellington
Directed by Garth Fagan and Robert Kalfin
Features the Duke Ellington Orchestra

Queenie Pie, in essence, is a show that falls short of its high ambitions, for although it brings us the unique creation of a "street opera" and, in the process, restores to the stage the sweet sounds of Duke Ellington, it just doesn't have that little something extra.

The music, finely crafted by the Ellington orchestra, was enjoyable and, even though it may not have always been top-notch by Ellington standards, it did have many high points. Supported by two talented voices belonging to the bodies of Teresa Burrell (Queenie Pie) and Patty Holley (Cafe O'Lay & Wife No. 1).

"A Blues For Two Women," a soulful tribute to the talents of Ellington, is the show's personal best. Also included among the show's highlights would be "Style," "My Father's Island," "Woman," and Cafe O'Lay's "Creole Love Call."

Unfortunately, the plot doesn't fare as well. Especially prevalent in Act II, the plot is escapist and, to a point, fun, but it is ultimately uninvolving. What is cared for is the music and how a performer sings each song, not what any individual character is saying.

As we are introduced to "The Mythical Kingdom of Harlem," we are invited to the opening of a beauty pageant and discover that the same woman has won the pageant for the past 12 years. However, this year it looks as though Queenie Pie will have a formidable opponent in Cafe O'Lay, a girl from New Orleans. Concerned with defeat, she goes off searching for a desert island containing the magic nucli tree which will bring back her youth.

Once there, she finds a tribe that mirrors, in image, the group back in Harlem. As a result of her adventures on the island, which include a brush with death and teaching the natives how to dance the natural curls back into their hair, she discovers that her vanity has always overshadowed her more emotional needs. An instance? Love.

A project of master composer Duke Ellington, Queenie was conceived by the Duke in the late '50s and became a work in progress throughout the rest of his life. Ambitious in its concept of "street opera," Ellington tried to combine in Queenie Pie the entertainment of "street" song and dance with operatic stylizing in the vocals. What he was aiming for was timelessness.

Queenie Pie was not a priority for Ellington until 1970 when WNET-TV in New York commissioned its completion. After his death in 1974, Queenie Pie was left incomplete at only an hour long. By bringing Queenie Pie to the stage and expanding on this raw form, everyone involved in Queenie Pie and the American Music Theater Festival should congratulate themselves. If boundaries aren't crossed and if new ideas aren't added in the arts, progress in these entertainments would most certainly be minimal.

Lynch unveils the erotic, bizarre 'Blue Velvet'

Blue Velvet
directed by David Lynch

While watching "Blue Velvet" you realize that only a beautiful picture is worth a thousand words. In David ("Eraserhead," "Dune") Lynch's beautiful bizarre, and beautifully bizarre visions you are seeing an erotic comedy-thriller whose visual and aural beauty more than make up for its thin plot.

Since these visions have never been seen before, "Blue Velvet" is a creatively crafted story that has never been told. It takes place in Lumberton. Almost a stereotype of a '50s small-town, Lumberton is a place where the fireman waves to you as the truck goes by and where the white-picket fences are surrounded by red, red roses and blooming tulips. But this idealism is only on the surface of Lumberton. Hidden in its belly is a street where crime and perversion are the norm. One of its inhabitants is Dorothy Vallens (Isabella Rossellini), a nightclub singer at The Slow Club, but more on her later.

Jeffrey Beaumont (Kyle MacLachlan of Lynch's "Dune") first enters into the picture after his father has a seizure of some sort on the family lawn. In walking through the forest after visiting his Dad in the hospital, Jeffrey finds a severed ear. From this point on "Blue Velvet" proceeds as a hallucinogenic and logical nightmare that draws in both Jeffrey and the audience. Becoming obsessed with finding out where the ear has come from and why it was cut, draws Jeffrey into the darkness of Lumberton.

First he goes to the house of Detective Williams to find out what he has learned from the ear since the police department examined it earlier that day. Upon leaving, he meets Sandy (Laura Dern), Detective Williams' daughter who says that she knows "bits and pieces" about the severed ear. A sweet and naive girl who's part of the '50s-type section of town, she leads him to the apartment of Dorothy Vallens, who Jeffrey decides to spy on while hiding in her apartment.

While there, he experiences what are probably "Blue Velvet's" darkest and most bizarre images. Primarily, he sees Dorothy in the act of being a forced sex slave to Frank Booth, Lumberton's crime boss (Dennis Hopper in an unmitigated psychotic performance). After this Jeffrey becomes drawn to her and the town's dark side.

Jeffrey later becomes a sexual partner with Dorothy, a substitute in her mind for Don, Dorothy's husband, who, along with their son, was kidnapped by Frank. Jeffrey continues to live this loving nightmare each evening, while playing friend and lover to Sandy during the day's happier hours in which most of the evening's activities seem like a dream.

"Blue Velvet" is such that even the "normal" acting by Dern and MacLachlan is filmed and accompanied by music that makes normal human behavior seem unusual. In contrast, Rossellini and Hopper are so enveloped in being the story and its characters, that there is no "normal" outside connection to alienate from normalcy, only a bizarre behavior to be made to seem even more bizarre.

With its underlying wit and crackling eroticism, it has been said that "Blue Velvet" isn't a movie that can be judged as being good or bad. Depending upon how you feel when you look below your own surface, you will be either attracted or repelled by Lynch's manifestation. That's all there is to it.

Sailor drifts in Troubled waters and times

By JOE McGOWAN

The Story of A Shipwrecked Sailor
Gabriel Garcia Marquez
Alfred A. Knopf
106 pp.

Knopf has released The Story of A Shipwrecked Sailor to tide fans of Gabriel Garcia Marquez over until his eagerly anticipated new novel is set in print. This latest volume by the Colombian author awarded the 1982 Nobel Prize for Literature is a nonfiction account from his days as a reporter for El Espectador in Bogota.

In 1955 Marquez pursued a story that at first would seize the attention of the Colombian nation and later would incur the wrath of the then current Colombian military regime. It is the story of the sailor Luis Alejandro Velasco, who by a wave was washed overboard from the deck of the navy ship the Caldas, en route to Catagena from Mobile, Ala.

This is the story of a man beset by disaster — of a man who saw four of his shipmates drown and then drifted at sea for 10 days without food or water. It is also the story of a man who, after coming ashore far from home at Uraba, became a national hero (later to be discredited) for surviving a disaster and found himself the star of product advertisements.

Though The Story of A Shipwrecked Sailor is a nonfiction account, the style and tone of the work are unmistakably those of Marquez, for one will note in this account the same ever present sense of some unstoppable fatalistic force at work that permeated his brilliant Chronicle of A Death Foretold.

Some of the brightest and sharpest moments of The Story of A Shipwrecked Sailor come in the introduction to the chronicle of Velasco, in what Marquez calls "The Story of This Story." The key factor in the whole Caldas affair concerned the allegation that the navy ship was carrying contraband, which was strictly prohibited from being aboard a naval vessel. However, as Velasco had calmly recounted, it was quite natural for sailors to bring home American appliances as gifts from their layovers in the States.

While Marquez's story asseverated that such contraband was actually aboard the Caldas (and El Espectador ran photographs of such) the government of General Pinilla categorically denied it: "At that time Colombia was under the military and social dictatorship of General Gustavo Rojas Pinilla, whose two most memorable feats were the killing of students in the center of the capital when the Army broke up a peaceful demonstration with bullets, and the assassination by the secret police of an undetermined number of Sunday bullfight fans who booed the dictator's daughter at the bullring."

Despite such harsh domestic conditions, El Espectador ran Marquez's interviews of Velasco and "the dictatorship countered the blow with a series of dramatic reprisals that would result months later, in the shutdown of the newspaper."

Marquez notes in his foreword that "I find it depressing that the publishers are not so much interested in the merit of the story as in the name of the author, which, much to my sorrow, is also that of a fashionable writer." For we have in The Story of A Shipwrecked Sailor not a novel to be dissected and analyzed, but a tale complete in itself worthy of reading.

Steamy story of the sandy shores of Palm Beach

By MARYANNE ELLIOTT

Palm Beach
Pat Booth
Ballantine Books
506 pp.

Palm Beach is an outrageously sensual novel which seems at the onset to have as its theme nothing more profound than the sordid sexual affairs of the very wealthy. However, once the reader has progressed beyond the first steamy scene from which, incidentally, the rest of the story evolves, one begins to realize that Palm Beach isn't just another "trashy novel."

The story's main character is Lisa. Lisa is the issue of an affair between her mother, Mary-Ellen, and the affluent Senator Stansfield, by whom Mary-Ellen is employed as a maid. Lisa's mother is painfully naive, believing that her physical attractiveness is her ticket to the exclusive world of Palm Beach. She is brought abruptly to her senses when Mrs. Stransfield becomes aware of her husband's indiscreet behavior.

Caroline Stansfield is the epitome of Palm Beach's elite. She is a woman of "phenomenal connections" and fine breeding. She harbors no anger aginst her husband for his infidelity, but is greatly inconvenienced by his lack of discretion. She likes Mary-Ellen, but is forced to fire her for appearance's sake. Mary-Ellen returns to the "wrong-side" of Palm Beach and transfers her aspirations to her daughter Lisa. While Lisa is still young and impressionable, Mary-Ellen elaborates upon the luxury and splendor of Palm Beach life on the "right side." When Mary-Ellen dies, her last words to Lisa are "It's only a bridge away."

As Lisa matures, she becomes obsessed with gaining admittance into the glittering world of the Palm Beach upper echelon. Her main focus in life is to earn enough money to purchase her membership. Affluence, however, is not enough. Power is the name of the game in Palm Beach. It's not what you know, but who you know. Lisa discovers that Palm Beach glitters, but it also has sharp edges. Because she has no connections, Lisa is ostracized by Palm Beach "society."

In order to rectify this situation, she marries an old man for his money and his name. Unfortunately, the "sweet" old man turns out to be a pervert. Because of his bizarre sexual practices, she leaves him, agreeing not to publicly disgrace him in return for the full ownership of his business upon his death. Lisa eventually gains acceptance into the select Palm Beach society, but by the time she accomplishes her goal, she is a woman of ice who repeatedly asks herself, "Is this all that there is?"

This novel is so powerful because it dares to hold up for inspection the elite class of the United States, and consequently directs the question "Is this all that there is?" to the standards and goals projected in the upward struggle toward the hallowed vision of excessive money and "high society."

Amazingly enough, this novel relays some very traditional messages in an extremely decadent setting. The extramarital affairs in the novel are not limited to relations between two members of the opposite sex. There are many lesbian encounters, as well as other types of sexual relationships about which the novel is boldly explicit.

But the underlying messages remain conservative and conventional. Greed destroys the characters in this novel. Greed takes on several forms. It is epitomized as lust, as a hunger for power, and as an obsession with wealth. Lust is the force which consumes one of the secondary characters, Jo-Anne. She is brutally murdered by a pimp after she has hired a female prostitute to perform acts which even the pimp considers unorthodox.

It is a hunger for political power which drives Bobby Stansfield to sacrifice his happiness. All of the characters have an irrational reverence for the almighty dollar which is the malignant disease from which other such sicknesses generate. This novel is totally captivating and its message has a shocking impact which the reader will find impossible to ignore. The lecherous nature of the various personalities is perhaps a bit extravagant, but the book is never boring and is well worth the time that it takes to read its 506 pages.

Mad Raven takes Philadelphia by storm

By CAESAR ETTORE

Philadelphia has been a hard rock/heavy metal fan's delight in the past few weeks with many of the genre's top names making their yearly visits to town. This past weekend, two acts with almost completely opposite philosophies toward hard rock and heavy metal brought their shows to Philly. Bon Jovi, opening for .38 Special, at the Spectrum were out to support their newest lp, Slippery When Wet, while metal's wildest band Raven was on the road to support Mad, their recently released ep.

Bon Jovi, led by lead vocalist John Bon Jovi hit the Spectrum stage to the delight of the practically filled arena. Opening with "Raise Your Hands," the band's set consisted of a good mixture of songs from all three of their albums. Since the last time the band played here opening for Ratt, Bon Jovi have greatly matured as a live band.

While a lot of the focus still seems to be on frontman John Bon Jovi, the rest of the band members are presenting themselves better and it seems that the band is more a band than a vehicle for John Bon Jovi to showcase his talents.

Raven went wild at the Empire Rock Club last Sunday night.

Included in Bon Jovi's set were such hits as "Runaway," "In And Out of Love" and their newest hit single, "You Give Love A Bad Name." The band kept their individual solos short, but Richie Sambora's guitar solo was disappointing compared to his solo during last year's show. The man is a good guitarist and to let him have the spotlight a little longer would undoubtedly improve the show.

Overall, the band was well received by the crowd and they only solidified their already large Philadelphia area following. It shouldn't be too long before Bon Jovi are headlining arenas like the Spectrum. They are a band who appeal to a diverse type of audience rather than just metalheads.

Raven on the other hand, performing at the Empire Rock Club in Northeast Philly, are a band that any real headbanger can get into. The band are the most energetic, wildest and, in my opinion, best live group around these days. The band, consisting of Mark Gallagher (guitar), John Gallagher (bass/vocals) and the over-the-top Wacko (drums), literally abuse their bodies and instruments on stage but at the same time show that they are much better than your average heavy metal musicians. Highlights of the show included the individual solos of each band member, especially the solo of bassist John Gallagher, and the final encore which was total chaos and has to be seen to be believed.

On the music side, the band played material from their first lp all the way through to their new Mad ep. Before an eagerly anticipating crowd, Raven opened with the fast-paced "Hung Drawn & Quartered" from their All For One lp. In no time, the band had the crowd in a frenzy playing both new material such as "Speed Of the Reflex," "On And On," and "The Pack Is Back" as well as such Raven classics like "Rock Until You Drop" and the final encore "Hell Patrol."

A band that really must be seen to be believed, Raven can go up against any band in a live setting — and this show was without the advantage of any kind of stage props because of the size of the Empire. Definitely a band to keep an eye on, this New Castle trio is hot.

Bon Jovi came to the Spectrum last weekend and blew .38 Special off the stage.

Pressley signs with Kings

Former Villanova basketball star Harold Pressley signed a contract with the Sacramento Kings Tuesday. Pressley, the 17th overall pick in last May's collegiate draft, signed a partly guaranteed contract for three years for $240,000 per year. By signing, Pressley will be able to go to the Kings' pre-season camp which opens next week. Pressley finished his career at Villanova as the Wildcats' No. 12 all-time scorer and the No. 5 rebounder.

Wilkins comes to terms

Dominique Wilkins, "the Human Highlight Film," also signed a new contract this week, his with the Atlanta Hawks. Wilkins who was the NBA's leading scorer last season, with a 30.3 points-per-game average, signed a five-year contract worth $6.3 million.

NCAA to begin drug testing

Players participating in football bowl games or NCAA championship events will undergo drug testing, the NCAA revealed earlier this week. The NCAA is currently facing a congressional probe into the usage of drugs in "big-time" college sports. The testing would begin this season with the Division I bowl games and the Division I-AA, II and III championship play-offs. The plan was approved earlier this year at the NCAA's annual convention but the details of the plan have not been revealed.

Cats tread water

By JOSEPH RUSCAVAGE

The men's water polo team lost two of its' first three games but Coach Dan Sharadin believes that his team played "very well in all three of the games."

The team defeated Lynchburg but lost to George Washington University and Queens College. George Washington is one of the two strongest teams in the Southern Conference while Queens College is the defending MidAtlantic Conference Champions, the conference Villanova belongs to.

Queens College defeated the Wildcats 8-4. Coach Sharadin said his team had their "bright moments" and that they played "real well." He also added that the team's new goalie Ed Uy played well and that his development will be the key to the team's season.

The team then rebounded to defeat Lynchburg 10-4. Coach Sharadin pointed out that Lynchburg is the quality of team that the Wildcats "will see normally" and that they "pounded them pretty good" in recording their first win.

The Cats then lost to a good George Washington team 8-4. The team played "a very good game" but they were not strong enough to beat their more experienced opponents. New recruit Matt Jayne played "extremely well" in a losing effort.

The Wildcat volleyballers started the week in fine fashion, beating New York Tech and the University of Delaware in home meets on Wednesday. But on the road in Pittsburgh at the Pitt Classic the 'Cats ran into nationally-ranked California-Santa Barbara and always-tough Pittsburgh. The Wildcats lost to number 12-ranked Santa Barbara 3-0, and to Pittsburgh 3-1, but did manage a 3-0 win over Georgetown. Junior Lori Reiter (Denver, Col.) was named to the Pitt classic all-Tournament team.

Ruggers win two

By SHANA LYNCH

In the first outing of the season, the Villanova Rugby Club beat Iona College in New Rochelle, N.Y. The team as a whole survived Tamaney Hall last Friday, and met at the City Park Gravel Pit for the 1 p.m. match.

The A side, or the first team, or the friends of Joe Guido, won a hard fought match 16-10. Although the score appears close, the match was played primarily on Iona's half of the pitch. Iona scored first on an intercepted pass for the only try of the first half. But President Bill Mentalsicki got things moving for Nova by scoring early in the second half on a nice play, while Matt O'Connor, who later left the game because of an appointment with a plastic surgeon, set a nice pick.

Social Director Matt Lyons scored the next try on a nice pass from Jim Shade. Shade later collided with the nimble footed Brian Davey which resulted in an injury to Davey.

To round out the scoring, 6-foot, 8-inch senior Captain Big Dan Griffin made a full tilt run at Iona. The handsome Tim Whelan converted on two of the three tries. Chris McStarr later noted that, "Timmy had three tough kicks, and he made two of them." Senior Captain Greg "Hoss" Poch also applauded the efforts of Rick, StarTrek, Carlo Dinota and Denis "Babyface" Graeber.

The Killer B's stepped on Iona's B squad, and produced two Zulu warriors in doing so. Senior Resident Assistant Ken Justice scored an unusual hat trick with three tries. Mike "Stripe" McMorrow scored his first and second tries of his career, while Dapper Dan Kittridge, a rookie rugger, also scored his first career try. Wild Bill Secord was five for six in conversions in this lopsided 34-0 win. Dave Walsh felt that, "The B-pack played tough today, I mean Bri-Cogs, Pat Keenan, and Pat Donahoe are all tough cookies."

The C team lost 3-0 after staging a gutsy 20 minute goal line stand. The C's were led by Gary "Chicken Legs" Deegan, but for the most part it was the first match most had ever played in.

Men's soccer nets two wins

By DANTE SCALA

The men's soccer team took their first major test of the season this past week, and passed with flying colors, defeating West Chester, 1-0, and Haverford, 3-2. These two victories raised the Wildcats' record to 3-2.

The squad's win against Haverford on Sept. 19 was especially important, since the team had not won against their rivals since 1981. They came out with great intensity, while Haverford had problems adjusting to the artificial turf and struggled during the first half.

Freshman John Bond scored his first two goals of the season to give the Wildcats a 2-0 lead. His first goal came on a breakaway, and he scored the second on a follow-up of sophomore Keith Schuster's shot off the crossbar.

In the second half, Schuster came back to score on an 18-yard kick which curved just inside the near post past a stunned Haverford goalkeeper. "It was one of the finest goals I've seen in a long time," said Assistant Coach Todd Zimmerman. However, Zimmerman cited that the team "may have gotten overconfident" with a 3-0 lead, and their opponents never gave up.

Haverford came storming back with two goals in 10 minutes, and dominated the second half. In the final minutes, Haverford took several shots on goal, all of which senior goalkeeper Brendan Quinn managed to save in a great performance. Zimmerman praised Quinn, stating that "He kept us in the game, and was responsible for saving it and holding the win." He went on to say, "Give Haverford credit [for their comeback], but give our boys credit for holding on with all that pressure."

The squad responded to pressure again Sept. 17, showing their mettle with a tough 1-0 victory at West Chester. In the first 25 minutes, the team "put on a soccer clinic... it was as good as I've seen Villanova play," stated Zimmerman. The Wildcats played together and were much more cohesive than in past matches. Playing on a large grass field gave the players more time and space, and the ball had less bounce than it would have on the artificial turf of Villanova Stadium; both of these factors enabled the squad to have more control of the ball.

The lone goal of the game was scored by junior Ben Tatta, off a rebound of another Schuster shot off the crossbar. West Chester had opportunities to score, but the Wildcats stopped all of their attempts. Goalkeeper Quinn had six saves en route to his first collegiate shutout.

Recently elected captains Brendan Quinn and junior Tom Barrett both had fine performances during the past week. Quinn had two good games in goal, while Barrett played well at right fullback.

The Wildcats' recent victories has "built some confidence in the players," according to Zimmerman. This confidence will be needed in upcoming matches, when the team's response to pressure will be tested again.

Women Cats claw ACC foes

By STEVE SHMUKLER

Villanova's women's soccer team, with just three seniors, improved its record to 4-1-2 with two wins and a tie over the last week.

After an easy 13-0 defeat of Big Five rival LaSalle College, Villanova travelled to the Virginia Classic where they tied host Virginia 2-2 and defeated Maryland 4-1.

In the first game last week, the women's soccer team easily handled LaSalle, setting two scoring records. With 12 different players scoring 13 goals, the women were able to set new marks for most goals and most players scoring goals. LaSalle, having just started their soccer team with walk-ons and freshmen, was not much of a match for Villanova.

"They are a brand new team who did not get a chance to do any recruiting," Villanova Coach Don Paxson explained.

"It gave me a chance to see the freshmen on my team play. They really enjoyed themselves," Paxson added.

The University of Virginia proved to be a different story, though. Virginia opened up the scoring halfway through the first period. Four minutes into the second half Virginia struck again to take a 2-0 lead. However, they would manage only two more shots the rest of the game, allowing Villanova to tie the game midway through the second period. With just 16 minutes gone in the second period, Janine McLee deflected a shot by Jean Hajjar into the Virginia net. Four minutes later Ann Beirne evened the score on a pass from Ann Brennan and Lauren Anderer. Villanova did not allow the Virginia team to penetrate midfield for the rest of the game, including two overtimes, but they were unable to put the ball in the goal themselves and the game ended tied at 2-2.

"It took us a little while to get started, but I was very pleased with the way they turned it around in the second half. They played the finest soccer I have seen in the second half and the two overtime periods," Paxson commented. "Virginia is a top flight team with three of the best players down the center that we will face all season. It was the most meaningful game that we have played," Paxson added.

The next day, Villanova, facing a Maryland team who handed them a 3-0 loss last season, Villanova got off to a good start and triumphed 4-1.

With the game scoreless, Villanova goalie Lynn McHale made a great save on a Maryland breakaway. Ann Brennan came back with a goal off of a Beirne penalty shot to put the Wildcats ahead 1-0 in the first period.

"After the two OT's the previous day, I didn't expect the women to be at their peak. But we were able to handle Maryland fairly well. We missed one penalty kick and had another goal called back, but I was very pleased with their efforts," Paxson said.

Cats break tape first

The women's and men's cross country seasons opened last weekend, when they travelled to College Park Md., for quadrangular meets with University of Maryland, Georgetown University, and George Mason University.

The women's team got off to a good season start and established themselves as one of this year's national powers by finishing the meet with 25 points. Their closest competitor was Maryland, who finished second with 43 points. George Mason and Georgetown finished third and fourth, respectively.

Villanova's women's team placed five runners in the top 10. Gina Procaccio and Vicki Huber crossed the finish line as a tandem to win the 5,000-meter race with a time of 17:21. Rounding out Villanova's top-10 finishers are Kathy Franey (4th — 17:36), Ruth Lockbaum (8th — 17:59), and Dolores Carapella (10th — 18:13).

Gerry O'Reilly was the first Wildcat across the finish line of the 5.1 mile course (5th — 25:50).

Wildcats devour opponents, 40-6

By MICHAEL IRONS

Villanova's football team renewed its winning tradition this season with a 40-6 dissecting of the Iona Gaels last Friday. The victory was the sixth straight since the reinstitution of the program and showed the rapid improvements the team has made under Coach Andy Talley.

"You are always satisfied to win your season opener," said Talley and he had plenty to be satisfied with.

Villanova racked up 510 yards of total offense, 357 yards on the ground and 153 yards through the air. For the first game of the season and with quarterback Kirk Schulz making his first regular season start, these are impressive numbers. Schulz connected on 12 out of 16 of his passes for 108 yards, without an interception, before leaving the game.

Another outstanding performance was turned in by sophomore fullback Gary Pascoe. Pascoe rambled for 104 yards on 11 carries and scored a touchdown.

Villanova's defense was also impressive.

"Our defense was aggressive and dominating," Talley said of his defense which allowed only 184 yards of total offense. The Wildcat defense against the run was especially tough, surrendering only a net total of 33 yards to the Gaels. Noseguard Ted White was prominent, recording six tackles, two of which were in the Iona offensive back-field for losses. Also having good games were sophomore defensive tackle Mike Feeley and freshman linebacker Dan Falasca, each making seven tackles, with Falasca making one behind the line of scrimmage.

Also of note was the play of strong safety Bobby Rosato. The senior defensive back intercepted a pair of passes, returning one of the "pick-offs" 19 yards for a touchdown in the second quarter to give the Wildcats a 14-0 lead.

The Wildcats got on the board first with all the points they would need, mid-way through the first quarter. Pascoe topped off a five-play, 47-yard drive with a two-yard scamper for six points and when freshman kicker Paul Colonna connected on the extra point, the onslaught was on its way.

"We could have made it 100 points if we wanted to, but that's not the idea," Coach Talley said.

On Iona's series following Rosato's interception for a touchdown, the Gaels drove the length of the field to the Wildcat 17-yard line. This drive was stopped cold when Rosato stepped in front of wide receiver Robert Dilullio and picked off his second pass of the afternoon.

Villanova took advantage of the turnover by marching the length of the field, aided by costly Iona penalties. Schulz capped the drive with a one-yard dive and with the extra point, Villanova had a 21-0 lead.

Colonna finished the first half scoring with his first field goal, of 24 yards, for Villanova.

The rout continued with the first play of the second half, when sophomore Dan Fortin reeled off a 59-yard touchdown run to boost the score to 30 to 0. Colonna missed the extra point but later made amends by booting his second field goal of the game, this one coming from 35 yards out. The Wildcat scoring was rounded out by freshman fullback John Karoly who scored on a 15-yard run.

"In total, we made a lot of first game mistakes. The idea [in a season opener] is to do a good job and correct our mistakes. The score is insignificant," Talley said.

Iona's only score, their first touchdown in three games, came late in the last quarter when Dilullio hit Rich Seta on a 30-yard pass to avoid another shut-out.

Punter George Winslow picked up right where he left off last season with another impressive outing. The senior booted four times for 167 yards for a 41.8 average. Winslow started the season off on the right foot.

"We controlled the line of scrimmage both offensively and defensively," Coach Talley said. On the offensive line the praise should go to the starters who blew away the Iona defenders and opened huge gaps in the Gael defensive front. Dave Pacitti, Paul Beradelli, Tony Corbo, Jim Donaway and Jon Fletcher all played exceptionally well and proved why Coach Talley had so much confidence in them.

The defense, sparked by the play of White and Feeley on the line and Rosato in the secondary, played tough all night even when the game was secured. The play of the back-ups, mostly freshmen, allowed them to get some much needed experience which, if it does not prove useful this season will definitely be beneficial next season.

Tomorrow the Cats will shoot for their second win this season, their eighth in a row over two seasons, when Villanova takes on powerful Mercyhurst. The game will be televised on Channel 57 at 1:30 p.m.

CAT SCRATCHES:

Senior Bobby Rosato's 19-yard touchdown return on his interception was Villanova's first touchdown by an interception since Nov. 16, 1980 when ex-Philadelphia Eagle returned an interception 26 yards against Holy Cross ... The last Wildcat to record two interceptions in a game was present Wildcat John McGowan against Catholic University last season ... Pascoe became the 66th player to record over 100-yards rushing in a game ... Coach Talley is the first Villanova head coach to win his first six games at the school ... Villanova has won five straight road games: Iona, Catholic, Fordham, Holy Cross and Penn.

Cats rule summer tracks

By JIM FASULO

If there was one particular effort that stood out as the top performance in this summer season of track and field for Villanova it is hard to pinpoint it. The Wildcat men were not content with both IC4A and Big East Indoor and Big East Outdoor titles, and the record dictates it.

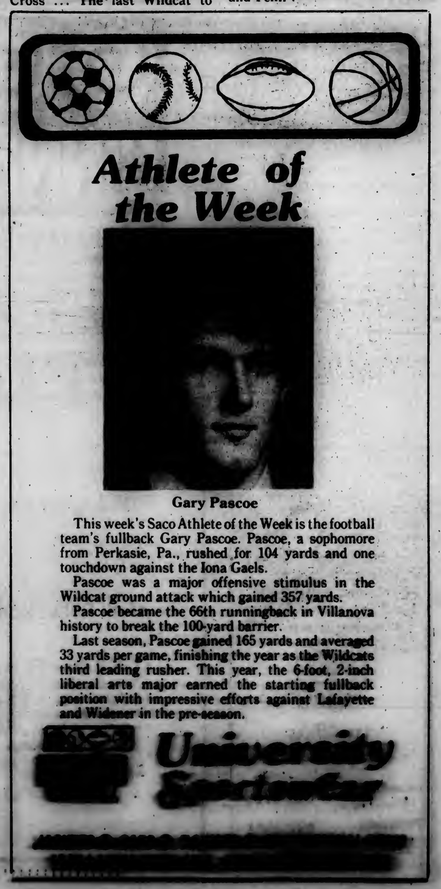
Beginning the season at the Jumbo Elliot Track, the sprinters or low mid-distance runners got off to a tear at the IC4A championships. Edwin Modibedi burned the 400-meter field with 45.9 personal best. Tony Valentine cracked the 50-second barrier with a 49.93 timing in the 400 hurdles, and ex-teammate Martin Booker recorded a 13.77 second place finish in the 110 hurdles.

The Irish Pipeline is not to be forgotten. Villanova's Gerry O'Reilly, with this summer's effort, placed himself "in the category of some of this school's greatest milers," said Head Coach Charles Jenkins. O'Reilly started at the IC4A's, where he doubled in both the 1,500 meters (3.42.53) and the 5,000 (13.59).

O'Reilly ran to a fifth place time of 3.43.5 at the NCAA championships, behind Oregon's talented Duck, Dub Meyers. But it was the prestigous Jumbo Elliot Invitational where he would start his streak.

Perhaps the most outstanding effort at the NCAA's by the Cats came in the mile relay, where they ran to a school record fourth place finish of 3.02.95. Nova's leading 400 men, Modibedi and Chip Jenkins, (lost from graduation) both registered 44.9 splits in that race.

Martin Booker finished off his career in good standing with the Wildcats, breaking his personal best in a third place effort at the NCAA's (13.5)



As noted in the Villanovan's first issue this semester, O'Reilly's effort in the Jumbo Elliot Invitational was simply his best in the 1,600-meter distance. His 3.54 timing slashed a previous best by seven seconds, and paved the way for other sub-four minutes clockings abroad. Booker grabbed second place in the 110 high hurdles in 13.5, and Modibedi broke the 45-second barrier for the second time (45.9).

The Wildcat women were not as busy as their male counterparts, but highlighted races were an ECAC two-mile relay championship in 8.57, consisting of Cassy Bradley, Michelle Dimuro, Celeste Halliday and of course, Debbie Grant.

Grant earned All-American honors for the fourth time (including indoors) after she ran a strong 2.03.87 time in the NCAA Championships 800 meters. She then equaled that performance at Penn, capturing third place in 2.03.9.

Gary Pascoe

This week's Saco Athlete of the Week is the football team's fullback Gary Pascoe. Pascoe, a sophomore from Perkasie, Pa., rushed for 104 yards and one touchdown against the Iona Gaels.

Pascoe was a major offensive stimulus in the Wildcat ground attack which gained 357 yards.

Pascoe became the 66th runningback in Villanova history to break the 100-yard barrier.

Last season, Pascoe gained 165 yards and averaged 33 yards per game, finishing the year as the Wildcats third leading rusher. This year, the 6-foot, 2-inch liberal arts major earned the starting fullback position with impressive efforts against Lafayette and Widener in the pre-season.

Villanova leaders to unite against drug problems

By BRIAN D. WEBB

Spurred on by President Reagan's anti-drug movement, several Villanova administrators are currently in the process of forming a committee to evaluate the extent of the University's drug problem.

"Everyone should be made aware from day one that drugs on campus, used or sold by anyone, are a thing of the past," Reagan said last August. At that time, he requested that college presidents, school administrators and student organizations develop proposals to crack down on drug abuse.

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, said he is now setting up a drug committee that will be responsible for developing a new University drug policy.

"The committee will consider the problems and see what we can do both in terms of preventive measures of control and rehabilitation if necessary," Driscoll said.

A major issue that the committee is expected to consider is whether students, faculty and administrators should be required to undergo random drug tests. President Reagan supports such tests for federal employees in sensitive jobs and many feel this policy should be extended to schools and the workplace.

Janice Janosik, associate director of Residence Life and a possible member of Driscoll's drug committee, said she would support random drug testing of students, faculty and administrators.

"I don't think drug testing is a violation of a person's rights when that person is affecting another person's rights or the reputation of the University," Janosik said.

of Residence Life

Joe Allman, Student Government president and another possible member of the drug committee, said he would oppose any effort to require random drug tests.

"I'd be strongly against it," Allman said. "It's a violation of privacy. It's not giving people the benefit of the doubt. Whatever happened to innocent before proven guilty?"

Allman said, however, that he would support drug tests if there is a specific problem with a specific person. "If it affects other people, then I can see superiors stepping in," he said.

The chairman of the drug committee is expected to be Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of Student Life. Neville said he opposes random drug testing because he does not want the University to "create an atmosphere of fear."

"I'm all for cracking down on users and distributors, but I don't see drugs as a major problem at Villanova," Neville said.

According to University records, there were 25 marijuana-related incidents last year. The punishment for each case was academic probation. During the summer, however, the University increased the punishment for marijuana users. There is now a $100 fine in addition to the academic probation penalty.

"Marijuana was not treated as

V.U. may get room phones

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

After determining that the University's communications capabilities require a tremendous renovation, the telecommunications department is currently conducting an ongoing, in-depth evaluation of the present and future needs of Villanova students, faculty and staff. The department recently narrowed its choices down to two companies that could provide Villanova with such an overhaul.

One of the major aspects of this communications renewal, according to Don Hoover, director of telecommunications, would be the ability to provide telephone service to each room, and perhaps to each individual, in all of the dormitories on campus. Those students in dormitories in which telephones can currently be hooked up will pay much less under the proposed system.

There has been increasing student pressure to expand the number of telephones for students on campus. Student Government has recently formed an internal committee, chaired by Johanne C. Sharp, to deal with the problem. Sharp explained, "We are in the process of sending around a petition requesting that the University take a more active role in dorm improvement, such as installing phone jacks in every room on main campus housing and increasing laundry facilities."

Hoover, who has spoken to many groups regarding telephone service for students, said, "I do perceive a very honest and real concern in the members of the staff and faculty that I have talked with towards the needs of the student population, especially those in the dormitories as it pertains to this proposal.

"There is unanimous agreement that there has to be some cost on the part of the students [for telephone service], but there is also unanimous agreement that great care must be taken that we don't become financially exploitative of the student. We ultimately want a situation from which both the University and the student will benefit," he said.

In addition to normal telephone service in the dormitories, the telecommunications department also plans to make available an option called simultaneous voice data capability. With this service, one could access a database from a computing center on campus by telephone and still make and receive telephone calls. There would be a cost for this capability of approximately $50 to $100 a semester.

Besides the changes in the dormitories, there would be a renewal of faculty and staff telephone service. Currently there is a "star-type configuration" in which all on-campus calls first go through Kennedy Hall. The new service, according to Hoover, would provide direct lines through-

Storm knocks out power

By DENISE M. TYSON

Last Friday, a thunderstorm knocked down the power lines along the Septa Paoli transit line which caused a power outage around 9:30 p.m. that affected main campus as well as south campus. Full electrical power was restored to south campus by 10:30 p.m. and main campus by 2:30 a.m., according to Edward Meagher, Maintenance supervisor.

As soon as the blackout occurred, a backup generator for Connelly Center began to operate and fuel the building with auxiliary lighting. The generator used to power Dougherty Hall had been vandalized earlier in the day, therefore, it was unable to function when needed, said Meagher.

From noon to 6 p.m. Sunday, a scheduled power outage on the main campus was in effect. Philadelphia Electric Company (PECO) had scheduled this time in order to repair a switch that conducted electricity from the transformers to the buildings.

Both Connelly Center and Dougherty Hall were working at full capacity during this time, but Villanova Maintenance had to repair some of its own switches before the power could be turned back on at 6 p.m.

Meagher found both situations controllable but was disappointed with student behavior. "In the past, the students have been very, very cooperative with similar situations, but this time they seemed to be deliberately interfering and tampering with our efforts to correct the electrical shortage," said Meagher.

Football ticket sales are high

The athletic department expects sold-out crowds for the Villanova football team's home games this season.

"Sold-out crowds" are expected for the Villanova football team's home games this season, according to Bill McDonough, director of marketing and promotions for Athletics.

Last year, all three of Villanova's home games were sold-out, and McDonough said that this year all five are expected to do just as well. The game against Buffalo Oct. 4 marks the first home game of the 1986 season, and McDonough said that sales are going great.

"This year's sales are ahead of last year's, and we expect a good turnout for all games except Ursinus, which is during Fall Break," McDonough said.

Head Football Coach Andy Talley is "very pleased" with the football program and ticket sales. According to Talley, the support is "tremendous," especially in a rebuilding situation such as Villanova's.

Villanova is in its second year of a four-year rebuilding program and many of the teams played are not familiar to the fans. Talley said it is therefore often harder for fans "to get psyched" for the games. He said however, "There

Advisory system examined

By DANTE SCALA

Paul Mullen, secretary of Student Government's Department of Academic Affairs, stated that Kris Kreisel, the assistant secretary of Student Government's department of academic affairs, is currently in the process of creating a University-wide survey on academic advisement "to determine the areas of the University in which advisement is lacking, both major-wise and college-wise, as well as possible methods of improving it."

Mullen said that the Student Government poll, which will be worked on during the first semester, is being conducted in part as a response to " ... complaints from numerous individuals that they don't receive any advisement; that during pre-registration, they don't even see an academic advisor, but just have a secretary that brings in a schedule to be signed."

While Mullen stressed that "many students do get fine advisement," the quality of advisement is "not uniform throughout the University," and that there "possibly is room for improvement." Also, Mullen said that "possibly during the first two years, more advisement is needed."

Academic advisement will be "one of the priorities" of the Student Government's Department of Academic Affairs this year, he said.

Academic advisement differs in each college. In the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, freshmen and sophomores in their first semester can go to the Rev. William McGuire, O.S.A., and Dr. Helen Lafferty for advisement in Tolentine 113. After a student declares his major, he is then

According to David Leibig, a career counselor at Villanova, the forum will consist of colleges and universities with graduate schools in law, social work, business and the arts and sciences.

The forum will provide an excellent opportunity to investigate graduate programs in different schools, Leibig said.

The program will be informal and open, consisting of information tables for each school with admissions representatives available to talk with students. N.F.

The process of rejuvenating the telephone system began in September 1985 when the University sent out Requests for Information (RFI's) to seven different communications companies, to be provided no later than the end of October 1985.

After evaluating the seven companies and discussing the subject with "several upper-level people," the telecommunications department put out requests for proposals which, Hoover said, "delineated what the University sees their needs to be and gives vendors the ability to accurately respond."

Following extensive evaluation, five of the companies that submitted proposals were eliminated. The two companies that still remain are ROLM, a subsidiary of IBM, and Bell of Pennsylvania. The two companies offer separate disciplines, each possessing distinct advantages, according to Hoover.

On Sept. 24, the telecommunications department presented the results of their findings to the Administrative Computing Advisory Committee (ACAC) and then met with the Educations Computing Advisory Committee (ECAC) on Sept. 25.

The conversion of the University's communications system will require major construction, including digging up portions of the campus, according to Hoover. The telecommunications department wants to make sure that no present or future needs are omitted so that there can be an all-encompassing change so that no further communications renovations will be necessary for the rest of the century.

The project would involve a labor-intensive program associated with great equipment and manpower costs, according to Hoover. The entire project is estimated at between $5 million and $10 million. Hoover stated that, "Because of the magnitude of our proposal, we must enumerate all needs before requesting funding."

Completion of the entire overhaul, which would be done in incremental stages, should occur 14 to 16 months after negotiations, according to Hoover.

LAURA LESPERANCE

Order of Omega salutes Laura Lesperance as this weeks' Greek of the Week! Laura, a proud sister of Alpha Chi Omega, recently outdid herself by organizing the 1986 Formal Sorority Rush. Since returning to Villanova in late August, Laura has been getting ready for this great event. Laura could often be seen running from meeting to meeting wearing the highly coveted and sought after Rush Season T-shirt.

It has also been rumored that Laura, a senior finance major, has been investing in many of the copy and print shops along the Main Line where she has since become such a loved and well-known customer in the past month. Besides being the Panhellenic Rush Chairperson, Laura serves the Villanova Greek community as the secretary of the Order of Omega Honor Society.

Not limiting herself to solely Greek activites, Laura can be seen crossing the campus pointing out the various handouts to prosepctive Villanovans as a member of the Blue Key Society. Applying her undying spirit and dedication in the community, Laura serves on the Special Olympics Games Committee. This year Laura is in charge of organizing the various booths found on Sheehan Beach on Special Olympics Day. As if that's not enough, our beloved Rush Queen will be seen at the home football games as an intregal part of Villanova's Tailgate Management Team.

On a local level, Laura recently chaired the Villanova vs. Short Men battle held in Sea Isle City, N.J. on the weekend of Sept. 12. If you really want to make Laura's day, ask her about the Genesis concert she saw last Saturday. Now that Rush is over, Laura has been passing her time preparing for next semester's Stress Management class. We're all confident she'll do a great job. Congratulations again to Laura — Villanova is lucky to have you.

Radnor Township Police said last week that over 70 Villanova students have been arrested so far this semester.

Student arrests rise

By MEG KLUCSARITS

Being arrested at an off-campus party has become a reality to more than 70 Villanova students this semester.

Radnor Township Police Chief Maurice Hennessey said earlier this week that although "the overall behavior is good," there has been a slight increase in arrests from last year.

The reasons for these arrests are mostly alcohol-related, Hennessey said. The charges range from disorderly conduct to carrying open alcohol containers in public. When a student is arrested, he is issued a citation and a fine ranging from $50 to $300.

Judicial Affairs Officer Steve McWilliams said that because of the shortage of housing, there is a great conflict between residents in quiet neighborhoods and off-campus students having loud parties. He said, however, that the students are members of the community and it is not the responsibility of the University to police the surrounding townships.

McWilliams added that the University does reserve the right to exercise its discretion in cases where the University's reputation is involved.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A, dean of students, said in an article published in the Philadelphia Inquirer last Thursday that he feels the problem will decrease as the semester goes on because of colder weather and students not having as much money.

New teachers hired

By SUZANNE BYRNE

The Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president of Academic Affairs, recently released a list of 45 new full-time faculty members for the fall semester. Faculty additions have been made in 22 departments.

A spokesperson for the office of Academic Affairs said that most of the new faculty members are replacements for faculty that left Villanova last semester.

New faculty in the department of religious studies are the Rev. Joseph Loya, O.S.A., Dr. Mary Rose D'Angelo, Dr. R. Emmel McLaughlin, and the Rev. Michael O'Connor, CSSR.

Four faculty additions in the economics department are Dr. Shams Inati are new to the Philosophy department.

Four faculty additions in the Economics department are Dr. Lori F. Gearing, Dr. Eva M. Leeds, Dr. John O. Matthews, and Elaine Webster.

Other new full-time faculty members include: James Borden and Dr. Kenneth M. Hiltebitel, accountancy; Lt. John D. Buziak, USN, and Capt. Charles D. Shields, USN, naval science;

Judge rules to keep shanties

A federal judge recently ruled University of Utah anti-apartheid demonstrators do not have to tear down their symbolic "shanties" even if they have become a target for vandals.

In his ruling, U.S. District Judge Aldon Anderson effectively declared the national anti-apartheid campus movement has become an insurance hazard, but that it should not be enough to shut the movement down.

The anti-apartheid students themselves tend to blame conservative students for the vandalism that has plagued them with increasing frequency since last fall, though the conservatives deny the charges.

Arsonists torched shanties at Indiana during the summer, while at the peak of the spring protest season vandals wrecked or defaced the "shelters" — meant to symbolize the poverty of black citizens of segregationist South Africa — at Berkeley, Stanford, Yale, North Carolina, Dartmouth, Missouri and Maryland, among other campuses.

The hazards persuaded officials at a number of colleges to ask protestors to dismantle the structures before someone got hurt, and the schools themselves were held liable.

University of Utah President Chase Peterson, for one, cited safety and liability problems when he asked students to dismantle the shanties.

But Judge Anderson last week ruled that, while Peterson could impose "reasonable" restrictions on use of the shanties, dismantling them would violate the protestor's rights to express themselves politically.

The university is appealing the ruling.

The shanties in Dunn Meadow, erected in April, have been the target of five attacks. BB guns, eggs, chemicals, tear gas and a Molotov Cocktail have all come hurtling toward the buildings and their occupants.

On Aug. 18, two of the buildings were burned to the ground. No one was injured, and no one has been arrested in connection with the incident.

Josh Nessen of the American Committee on Africa, which coordinates national campus anti-apartheid activities each spring and fall, blamed the Republican Party.

Student clubs established

By CAROLYN R. MIRABILE

A large number of student organizations have been established this year, according to Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities. "Students are becoming more involved in student activities because there is an overall academic awareness as a result of our higher standard of admissions," he said.

About one-half of the new clubs which are started at Villanova, will last for more than a year, Bonas said. Furthermore, he commented that their survival "depends on the number of active students who are in a club and how much enthusiastic support they have from their members and the faculty."

New clubs which have started this year include the Social Activities on Campus Committee, which wants to improve the campus social life, and Students Concerned about Central America. Other clubs which have been revitalized are the Chess Club and the Quarterdeck Society, a naval interest group.

In addition, the Villanova Organization for Women changed its name to the Women's Studies Society and the Communication Arts Society changed its name to Women in Communications.

Student Activities requires a club to consist of 12 members who are in good standing, and a faculty advisor. In addition, they must have a constitution which not only complies with the University's policies but lists the group's goals, objectives and reason for their existence.

"The purpose of the organization must be consistent with the missionary statement of the University," Bonas said.

Robin Williams comes to V.U.

made available to parents through the Parents' Weekend brochure, which contained a small description of the concert in case parents wished to purchase tickets ahead of time.

Bonas believes the tickets being sold to students will sell out quickly.

Robin Williams was not chosen for the sole reason that he is a comedian. Bonas said there are many deciding factors. One must see what performers are available on a certain weekend.

"It is easier for a comedian to please more people than a musician." Bonas said. "One must remember the wide range of ages that will be present in the audience. The music enjoyed by students may not be [enjoyed] by their parents."

Lisa Sheehy, concerts coordinator for the Villanova Union, is hoping the concert will be a big success this weekend.

The concert will be opened with a novelty comedy act by the Raspini Brothers. Then, Robin Williams takes the stage for anywhere from an hour to an hour and 15 minutes.

Sheehy said Williams will probably use some type of audience participation during the performance. The Union agreed in the contract to purchase props for the concert and is trying to find unusual, creative toys that are "big and whacked-out," she said.

Also being purchased are small gifts to be presented to Williams in his dressing room prior to the concert. One gift already purchased is a small Villanova sweatsuit for Williams' young son.

Student opinion regarding the concert has been favorable. "He should be really funny" and "I can't wait to see him," was the general consensus from students asked about the concert. One sophomore replied, "He should be awesome — as long as they don't censor him."

The turnout for this concert will be a deciding factor in the type and quality of future concerts here at Villanova. "One must always go back to past events and study them to find out what will work best in the future," Bonas said.

Campuses face housing shortages

By KAREN ZIEBELL

Gary Anderson, a pre-med freshman at Notre Dame, has started his college career living with three other students in a study lounge "small enough for just one, really."

Anderson, who gamely added, "It's not that bad," is not the only college student being wedged into study lounges, small dorm spaces, single dorm rooms and other nooks and crannies this fall as scores of campuses nationwide suffer from an unexpected, though probably temporary, on-campus housing shortage again.

The culprit, they said, is an unanticipated flood of new freshmen.

So many new freshmen registered at Emory University in Atlanta, for example, that administrators offered upperclassmen $1,000 or a luxury off-campus apartment if they agreed to move out of the dorms.

Duke, Alabama, Florida, Cal-Davis and, according to one national campus housing official, "the great majority" of colleges across the country are running out of room to house students on-campus this fall.

"It wasn't supposed to happen at all," said James Grubb, president of the Association of College and University Housing Officers (ACUHO).

"We all looked at shrinking enrollments through the 1980s and 1990s," he said. Colleges didn't buy or build new dorms because, "Housing was expected to stay steady or decline during that period."

Grubb feels colleges simply have misjudged enrollment trends, which were supposed to head downward because there are fewer 18-year-olds in the population.

College enrollment did fall two percent last year, a College Board census released last week showed, but it has been steady through the decade.

Grubb is not sure why some schools have stayed so crowded. "Although colleges are actively marketing themselves, I don't think that in itself would explain the increases in housing demands."

Freshmen may gravitate toward dorms for social reasons. "Students who are new to the community have no sense of belonging, no friends yet," said Alabama Housing Chief Tom Strong. Dorms offer easy ways to develop them.

"There are money reasons, too. I wouldn't make a blanket statement that dorm living is cheaper," Grubb said, "But it is still a fairly economical way to live and eat while you're in school."

Not all college dorms, of course, are overcrowded. The University of Texas at El Paso (UTEP) closed one of its dorm towers this fall.

"We would need about 100 more students to reopen the tower," said housing director Becky Baker, who explains UTEP's large number of commuter students has probably muted demand for dorm rooms on campus.

Grubb is "surprised" to hear of UTEP's decision at a time when is good fan support, and the student support is phenomenal."

Talley said, "It is important to do well at the gate," because he believes that, "The ticket sales and support are very important to a team because no [Division] I-AA team can be self supporting unless they are in a bowl game."

Many students interviewed this week said that they had not purchased football tickets, but would probably end up going to the games anyway. Many also said that, even though the teams are not familiar, the fact that the team wins is important. One student said, "No one wants to go to see their team lose."

Penn State offers dialysis dorm

Six students who have kidney disease and need dialysis treatment are able to attend Pennsylvania State University thanks to the "dialysis dorm" located three blocks from the campus. The dorm, containing a dialysis unit, doctors' and nurses' offices and a dining hall, should be entirely completed in three to four months.

Tuition, room, board, books and expenses are estimated at $9,000 a year for in-state students living in the dorm and $12,000 a year for out-of-state students. This is approximately $3,000 more than the amount paid by regular Penn State students for tuition, room, and board.

The dorm, which is not affiliated with the University, will provide furnished apartments, special meals prepared by a dietitian, transportation to the hospital for a dialysis treatment, and a counselor for residents.

"This gives me a chance to do what I always wanted to do — go to college and get a degree," said one student living in the dorm.

John McQueary, project administrator and treasurer of the nonprofit corporation that runs the program, said that the dialysis dorm is "the only one in the country." N.G.M.

Faculty accepts retirement program

Brown University reported this week that their plan to encourage faculty members to retire early, adopted in 1981, is gaining acceptance among the faculty. The plan, offers financial incentives for faculty between the ages of 60 and 67 to retire.

A professor retiring before 65 would be given a stipend of approximately 30 percent of his salary. The percentage would decrease to 20 percent if the faculty member retired at age 66, and to 10 percent if he waited until age 67. No incentives are offered beyond that age. N.G.M.

Purdue begins alcohol program

Purdue University officials feel there is a need for a communication program to raise awareness and to promote responsible drinking versus abstinence, James Westman, chairman of Purdue's Climate of Campus and Community Committee, said recently.

The committee suggested involving a communication class or even a public relations firm to act as consultants to the problem.

Dean of students, Barbara Cook, said that Purdue is too institutionalized at times. Since it is difficult to travel to other locales from Purdue's campus, Cook feels it might be beneficial for the school to be a little less structured. E.S.D.

Committee to fight drug use

seriously in the past," said the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students. "Before it was treated more like alcohol. The sanctions were so light; we gave the impression that it was acceptable.

The University still considers cocaine offenses to be more serious than marijuana and therefore places a more severe punishment on such offenders. This distinction, between marijuana and other drugs, however, is expected to be a topic of concern for the drug committee. Stack said he expects to see marijuana offenses treated more severely in the future.

But Stack said he is more concerned with students who are "recreational users" of cocaine at certain social situations (such as semi-formal dances), than he is with the percentage of students who are marijuana users.

"The physical ramifications are more serious with cocaine," Stack said. "The cost is higher and that's sometimes connected with theft on campus."

Another issue the drug committee is expected to consider is the impact of the NCAA's new drug testing rule. Villanova basketball players this week signed waivers stating that they would submit to the drug tests if the Wildcats are one of the 64 teams in the NCAA tournament this season.

According to an administrator who asked not to be named, the University has been involved in "a few" drug-related investigations of athletes in the past. One athlete on a major Villanova team was investigated for using cocaine, but he was never accused. This student, however, has since left his job to seek drug rehabilitation, according to the administrator.

"I think a lot of the national concern about drugs has been a result of the Len Bias case," the administrator said. Bias was a basketball star at the University of Maryland who died from cocaine intoxication this summer.

The drug committee is expected to begin work within the next week, and a new policy should be written by the end of the school year.

Austin pipe fixed

A 36-year-old steam pipe in front of Austin Hall was recently excavated for repairs and should be finished before Parents Weekend, according to Al Murdock, chief engineer for Maintenance.

The pipe, which provided steam to Austin Hall, developed a hole recently. It was too old to handle the increased use because of the resumption of classes, explained Ed Meagher, Maintenance supervisor.

The steam from the pipes, which is used to heat water,

Shanties to stay on campuses

"Our opposition is housed in the Republican Party," he said. "They are collaborating with the South African regime to help set up moderate student alliances. A lot of money is being funnelled from the Reagan administration to College Republican campaigns."

While College Republican officials readily concede they oppose calls for colleges to sell their stocks in firms that do business in South Africa, they deny Nessen's charge.

"We have formally taken a stand for anti-divestment," conceded Dennis Kilcoyne, head of the National College Republicans in Washington, D.C. "In fact, we encourage more investment [in South Africa]. However, we are not funding any groups against divestment."

Officials, he added, "would not touch this [issue] with a 10-foot pole."

University of North Carolina College Republican chapter members were involved in a tense standoff last spring with anti-apartheid protestors, while staffers at the ultraconservative Dartmouth Review were arrested in connection with the vandalism of shanties on Dartmouth's green last February.

A College Republican chapter member was also arrested at Penn State for tacking "Don't Tread On Me, Blackie" posters around the campus last spring.

At Utah, though, the anti-anti-apartheid folks are led by Ron Gardner, who calls himself "a card-carrying Young Democrat."

Speaking of the shanty vandalism, Gardner said, "I have no idea who did that, although our organization was implicated."

"We are trying to stay away from people who seem like Nazis," he said.

Initially, Gardner "thought the shanties were a great idea. They heightened political awareness."

"People in Utah are usually content to follow the Mormon Church or Reagan's line. They don't tend to think for themselves."

Gardner decided he was against university divestment.

Bill Waer, vice president of Students Against Shantytown at U-Utah, dislikes the divestment movement for another reason.

"[The administration] has spent $12,000 on security for Dunn Meadow," Waer said.

"We are not against divestment. We are against the shanties on campus. They are providing security for one student organization. The other organizations have always had to provide their own."

Galberry's fate is undecided

By KATE WAGENMANN

Nearly a year after the closing of Galberry Hall, there is no decision as to what is to be done with the building, the Rev. John R. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students said this week.

Although the print shop and "a few" offices are still open, nothing has been done with the former dorm rooms, Stack said, adding that the University is "still considering a number of options."

When asked about having fewer dorms available for students Stack replied that there were "only 18 spaces [for residents]" at Galberry.

The hall was closed last Thanksgiving because of changes in Radnor's fire safety laws. Flammable materials in the print shop were a hazard to residents who would have been in the building when the print shop was closed. At that time, the University decided that the renovations would cost too much and began considering other options.

A decision has yet to be reached about what to do with Galberry Hall, which was closed last Thanksgiving because of fire code violations.

U.S. tuitions rise

By ROSE JACKSON

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Colleges this year will remain about the last bastion of inflation in America, new accountings show.

Students will pay about six percent more in tuition and fees to go to college this year than they did in 1985-86, the College Board says, while the nation's Consumer Price Index rose only a little more than two percent since last year.

Some colleges, of course, hiked their prices even higher and faster than the national averages.

College officials, as they have for the last several years, said they needed to keep pushing tuition up so fast to help cope with the long depression in the higher education industry, which began in the late seventies.

They need money, they say, to help pay for long-overdue faculty salary increases, long-deferred maintenance of campus buildings and labs and a need to increase "the quality of education."

Despite some ongoing protests at the University of Colorado, most students nationwide seem to be taking the increases in stride. No colleges have reported losing students because of the rapid rise in costs, said Cecilia Ottinger of the American Council on Education.

Colleges encounter dorm shortage

a number of colleges, finally tired of the dorm shortages that have become a fixture of every fall term, are debating building new dorms.

At the University of Florida (UF), housing Director James Grimm thinks there's "a 50/50 chance" that UF will build a new dorm after 10 long years of overcrowding.

"Right now we've got an overflow of 400," he says. "For the first time, we've had to put students up in the local Holiday Inn."

Grimm has "been asking for a new building for ten years now, and the answer I get is, 'If you can afford it at this bond interest rate, fine.' Now that the interest rate is coming back down again, I've renewed my request again."

Cal-Davis recently bought four nearby buildings, remodeled them as dorms and created space for 1,224 more on-campus students.

Yet Grimm cautioned that creating more on-campus housing can alienate off-campus landlords who want to rent to students.

In Gainesville, "There's a 15 percent vacancy [rate] off campus," said Grimm, who fears town-gown relations will suffer if UF finds a way to keep more students housed on campus comfortably.

On-campus students may be the ones who suffer most.

A recent Virginia Polytechnic study found dorm overcrowding had "no major academic effect" on students, but that students generally are "socially affected" by the uncomfortable living conditions.

Notre Dame's Anderson said, "It would be geat if I got a real room in this dorm," but he is not sure how long he could keep the fragile new friendships he has begun if the school eventually moves him to a different building.

He vows he is "doing all right" studying in his cramped environs, although, "My mom's not too happy." She thinks Anderson shouldn't have to pay as much for room and board "as kids with a real room," her son reported.

"Maybe they shouldn't accept more students than they have beds or rooms," Anderson suggested.

Advisory system

assigned to an advisor who teaches in the student's major.

In the College of Commerce and Finance, freshmen are advised by Dr. Richard E. Ruane for their first semester. After students choose their major in the second semester of their freshman year, they are advised by their department chairpersons.

Occasionally, students will be assigned a teacher in their department by their chairperson to take care of ordinary details, but the chairperson is always available for the students. Also, the dean's office is open to aid students.

The College of Engineering runs its advisory system somewhat differently from the previous two schools. Each freshman is assigned a personal teacher-advisor. Then, like the other two schools, students receive a teacher-advisor in their departments after declaring a major.

In four-year programs, such as Science and Honors, students are assigned an advisor in their first year.

Department chairpersons, the academic counselor in the counseling and career development centers and individual professors are also sources of advice and information for students.

Both Meagher and Murdock estimated a cost of $7,500 to fix the pipe. Because much of the piping is 30 to 50 years old, "there may be additional excavation required," in the near future, said Meagher.

Drug testing is not reliable

The issue of drug testing in all areas of American society, from workers to athletes to students, has created a huge controversy. The justice of it will undoubtedly be debated for some time. However, a related issue which deserves just about as much of our attention is the reliability of these tests.

According to experts, these tests are not only difficult and expensive, but often inaccurate. A Federal study has shown that many of the laboratories doing the testing make serious errors and often produce incorrect results. In the spring of 1985, a report from the Federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta concluded that there is "a crisis in drug testing." Results showed that although labs were 100 percent correct about some drugs, the percentage dropped sharply, often to zero percent correct, when dealing with other drugs. Since this study, the evaluation of drug-testing labs has been stopped.

How can we possibly stop evaluating the quality of these labs? The results they produce are affecting the reputations and careers of a great number of people. And the number of these labs will only increase as the market grows because more and more companies will require such tests. Something must be done to standardize procedures, improve the accuracy of the tests and ensure that these labs are evaluated frequently.

According to Dr. Bryan S. Finkle, a leading toxicologist at the University of Utah, "There are about a dozen competent urine drug-testing laboratories in the country."

Moreover, most of the U.S. drug testing labs do not have in-house quality control measures, and each step of the testing process is filled with potential error. Many labs must cut costs and lower quality because they are chosen through a competitive bidding process. Errors can also occur because some of the techniques used require subjective judgements. Certain foods and prescription drugs can also affect the test results.

False results of these drug tests can be produced so easily and can have a devastating effect on those involved, ruining people's jobs and reputations. Several suits have already been filed by those who lost their jobs because a urine test was not done properly. The government has taken steps to improve the quality of these tests, but much more needs to be done. We cannot use such a poor tool to determine the professional fate of an individual.

Meal plan group needs cooperation

The University's mandatory 20-meal-per-week plan for on-campus students is an unjustified and inequitable policy that must be changed. But in order for this change to occur, students will need the full cooperation of the administration.

The recently formed meal plan research committee is currently in the process of gathering information from schools that offer alternative meal services. These schools have been cooperative and extremely helpful to the committee members.

The committee is also attempting to gather information from sources here at Villanova. But according to Joe Allman, Student Government president, the administration has not yet been able to provide the requested information.

The foot-dragging on the part of the administration has apparently been too much to overcome.

Villanova is a relatively large university. And there is a certain amount of bureaucracy here. But there can be no excuse for not being able to provide such basic information as food costs and the companies who bid for food contracts.

Until the administration fully respects the meal plan committee's request for information, there can be no real chance of changing the current plan. The decision-makers must realize that the administration is here for the students; the students are not here for the administration.

Letters to the Editor

Business can't save blacks

To the Editor:

For some odd reason Americans have considered the issue of South African apartheid as one purely economic in scope. Such consideration neglects the fact that we are very strongly tied to South Africa politically and diplomatically. We have ties also through a common faith — that of Christianity.

Liberation theology has played a strong role in the apartheid crisis, with the South African clergy gathered in strong opposition to the succeeding regimes of the Nationalist party. Priests have been detained and beaten by the security forces — two of the great fears held by Afrikaners are: "die swart gevaar" (the "black danger") and "die roomse gevaar" ("the Roman danger," that is, the Catholic Church).

To suggest that divestment would leave the United States with no say in the apartheid debate is quite simply incorrect. Our government is more deeply involved in South Africa in areas not pertaining to business than we would like to admit. We have failed abysmally to exert diplomatic pressure against apartheid.

The time has come for us to stop patronizing the blacks, Indians, Chinese and "coloureds" of South Africa. We cannot "purchase" their freedom for them — we can only assist them in their struggle to regain self-government and the dignity and sanctity of life that have been denied them.

Our presentments against divestment disclose our adherence to the notion of the "white man's burden." Our leverage in south Africa is more than economic, and we have failed utterly so far to enact peaceful change through diplomatic, political, and civil channels. The argument that American big business can save the blacks from apartheid is deeply imbued with notions of white supremacy.

We Americans have not fully purged ourselves of racism. To assert that American business can proselytize the Afrikaners from a belief in racial supremacy to one of racial equality is absurd.

Drug tests violate our liberty

By G.J. DONNELLY

Well, here they go again.

Two weeks ago, President Reagan and his wife Nancy gave a televised speech to the United States to lambast the evils of drug use. Mrs. Reagan, in particular, stressed that there should be "no moral middle ground" in the fight to eradicate the threat of drug use in modern society.

Later in the week, the President stepped up the attack by signing an executive order requiring urinary tests for all government workers in "sensitive" positions and urging strong measures, including the death penalty, to punish dealers.

This whole chain of events surprised, and to be frank, frightened me. Doesn't anyone learn from history? Remember the 1950s when Sen. Joseph McCarthy took it upon himself to eradicate the menace of communism from society? He used every method available to label anyone who opposed his views or had inconsistencies in their records as a threat to society.

People were blacklisted from working. Hearings were held on live television to impune the morals and dignity of every man, woman and child who did not have a spotless record of pro-Americanism. America almost drowned in a sea of paranoia, because of one self-righteous individual who made himself the judge and jury over the lives of thousands upon thousands of people.

Is this really what President Reagan wants? Is the drug situation so out of hand that the government now must take measures to require the populous to prove its innocence instead of first proving their guilt?

A favorite argument to support these measures is an old one. If you are innocent, they believe, you have nothing to fear. But isn't that what the multitudinous number of blacklisted non-communists heard at the start of McCarthy's proceedings (one of whom, by the way, was Nancy Davis (Reagan))? What about the Salem witch trials of the 17th century? Did they ever find a single witch? How many had to suffer before they realized the paranoid stupidity of their actions?

And now, the pattern continues.

But what of these urinary tests? Are they all that accurate? Perhaps, perhaps not. Yet they leave a great deal of room open for misplacement of results, fraud and blackmail. Suppose one of those test results from a person in a "sensitive" position happens to fall into the wrong hands. The person who owns those hands could alter the results and blackmail the employee into obtaining classified documents for them. The documents could then be on their way to Moscow, Tripoli or any number of anti-American states that dabble in communist or terrorist activity. Is that paranoid enough for you?

Barry Goldwater once proclaimed that "extremism in the pursuit of liberty is no vice." However, extremism in the extinction of liberty is a vice. How sad a state we must be if we stoop to examining the human waste of every person in this country in a pathetic attempt to cleanse the United States of its drug ills.

This essay is not saying that America is without a drug problem. It does have one, a great one. But is it in our best interests to impinge upon the liberties of every individual in order to eradicate a problem largely restricted to a comparative few?

Whatever happened to the right of due process? Before the government can claim the right to test anyone for drugs it must have reasonable suspicion. Reasonable suspicion would be defined as anything that is a direct and certain threat to the government, backed up by direct evidence and testimonials from witnesses. Public suspicion as interpreted by the President does not constitute reasonable suspicion.

Furthermore, the President has demonstrated by his actions that he has no real intention of cutting big government contrary to his campaign promises.

The actions taken by the President and the growing number of politicians and businessmen who support them make the resurgence of a paranoid neo-McCarthyist society all the more likely. Let us reexamine our priorities as well as the history books. Is this really what we want?

As an extremely active student at Villanova, I know the meaning of the word "tired." Each week, after spending 20 hours working on the Villanovan and five to 10 hours practicing pom routines plus taking classes and doing homework, I step into my room on Friday afternoon and just collapse on the bed. I'm usually back up by 5 p.m. to go to work as a waitress. So when it comes time for a week off from school, I am certainly ready for a vacation.

Last November in his "State of the University" address to the University Senate, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, cited two University Senate proposals: 1) To have a Fall Break and 2) To start classes after Labor Day. He said that he would support either proposal but that they could not do both.

Driscoll explained that when Labor Day fell on Sept. 6 or 7, there could not be a Fall Break "without serious loss of academic time." He then asked the Senate to make a decision between the two proposals. I believe that students need the break and that the senate should do everything in their power to keep the Fall Break.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, said last year that he was "absolutely convinced that a Fall Break is the best thing for students." Stack explained that the period from Labor Day to Thanksgiving is too long a time to go without a break. He noted more discipline problems and more need for counseling when there was no Fall Break.

The director of the Counseling Center, Joan Greenhouse Whitney, agreed, saying that "students need a break part way through the semester to get away from the non-stop pressure." She made a special reference to resident students who are surrounded all the time by people with the same pressures. Whitney said that a "group mentality of panic takes place."

Many people, though, still believe that starting school before Labor Day is more important than a Fall Break. A number of professors feel that it is inconvenient to interrupt summer research. They forget that the major reason for having a school is the students. Furthermore, many students have trouble obtaining summer jobs if they cannot work through Labor Day. Yet, even if school were to start after Labor Day, over 1,000 freshmen and several hundred upperclassmen would still return early for orientation and for camps.

Recently, a University Senate subcommittee began researching the situation. They plan to follow up a suggestion made by P.A. Maurone, chairman of the University Senate, calling for the re-assigning of days in order to keep both the Fall Break and the after Labor Day starting date. They should also poll the students to get their opinions. They would probably find, overwhelmingly, that students want and need a Fall Break.

The Senate should take into careful consideration the needs of the students. Furthermore, they should listen to the information provided by Stack and Whitney, two people with experience in working with students. After doing so, they should waste no time in insuring for the students what they need, a Fall Break.

Quote of Note

Each time a man stands for an ideal, or acts to improve the lot of others, or strikes out against injustice, he sends forth a tiny ripple of hope. And crossing each other from a million different centers of energy and daring, those ripples build a current that can sweep down the mightiest walls of oppression and resistence.

Gay student seeks sympathy

To the Editor:

Being a college student, I have the opportunity to compare and contrast Villanova to the universities which my friends attend. It is almost always a disappointing endeavor.

Other schools have organizations, alliances, and special-interest groups for every type of student one could imagine. Villanova has the standard organizations and a plethora of "clubs." A Villanova student is merely enrolled in the 13th to 16th grade. My intent in writing this letter is to address a serious problem at V.U.

My appearance may be described as typical of that of a Villanova student. I don't stand out in a crowd and make no effort to. I am very popular on campus as a student leader and am considered very attractive by my female friends. I have a very athletic build and am considered macho in every sense of the of the word. I am also gay.

Needless to say, this is a fact unknown to any of my friends or classmates. They have no reason to suspect me. What makes this an especially soul-wrenching problem at V.U. is the fact that I have no one to turn to. One can only imagine the guilt and fear I face everyday of someone finding out. Yet things should not be this way.

I cannot count how many times I have had to laugh at your cruel jokes, as someone who doesn't quite have the "V.U. look" passes by. Life for a gay student at Villanova is nothing but a very cruel joke.

Homophobia at Villanova runs wild. It is understandable that this is a radically homogeneous place. Yet this does not excuse the attitude with which most students treat homosexuality. Instead of being mature, free-thinking individuals, they are merely reflecting the paranoid conservative trend which is currently sweeping the nation.

The lack of a gay organization on campus may be the result of the Church's unsympathetic attitude toward homosexuality.

Evidence of this lies in the Supreme Court's upholding of an anti-sodomy law (which also applies to heterosexuals). I am not unaware of the fact that the AIDS hysteria has also played a role in this attitude. In most cases, however, it has only served to open the eyes of Villanova students to a situation which does exist here. And I know from personal experience that I am not the only one.

The lack of a gay organization on campus may be a result of the Church's unsympathetic attitude towards homosexuality. However, it is an issue of reality which must be dealt with.

In closing, I encourage us all to open our eyes and our minds to issues which, although ignored at V.U., are very much a part of life. I strongly urge the Villanovan to print this letter and do a great service to a great many of us. Thank you.

Academic freedom is 'nonsense'

To the Editor:

Of course the infamous Charlie Curran, formerly of Catholic University, can teach whatever he wants. This is America; isn't it? But Charlie Curran, like everyone else, does not have the right to misrepresent what he is teaching by calling it other than what it is. That would be dishonest.

Charlie has been misrepresenting himself for the past 20 years by calling himself a "Catholic teacher." A Catholic teacher is one who transmits to his charges traditional Roman Catholic doctrine as set out by Church Councils, Papal encyclicals, and other official Church sources.

The Catholic Church centered in Rome alone has the authority to define what official Catholic teaching is or who is a real Catholic teacher. What Curran has been doing is telling us he was teaching Catholic doctrine when in reality he was teaching a form of Protestantism.

Would you expect to go to a Baptist Church and hear a minister tell you the Baptists believed the Pope of Rome to be infallible in matters of faith and morals? If you heard such a thing you would immediately know the pastor was not telling you the truth.

If you went to an auto dealer and paid for a Cadillac, but at delivery time you were given a Chevy by the salesman, what would you do? You would go back and demand the "real thing." Suppose the agent said to you, "This is a Cadillac, because I say it is." You would quickly say, "Sorry, a Cadillac is what General Motors says it is, not what you say it is." If the salesman persisted, you would sue him for consumer fraud.

Since we have exposed "academic freedom" for the nonsense that it is, we want [Mr. Van Allen] to tell us really why he is so stridently supporting the likes of Curran.

Parents who send their children to schools that call themselves Catholic believe that their children are hearing real Catholic doctrine. I have often wondered why we cannot sue "Catholic" institutions which tell us they are giving us Catholic doctrine but instead feed the students heterodoxy. This is even worse than consumer fraud. It is intellectual dishonesty.

Let us turn from Curran to his prime advocate at Villanova University, Dr. Roger Van Allen of the Religious Studies Department. Since we have exposed "academic freedom" (Van Allen's favorite justification for Charlie Curran misrepresenting Catholic teaching) for the nonsense that it is, we want Mr. V. to tell us really why he is so stridently supporting the likes of Curran. Maybe our students should find out what Dr. Van Allen is teaching in his class.

Student's op-ed supports racism

To the Editor:

After reading Brian D. Webb's op-ed on apartheid in the Sept. 26 issue of the Villanovan, I decided that Mr. Webb, not the United States, should "stay and work" on his knowledge of South Africa and the entire world situation.

How dare Mr. Webb tell blacks in South Africa to "calm down." Has he been to the country and witnessed the oppression that the blacks suffer? Does he realize how nonexistent the political rights of black South Africans are, so severe that the act of "boycotting school" was not an indication of their unwillingness to promote peace, as Mr. Webb suggests in his article, but the only form of protest against a racist government that they could exercise.

Mr. Webb has a point, a valid one, when he points to a public which is misinformed about the issue of divestment, and is then quick to make a judgement about it. But who is really the misinformed party? I think the author cannot substantiate his assertion that the United States should leave its investments in South Africa.

Mr. Webb has come to the conclusion that our divestment from financial ties to South Africa is an act of abandonment, a passive move that produces no consequences. This is rhetoric from the conservative right, and like many other sentiments from the right side, it is not true. The sanctions are a symbolic effort on the part of the United States to condemn a racist regime. They are not passive; a passive move would be to leave things as they are, as Mr. Webb suggests, and accommodate the likes of the racist leader P.W. Botha.

The sanctions are a symbolic effort on the part of the United States to condemn a racist regime. They are not passive.

Sen. Richard Lugar, chaiman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee (and oddly a Republican) summarized the situation best. "If this bill does not become law, the United States will be seen as an ally of Botha no matter how much we protest about it. We will be seen as their apologists," he said.

Mr. Webb asserts in his argument to "stay and work" that anyone who values life should oppose disinvestment because of the suffering, unemployment and revolution that will result. Don't you think we should take into consideration what the black people of South Africa are undergoing right now? Clearly, don't you feel, Mr. Webb, that anyone who values life cannot simultaneously endorse a racist regime?

How can Villanova University be proud of the fact that by keeping its financial ties to South Africa, it is helping to promote the very racist, inhumane system it abhores.

Override Reagan's veto

To the Editor:

This letter was sent to the Pennsylvania Senators after the overwhelming House vote to override President Reagan's veto of the sanctions against South Africa bill. In your paper, I hope it will serve as some response to the Op-ed article by Mr. Brian Webb in your Sept. 26 issue, which in my opinion, showed as little understanding of the porblems of South African blacks as the President's veto message.

Dear Senator Specter:

We lived with, taught, and worked with black students from the Republic of South Africa for two years in the nation of Lesotho. Because of the repressive nature of the apartheid regime, it takes a long acquaintance before these people give their confidence; I think they gave it to us. We therefore, feel rather more qualified to judge their attitude toward U.S. sanctions against South Africa than a President who, at least from his public pronouncements, really does not seem to understand the problems of that unfortunate country.

Of course, the white minority government will see to it that blacks bear most of the hardship involved. And of course, sanctions alone will not force the abandonment of apartheid. The point is (and this has been often said in both houses of Congress), that the blacks of South Africa will be given courage to continue their struggle to that end if they know the U.S. is seriously commited to stand by them.

Further, those of us here who care will be relieved to know that our government no longer appears in the eyes of the world [to be] the accomplice, conscious or unconscious, of the Botha regime.

So we urge you to cast your vote to override President Reagan's veto of the sanctions bill passed by such large majorities in both houses of Congress.

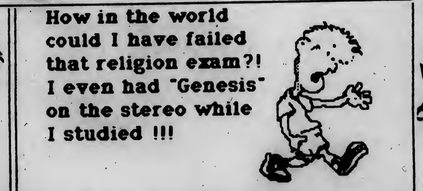
Apartheid merits attention

To the Editor:

It is amazing to me how the obscene blemish of apartheid can be ignored and rationalized under the umbrella of "doing what is best for South Africa." Once again, the "great white hunter" has decided what is best for another man's country.

Villanova's own "great white hunter," the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University President, has stated "we have done as much as we are going to do and can do in responding to the situation" (the Villanovan, Sept. 26, 1986). His statement reminds me of the rich man who tells Christ he has kept all of the Commandments and boasts, "I have kept all these; what do I need to do further?" (Matthew 19:20). Christ's response to "sell your possessions and give to the poor" requires more than strict adherence to the letter of the law or the Sullivan Principles.



A failure to take a strong, affirmative stand on the University's complete divestment and renunciation of the South African regime shows an inability for certain conservative Catholic leaders to address the problem. It is a marvel of doctrinal pedagogy how an issue like abortion can be (pardon the expression) so black-and-white, yet the "grave moral issue" of apartheid does not merit the same firm, unequivocal "understanding."

Human rights are not derived from a balance sheet or an investment portfolio.

New owner revitalizes Campus Corner

By MONICA J. PICA

When former owner Eileen Gerson decided to sell Campus Corner, employee James Slattery seized the chance to own and run his own business.

This "local boy from Bryn Mawr" possesses an aggressive new attitude. "Because of my age [21], I know what college people like. I saw how the old owner didn't care about the place — there was more potential here than she saw."

Changes have already been made. Campus Corner has increased its hours on big "drinking nights" (Thursdays and Saturdays) from 1:30 a.m. to 2:30 a.m.

Slattery said he has changed its pizza and is now using improved batter and homemade sauce. He has also increased size in the "super sandwiches," frozen fruit bars, and a new "munchie section" which includes cheese sticks, nachos, potato skins and other snacks.

Physical renovations include the addition of new and different posters, a jukebox, plants, new lights, and a much cleaner shop.

The "Ultimate in Gourmet Junkfood" has now officially become the "Ultimate in Gourmet Fastfood." Along with the change in image, business has increased 28 percent.

But Slattery is still not satisfied. He plans to someday buy out the hardware store next to Campus Corner and eventually create a restaurant bar.

Campus Corner is now owned by a 21-year-old entrepreneur who plans to expand and improve the operation.

With a good credit history, Slattery encountered little trouble receiving a loan from the bank in order to purchase Campus Corner. Along with the loan, Slattery put up a great deal of his own money. "But it was an investment well worthwhile," he said.

Money is not the only factor of production Slattery has invested. "I'm 21 years old, but I feel like 106 because I work 80 hours a week," he said. Obviously, then Slattery has no time for school. He also has no desire for school. "College is not as necessary as it's cracked up to be. There is more to say for experience than theory in books."

Slattery attended Delaware County Community College part time for one and a half years while working full time. His work experience began at age 15 in various fast food chains, and steadily progressed as he became manager of a video store in King of Prussia, and later secured a sales position involving typewriters, computers and word processors.

"The work I have accomplished has not only helped me relate to people, but has given me invaluable experience in bookkeeping, inventory control, sales and even taxes," Slattery said.

With a business sense, and a good head on his shoulders, James Slattery urges other entrepreneurs to "word hard, don't get discouraged, do the best you can. Things work out in the long run."

Firms market to students

By DANTE SCALA

Students reading the Villanovan will spot many ads directed toward their attention, ranging from pizza and beer to phones and computers. This interest in the college student market is not confined to Villanova; a recent Wall Street Journal article states that interest in the college market has increased recently on a national level.

The Journal states that one of the reasons for this increased interest is that consultants claim that college students have more spending money than ever before. A recent survey of 4,349 college students by Simmons Market Research Bureau indicates that students have, on the average, $123 of spending money a month; 30 percent have more than $200, and about 56 percent have credit cards.

Another reason that companies try to reach this market is the possibility of attracting long-term consumers. For instance, many magazines offer sizable subscription discounts to students and educators.

Brian Brown, publicity manager for Time magazine, explained the discounts by stating that the college market is a "growth market," and that Time offers discounts in the hope of attracting college students who will stay as readers throughout their lives.

"I don't think any magazine worth its salt could ignore the college market," Brown said.

In addition companies see college students as a lucrative market partly because they are establishing their "first household" away from home, stated Jim Omastiak, vice president in charge of Campus Voice Network, which is a communications company directed towards college students. It also runs a nation-wide college sampling program, distributing 1,300,000 "Good Stuff from Campus Voice Network" kits to over 500 campuses, including Villanova.

The kits are distributed to both men and women, and combined, contain about 30 different products from such major companies as General Foods, Bristol-Myers, Gillette, Mennen, and Pierre Carden.

Omastiak commented that, for the most part, students at college will be going into drugstores and food stores for the first time to buy products themselves. Thus, it is an excellent time to influence students by giving them product samples.

Omastiak credits the success of his company's program in part to its unique method of distribution. For the most part, the kits are in the dorm rooms when students arrive, and the dorm room is "really where you [college students] are going to use the products," he said.

In general, there has been a "high conversion" by college students to the sample products, Omastiak said. Furthermore, students will sometimes stay with these products "for a good time to come. If first loyalties are established, and the products are good, why change?"

New high-speed train planned

By KRISTIN A. SWITALA

For students living west of Harrisburg, the four-to-twelve-hour train ride on Amtrak to and from Villanova may soon become just a tedious memory.

Proposals and budgets are pouring out of the Pennsylvania High Speed Intercity Rail Passenger Commission dealing with the construction of a modern light-rail train system, linking seven cities between Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

Racing at speeds of up to 250 mph., these new trains will cut travel time across the state to (at best) two hours, 15 minutes, according to a railroad employee.

Two systems, the steel-wheel and the mag-lev, are currently under consideration. According to Dan Cupper, executive editor of the commission, the steel-wheel train is based upon the French TGV (Train a Grande Vitesse), which runs from Paris to Lyon at an average speed of 130 mph. Gliding over rails on ties, the lighter steel wheels diminish friction, allowing the TGV to reach speeds of 170 mph.

Economically, the success of the TGV in France startled even the French. According to Cupper, "the biggest problem was that they didn't think big enough." In the first half of 1985, TGV gained 700,000 riders. Another high-speed line is currently being planned from Paris out to the Atlantic Ocean.

The initial estimate of capital costs for a Pennsylvania steel-wheel system is $7 billion. In contrast, the second proposal, mag-lev, would cost approximately $10 billion.

Mag-lev, or magnetic levitation, is an experimental system that uses neither ordinary rails nor wheels. The cars sit atop a guideway of magnetic energy; they are lifted above the ground in a magnetic suspension system.

The question facing Pennsylvania, and all of the United States, according to Cupper is "do we want something that works and we know works [steel-wheel], or do we make the technological jump to mag-lev?"

Last year a feasibility study of high-speed lines was funded, not by the United States, but by the West German government. An article in the August 12, 1985 Reading Times stated that along with the West German government, a consortium of German firms contributed $25,000 in cash, along with $80,000 in in-kind services through the Budd Co. of Philadelphia to the project.

The completion of a high-speed line between Pittsburgh and Philadelphia would have an incredible economic impact on Pennsylvania. According to the Executive Summary of the feasibility study, this type of system "could not only offer rapid, all-weather travel ... but also create tens of thousands of jobs, pump billions of dollars into the state economy, and spark countless opportunities for real estate development."

The former chairman of the Commission, Robert A. Gleason, Jr., agreed that the new trains would help revitalize the state's economy. In an August interview with the Pittsburgh Business Times-Journal he stated, "Using the train, people in Johnstown can travel to Pittsburgh or State College in 20 minutes. They can live in Johnstown, but be commuters, and work wherever their talents can be used."

The same could be said of businessmen who work in Harrisburg or Lancaster, yet want to live in Paoli or even Villanova.

According to the Market Demand Study, prepared in July by Parsons Brinckerhoff/ Gannett Fleming (the general engineering consultant to the commission), by the year 2000 between 5.5 million and 8.8 million people annually "could be riding a world-class, state-of-the-art high-speed railroad across Pennsylvania."

In a guest editorial in the September 1985 First Reading, State Representative Richard A. Geist, current chairman of the Commission, declared that "to carry American passenger transportation into the 21st century, we must reach for the extraordinary, and we must make it commonplace ... The choice is ours."

Local D'Lites successful despite parent bankruptcy

The D'Lites restaurant in Rosemont is considered the No. 1 franchise of D'Lites in America.

By FRANK DUNNE

When the D'Lites fast food restaurant in Rosemont began operations almost one year ago it was, "and still is," according to Edward Chambers president of Northern Lites Corporation, the most successful franchise in D'Lites of America Inc., despite the recent bankruptcy of D'Lites of America.

Northern Lites owns the franchise rights for Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware. The company operates separately from D'Lites of America and Chambers said that this is the main reason the Rosemont store as well as all the other Northern Lites-owned stores will remain in business.

"D'Lites of America tried to grow too fast," said Chambers. Rather than emphasizing growth and expansion, Northern Lites, which operates eight stores in the Philadelphia area, concentrated on marketing and product development.

The result was, and will continue to be, a series of successful D'Lites franchise operations.

Northern Lites will continue to operate its franchises regardless of what happens with D'Lites of America. The issue of franchise rights may have to be settled, though.

As for the remaining D'Lites stores, of which there are about 60 nationwide, D'Lites of America is operating under Chapter 11 of the bankruptcy code. Chapter 11 allows a company to operate with protection from creditor lawsuits while it works out a reorganization plan.

D'Lites of America's reorganization is currently being handled by the Levy company of Chicago. Levy is a successful group of restaurateurs which owns about 26 restaurants in the Chicago area.

If Levy is not successful in making D'Lites of America profitable again, D'Lites will be forced to file under Chapter seven. In this case the bankruptcy code controls the liquidating of assets in order to settle debts.

Augustinian prisoners remembered

Father Boniface Wozny and Bro. Casimir Lipka were two of eight Augustinians seized from their monastary in Krakow, Poland and imprisoned in German concentration camps in 1941.

BY SUSAN TOLVE

A few members of the Villanova community gathered in the small chapel of Burns Hall, two weeks ago, in remembrance of a solemn occasion. Forty-five years earlier, Nazi troops had stormed the Augustinian monastery in Krakow, Poland and dragged eight priests to prison.

Only three of these prisoners survived this ordeal. One of the survivors was the Rev. Boniface Wozny, O.S.A., prelate of the Augustinian Order. Wozny recalled his experiences in a 1973 article published in the Warsaw Journal-Daily News.

"My God, Motelupich, Oswiecim (Aushwitz), Dachau, so many years of ill-treatment," said Wozny.

"I do not want to recall in detail all that the prisoners had to suffer and all that my eyes had seen in Hitler's hell. If anyone would want to comprehend everything that happened there, he would have to be there himself. My heart now could not endure a realistic presentation of the montrosity of the crimes that people inflicted upon people," he added.

Sharing one example of the torture the priests experienced, Wonzy said, "The maltreated and sick Fr. Joseph Gociek could not keep up with the pace of the exercises demanded by the drill-master and again Father Gociek received 25 lashes. He dropped dead, in our presence."

Finally, on April 2, 1945, the camp in Dachau was freed by the American Army. Wonzy called out, "Go, the sacrifice is completed." But, the Augustinians faced hard years ahead.

After the war, only about 10 Augustinians remained, and these few were separated by the dissolution of the Polish Augustinian houses in 1950.

Hoping to re-organize, the Augustinians petitioned Rome that the order be re-established in Poland. It was not until Dec. 12, 1980, however, that the Order was officially restored by the Holy See.

"Near miraculous results followed upon the decision, but in the face of formidable obstacles: no vocation material was printed (it's not permitted), [and] no discussions or open 'vocation meetings' were organized (it's against the law of legal assembly) . . .," stated William Faix, provincial delegate of Poland.

Brother Jerome Sysko, co-director of the pre-Novitiate program at Villanova, has been actively involved in rebuilding the Polish province. Sysko helped to sponsor a program that frequently ships goods to Poland. In addition, he has helped to raise some of the $65,000 needed to rebuild the Krakow monastery.

The monastery, which was founded in 1347, was lost to St. Catherine's Church after WWII. About one year ago, St. Catherine's offered to return the monastery.

According to Faix, it will "serve as much needed house of theology."

Money for the restoration of the Krakow monastery has come from Augustinians around the world. According to Sysko, however, "a large amount is from Augustinians in the U.S." Sysko has raised $1,000 from the two dance benefits he organized at Villanova.

Private donors have also been generous. About one month ago, a Philadelphia man, who wishes to remain anonymous, pledged to donate the last one-third of the restoration costs after the first two-thirds raised.

The Augustinian community in Poland is growing spiritually as well as financially. In June, the first clerics were presented for ordination since 1943. There are now 35 students in formation and the first class of novices has been established in Poland.

Throughtout the horrible time of war, the Polish Augustinians remained faithful Catholics. "Tears came to my eyes when I recall the Christmas of 1941. Father Jecek Tylzarowski received several consecrated hosts and a few of the prisoners were able to receive Holy Communion. For us it was a happy day, despite the general unhappiness in the camp," Wonzy said.

This faith and hope is still evident in the words of a Polish student speaking in Ireland. "I hope to be ordained in 1987. There are many difficulties, but it is wonderful to see how they are managed, so I ask you to pray for us, Augustinians, for our province and for Polish people. We will pray for you," he said.

Women emerging to shape social change

By KRISTIN A. SWITALA

"The emergence of women is the most formidable catalyst of social change in our world," stated Dr. Madonna Kolbenschlag in her Villanova lecture on Oct. 1.

Speaking to a full house in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center, Kolbenschlag, a senior fellow at the Woodstock Theological Center at Georgetown University, discussed the rising consciousness of women as the most widespread significant change in progress in the world today.

"Never have our women been so ready to hear the gospel of liberation, and never have they been so in need of this message," she stated.

Discussing the "disproportionate deprivation that women suffer," Kolbenschlag named the advantages that men in our society have over women: access to training, role models, access to social-economic-political power and influence, the absence of peer status in public dialogue and in the work place, and basic skills and tools.

According to Kolbenschlag, the world is divided into two cultures, "the dominating and the marginated. Characteristics of the dominating pre-masculinity, aliveness, competitiveness. Qualities of the marginated are feminity and minority status."

"This attitude is still in large part transmitted through our families and institutions. Effects are racism, religious fanaticism and any other "ism" you can think of," she said.

Firmly believing that the "fictions" of masculinity and feminity have shaped our world, Kolbenschlag discussed the history of how patriarchal behavior patterns formed, and how patriarchal norms significantly impact our governmental policies and culture.

From 1980 to 1984, Kolbenschlag served as a full-time legislative assistant to Congresswoman Mary Rose Oakar in the U.S. House of Representatives. She specialized in economic policy, Latin American affairs, human rights and social policy affecting women.

Best known for her book, Kiss Sleeping Beauty Good Bye, Kolbenschlag has published and lectured internationally on a variety of subjects, most of which are concerned with feminism.

According to Kolbenschlag, "mainstream feminism is still alive because it is based in our religious [faith] communities. Feminism rests on the hope that people change from within."

By REV. FRANK NASH, O.S.A.

One of the many things St. Augustine recounts in his Confessions is an experience with rowdy North African teenagers.

Private property meant little to this group, and Augustine and his friends invaded a neighbor's property to strip a pear tree of its fruit. On the surface, one might excuse this activity as "boys being boys" or teenager high-spiritedness.

Years later, however, Augustine understood this event to mean more. He had learned right and wrong from his parents, Patricius and Monica, and had chosen to go his own way. Later in life, their words and example proved to be a profound influence upon him and were to lead him to Christian faith and service to God's people.

The learning of right from wrong is a part of each person's education, and as in St. Augustine's time, education, most broadly defined, is the process where knowledge is shared by one generation with the next. With limited preparation for married life and less perhaps for parenting, in the midst of varying societal and cultural values, a father and mother remain the first and most important teachers in each home which is the first "school."

Parents and children first learn how to relate to each other and then how to react to the wider community of families in the world. Parents who teach by word and example are crucial for each child's growth and for positive performance later in life.

Family education is also clearly the center of Christian faith, life and education. Faith in God and personal moral development lived and communicated by parents, are as necessary to good education as are intellectual and social growth.

Vibrant Christian faith expressed by fathers and mothers in the home remains the best way to share that faith with impressionable sons and daughters.

As with so many things in a family, confusion and frustration can occur when expressing God's presence and loving action. Hopefully, by the time of adulthood, each one of us appreciates the efforts our parents have made and continue to make as we build upon our experience and knowledge.

Later in his Confessions, St. Augustine recalls his mother Monica's death, her life of service, her fidelity to God and to her Christian faith, and her commitment to her husband and children. It was Monica's loving example more than any other factor that moved Augustine's mind and heart to turn to faith in Jesus Christ and to religious community life.

In his love for Monica, St. Augustine asks everyone to remember his mother in prayer because of her great generosity. His words should touch our hearts to pray for our own parents as well.

With Parent's Weekend about to begin at Villanova, many fathers and mothers are arriving to celebrate the richness of campus life with each of us. Mothers and fathers will anxiously look for signs of perceptible growth and learning, while other family members plan to enjoy the football, the fun, and a weekend away from home.

For so many reasons, Parent's Weekend is an opportunity to enjoy our fathers and mothers who have given so much to us and who continue to make sacrifices for the sons and daughters they love so very much.

In the midst of all the activities let us be sure to take time to think about our parents, to acknowledge their love for us and our love for them, and to find the right way to say "thank you" from our hearts.

Trevor's Campaign for the Homeless needs your help.

Trevor Farrell, the 14-year-old youth from Gladwyne, Pa. who began a crusade helping Philadelphia's homeless men, women and children, is holding a gala celebrity auction on Oct. 16.

What started as a simple gesture of giving a homeless street person a blanket on a cold winter night three years ago, has grown into a nightly, campaign of feeding Philadelphia's homeless.

The money raised at the celebrity auction will go to help Trevor continue his efforts. The auction will be held at Memorial Hall in Fairmount Park.

Volunteers are needed for a variety of tasks including: picking up items on the day of the auction and bringing them to designated areas; working as a runner, directing cars or working at the coat check; helping to set up tables and chairs on the day of the auction; assisting in decorating Memorial Hall, and helping with clean-up duty the day after of the auction.

A meeting will be held to communicate more information and sign people up as volunteers on Oct. 5, at 7 p.m., in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Barbara Hoffman is a committee member on Trevor's Campaign for the Homeless.

In this day and age, hostility is often expressed against lawyers. Perhaps this stems from some 17th Century American practice.

In 1641, the Massachusetts Bay Colony adopted a law making it illegal to earn money by representing a person in court; the law lasted seven years.

In 1658, the Virginia legislators went to more extremes. They passed a law making lawyers illegal.

Subsequently, they expelled all attorneys from their colony. After 22 years, lawyers were allowed to return.

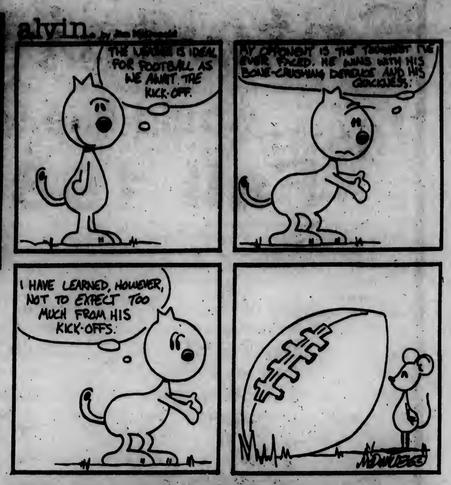
A miracle celebrated

By HEIDI SCHMITT

Did you know that 1987 marks the 200th anniversary of the United States Constitution? Our governmental system was born right here in Philadelphia at Independence Hall — and that certainly is reason to celebrate.



The national celebration has already begun downtown with an elaborate exhibit called "Miracle at Philadelphia." It is being held at the monumental Second Bank of the United States and features various presentations and displays, including actual letters written by our founding fathers and four original drafts of the Constitution.

Less than a 30-minute train ride from Villanova could take you back in time to recapture the historical past of our nation. Horse-drawn carriages tour Philadelphia's pre-Revolutionary buildings. Further, the Liberty Bell and Society Hill, a community of nostalgic 18th and 19th century homes, are just a short walk away from the exhibit.

If not for your personal enjoyment, perhaps a visit to "Miracle of Philadelphia" could supplement your studies at Villanova. The exhibit is open from now until December 1987, although the official celebration begins in May.

Take some time out of your hectic schedule to visit the historical site of Philadelphia. You may discover a new sense of pride for our country and genuine respect for those who helped build it.

Vasey creates the real 'Frankenstein'

By SHARON KELLY

Frankenstein. Mere mention of this infamous name sparks images of fear and horror in most people's minds. But do you know that this association is actually the result of the overactive imaginations of Hollywood producers?

In contrast, the "real" Frankenstein — that is, the central character in Mary Shelley's 19th century novel — is a passionate, distraught creature whose violent acts are due to his confusion over being rejected by his young creator.

Villanova Theatre has chosen this original version of "Frankenstein" as the opening production of a season devoted to the theme of horror and the fascination man has with it.

Because this play largely follows Shelley's novel, it is horror with an intellectual twist. Director Lon Winston explains, "This play is not Hollywood. The Creature is not just a horrible, destructive monster, but a feeling, thinking individual who is being shunned by his creator, Victor Von Frankenstein. The Creature lashes out at those around him not out of violent instinct, but out of anguish over his rejection."

It is in this scenario that Winston finds intense interest and contemporary relevance for the audience. "We have all experienced the myth of Frankenstein in one way or another. And we all are seeking our creator and questioning, 'Who am I?,' just as the Creature does. "Frankenstein" is often called the first "existential thriller."

The ethical dilemma faced by Victor, the young science student whose experiments lead to the creation, is of particular significance today. Victor dabbles in creating life just as genetic researchers are doing. "We must question whether we are prepared to deal with the implications and responsibilities of this technology. Clearly, Victor is not prepared," Winston asserts.

Because he has attempted to be faithful to Shelley's plot and themes, Winston has found this play a challenge to direct. "I'm trying to capture the youthful passion and relationships found in the novel, and juggle them with the style of the play to create an atmosphere of real emotion, not heightened melodrama."

Winston suggests that the audience note how this Gothic novel is brought to the stage and treated with 20th century sensibilities. He has tried to develop the close bond among the three main characters — Victor, his best friend Henry, and Victor's betrothed Elizabeth — so that their relationship is realistic and current for the audience.

But for those of you who love the creature, there will be plenty of action to keep your interest. In order to survive, the creature must learn to adapt to a hostile environment. He cannot be a stiff, artifical monster as he is usually portrayed in film. Instead he is street-smart and agile, and he will look the part. Winston hopes the audience will be intrigued by the costume and makeup he has chosen for the creature.

Ultimately, this sympathetic portrayal of the creature compels the audience to understand his dilemma and accept his actions. "We get caught up in it so we're not scared of him — we can accept that he has the right to kill because he has been turned away by his maker." The real horror of this play, Winston suggests, is how the creature lives through the physical and mental anguish of being brought into existence, then cast out into a strange and hateful world.

This production is the beginning of a season-long research project for Winston. Although he has always been fascinated by horror taboo and man's attraction to it, this is his first opportunity to finect a play that directly deals with the subject. "This play gives me a chance to see live how an audience deals with horror. We are torn in two directions — we are titillated, yet afraid. It seems to me that we have an instinctive urge to experience horror."

"Frankenstein" runs Oct. 8-11 and Oct. 15-19. Performances begin at 8 p.m. For information and ticket prices, call Vasey Theatre at 645-7474.*

"THE DEAD HAVE A RIGHT TO STAY DEAD!" Says Fritz (Bruce Graham) as Victor Von Frankenstein (David Fiebert) pleads with him to continue the experiment in Villanova Theatre's production of "Frankenstein." The play runs Oct. 8-11 and Oct. 15-19. Call 645-7474 for tickets and information.

Streep and Nicholson form new 'Odd Couple'

By MICHELE O'NEILL

"Heartburn"
directed by Mike Nichols
Paramount Pictures

When you mix comedy and drama with Meryl Streep and Jack Nicholson, there is only one result and that is "Heartburn." Mike Nichol's recent release, "Heartburn," brings new meaning to the word indigestion. The plot fizzles out early on, but the movie is salvaged by the superior acting of the renowned actors.

"Heartburn" has a slight plot, but it is so vague that the meaning of the show is lost and the acting becomes well appreciated.

Meryl Streep begins the show as a well-known restaurant reviewer for a New York newspaper. She meets Jack Nicholson, who also works as a reporter, at a wedding and they are immediately drawn to each other. In one scene they are having drinks in a restaurant and in the next scene they are in bed eating spaghetti and watchin an old horror movie. Remember, they have known each other for less than six or seven hours. While in bed they discuss their views of marriage, and in the next scene they are being wed.

The wedding is the beginning of the end of the plot. The wedding scene is an overdramatized attempt to stress the fact that Meryl Streep is afraid of commitment and it lasts about 10 minutes too long. She cries and sulks while the guests eat and party. The flower girl falls asleep and so does the audience. Every guest at the wedding, who is a major character, talks to Streep and tries to convince her that marrying Nicholson is the right thing except for Nicholson's friends of 20 years. It is a long, drawn-out, overdramatic scene that this movie could have done without.

The spontaneity of their marriage sets the tone for what is to come of their relationship. The once lovey-dovey couple turns into a major hate-love couple.

Streep become pregnant with their first child. The way in which Streep portrays a pregnant woman is remarkable. she can make you feel the pain of labor and the joy of having a child. Nicholson is there with Streep in the delivery room, and he portrays the nervous father tremendously. There are major complications with the pregnancy and Streep needs to have a cesarean section. Nicholson is with her all the way. What a perfect marriage.

The perfect marriage begins to fade when Nicholson begins to lose socks and stay out later than usual, and in effect, stay with another woman on the side. The audience does not realize that he is having an affair. It takes more than half the movie for Streep to figure out that her husband is having an affair. How she puts two and two together is beyond any sort of comprehension. She makes one phone call and then storms up to Nicholson's office in their Georgetown home, fishes through some papers and voila! She finds restaurant bills, hotel bills and jewelry bills — none of which were bills from the two of them.

Streep leaves Nicholson on the first plane out of Washington to New York. She takes her child and a few necessities and she visits her father. Some help he is. He is a gambling gigolo who cares more about the hooker he is getting ready for than his daughter's problem.

Streep takes over the movie for the next couple of scenes. She gets her job back as the restaurant critic and goes on with her life, but she is pregnant again. She goes to therapy and is robbed. How ironic that her wedding ring is all that is stolen.

The calm Streep takes a cab home to her father's apartment only to find a serene greeting from Nicholson who asks her to come back to him. Streep agrees and all three are on a plane back to Georgetown.

Once back in town, Streep spreads a rumor that Nicholson's sidekick has a sexual disease. Nicholson does not appreciate this and he tells Streep while she goes into labor.

The birth of the second child is also the birth of a new Streep. At a dinner party she tells all their friends about Nicholson's affair, while he is present she throws a pie in his face, storms out and flies home to New York for good.

"Heartburn" is funny and it is dramatic. The humor is subtle, but it is there. In the end Streep is a strong, independent woman who, like most women of today, would never take what Nicholson dished out.

If you are a Meryl Streep/Jack Nicholson fan, or you enjoy good acting, this movie is worth seeing. If you are more into plots, then this movie is just not worth the money . . . wait for it to be on cable.

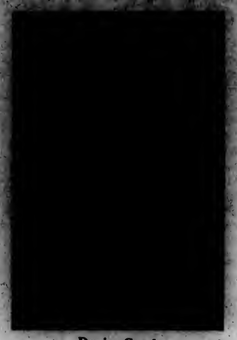
Student Government
Class Representative Candidates

Edie Pearce

During these first few weeks, I feel that I have become a part of Villanova not only in the academic sense but also socially, and I hope that all the other freshmen have found this adjustment as easy and as enjoyable as I have. During orientation we were constantly told to get involved and become a part, and this is what I intend to do as freshman representative.

I am a responsible and capable person and am willing to work diligently to accomplish what needs to be done. No complaint or problem is too small to be considered, for I believe that the duties of the freshman representative entail caring for the individual as well as the group as a whole.

Empty promises are usually characteristic of any campaign; however, the only promise I make is to be receptive to and considerate of people, as they are entrusting their problems with me. This is an ethic in which I believe and a policy which I would follow as freshman representative of the Class of 1990.



Steve Masto

My name is Steve Masto and I'm running for freshman representative. I come from Orange, Conn., and I'm presently enrolled in the business school. I am seeking election because I would like to serve my freshman class, the class of 1990. I believe this is a good class with many excellent people. As your representative, I will give my time and ideas, as well as voice your ideas and complaints in the Student Government meetings.

In high school I served in similar leadership and service positions. I was Sports Editor of the newspaper, a peer counselor, a peer tutor and an officer of the Italian Club.

At Villanova, I have become involved in Intramurals and the Ski Club. Those of you whom I have already met know how serious and determined I am in becoming your class representative and as time goes on I hope to prove it to all of you.

Denise Good

My name is Denise Good and I am seeking the election to the position of Freshman Representative.

During my past years in high school, I have had previous Student Government experience. As a freshman, sophomore and senior I served in the Student Government as a homeroom representative and my junior year as class treasurer. I am currently involved in SNAP, the Nursing Senate and a member of the Pom Squad.

I am seeking election this year because I want to serve the freshman class and Villanova University. I know that I have the qualities of leadership, the experience in Student Government, and the responsibility necessary to serve you as your freshman representative. I am able to work well with others and I am very supportive of Villanova. I know the qualities that I possess can contribute to the growth of Villanova.

Remember "Make the good choice vote for Denise Good for freshman representative.

Dawn Cishek

Hello, my name is Dawn Cishek and I am a biology major from Cape Cod, Mass. I am in the Biology Club and on the Diving team. As a member of an athletic team, I will remain on campus during the first semester break. This means that I will have a lot of time to work on special projects for our freshman class. As a representative, I will work on issues that will affect us now and for the next four years, issues such as academic advisement, conditions of the residence halls, and the meal plan for commuting students.

I feel that I am qualified for the job due to my past experience in student government. I was a student council representative sophomore year. I was the Chairman of the Social Committee and a member of the student council Executive Committee my junior and senior years. I was also very involved in Model Legislature for three years.

I want to be a class representative because I care about what happens to our class. I am ready to work hard to help our class be the best it can.

Muffy O'Neill

Do you want the class of 1990 to go down in Villanova history as one of the best ever? Do you want a "NEW V.U.?" Then vote Muffy O'Neill as one of your freshman class representatives! I'm a liberal arts major from Ardmore, Pa., who wants very much to work with and for you on our Student Government.

As president of my high school student body, I gained valuable experience that I know would be beneficial, not only to our class, but also to the Villanova community. You are a vital part of our Student Government and, if I am elected, we will work together to form our opinions, reach our goals and to make a "NEW V.U."

I won't make you any empty promises, but what I definitely will promise is that, if elected, I will do my best to help us "strive to achieve all we believe" our "NEW V.U." can be.

Paul Fratamico

Our class, the class of 1990, is the future of Villanova. It is our role to accept the challenges which present themselves specifically to us. Just as the orientation program eased many of the anxieties and fears which existed in us all, so is it your Rep's responsibility to give the freshman class a strong voice in the affairs of the government. Thanks to the enthusiastic support of the Villanova community our college, transition has been successful, and hopefully the remainder of the year will be just as successful. Thank you.

Joe Landolfi

Do you know what Pete Leonard and I want to do? We want to represent. We stay up all night talking about how great it would be to represent. In the morning, we can't eat because our food doesn't need representation. We can't study because we can only read about people who represent. We have trouble breathing; our breath doesn't need representation. We are dying inside because we can't represent. Please put us out of our misery, and let us represent. Let us relax and enjoy ourselves for a change.

But seriously, we'd really love to do this, and we'd try our absolute hardest. We feel that we have a significant advantage over other people by not only knowing each other very well, but also by being outgoing enough to go talk to the freshman class to find out and solve our problems. What more can you ask? . . . Don't ask!

Lauri Gallagher

At Orientation 1986, Villanova University welcomed a new class of freshmen. This class was different than those before it because this class was admitted under the highest standards of quality, ability, skill, talent and POTENTIAL. During the course of the next four years, we will be expected to change, improve, initiate and decide.

Now is the time to gather our ideas and speculate our options.

In the past, I have worked closely with Student Government and other activities to organize functions and activities. If elected, I will stress communication with the freshman class as the most effective way to results. When people are aware of what is going on, it is more likely for them to be interested in effects. We have to work together in union, as a class. We need responsible leaders to represent our class. I believe that I can help to form that union, and develop it to it's highest POTENTIAL!

Peter Leonard

There's one very simple reason that Joe Landolfi and I should be class representatives. We would have a great time. The importance of this reason is immeasurable. This is why: if Joe and I weren't having a great time, we would bring a half-hearted approach to our position. We could possibly "rub-off" on the Student Government. If the Student Government didn't care, it could have a profound effect on the University. The whole University could become apathetic.

Villanova could spread this "disease" of apathy to neighboring communities. It could work its way into the state government of Pennsylvania. This corruption from apathy could spread to neighboring states and soon the United States of America could be destroyed by this "disease." But you don't have to worry about this happening if you elect Joe Landolfi and me, because we will have a great time.

James Baldwin

Freshman year in college has been compared to several occurrences in history, the migration of the lemmings and the eruption of Mount St. Helens (the equivalent of one party in Sullivan Hall) to name two. This is because college life is a little difficult getting used to. So when problems occur we really don't know where to go. Our freshman representative should be a person that is responsive to the needs, concerns, and ideas of our class. I plan to be exactly that.

The Class of '90 (a pretty awesome class) has alot to offer to Villanova. The freshman class gives a new insight and fresh ideas to the university. It is important that we have a strong voice in our Student Government. I know that I could do the job well if you give me the chance, generally because I have a big mouth and a loud voice. I have experience in student government being a representative and a vice president in high school.

During these first few weeks, I feel that I have become a part of Villanova not only in the academic sense but also socially, and I hope that all the other freshmen have found this adjustment as easy and as enjoyable as I have. During orientation we were constantly told to get involved and become a part, and this is what I intend to do as freshman representative.

I am a responsible and capable person and am willing to work diligently to accomplish what needs to be done. No complaint or problem is too small to be considered, for I believe that the duties of the freshman representative entail caring for the individual as well as the group as a whole.

Empty promises are usually characteristic of any campaign; however, the only promise I make is to be receptive to and considerate of people, as they are entrusting their problems with me. This is an ethic in which I believe and a policy which I would follow as freshman representative of the Class of 1990.

Reiner directs touching story

By EDWARD REILLY

"Stand by Me"
Producer — Bruce Evans
Director — Rob Reiner
Star rating — *****

When is the last time you saw a really good movie? If it is too far in the past to remember, then I have the solution for you. Columbia Pictures, under the leadership of director Rob Reiner and producer Bruce Evans has put out a film of fantastic proportion: "Stand by Me."

This excellent film is based on the novella "The Body" by Steven King, which you may find in the collection "Different Seasons" (if you're not among the 45-million fans of Steven King who have already read it). Nowadays a most unique and seemingly original idea is to take a great book and make it into a great movie. This is what Rob Reiner has done, amidst thousands of unbelievers who contested it could not be done.

Four extremely talented young actors: Wil Wheaton, River Phoenix, Corey Feldman and Jerry O'Connell portray the 12-year-olds that live in all of us. The advertisements and TV commercials give away most of the story line, but don't let that sway your intention of seeing it. In their hometown of Castle Rock (sound familiar, Steven King fans?), Ore., another boy their age has been reported missing. Accidentally eavesdropping, one boy discover's from his brother that the boy has been hit by a train, and the authorities have yet to locate and remove him.

The four venture a 20-mile hike just to take a look at him, as most Huck Finns and Tom Sawyers would for fun. Eventually the brother of the eavesdropping boy decides to bring his friends to the site also. The confrontation that exists there is satisfying by being both comical and frightful.

The trip of the four is a fantastic portrayal of the young spirit at work. This movie will jog your memory of events that seemed to have lost their space in your mind. Practically every scene will recall a personal experience of yours and have you remembering people, places and care-free times gone by.

The characters themselves are shockingly just like those friends you used to have before junior high school. Club houses, comic books, swimming holes, practical jokes and a lot of serious talk from 12-year-olds will have you wishing for more. The best displays of friendship occur between Gordie (Wil Wheaton) and Chris (River Phoenix). These scenes are put through to you with a maximum of talent so it is easy to see how the boys think and feel. The surprises in this movie will surprise you, but not in the ways you expect it.

Forgive me for sounding typical but I cannot in good consciousness let this next statement go unsaid: This film delivers. It will make you laugh, cry and wonder. For all those times you spent over $10 to take your special someone to a flick with popcorn and the extras, and went away feeling really shortchanged, then this is your chance to see a real show. The only qualm I have with this picture is that it is of average length, approximately an hour and a half. These people are real, the laughter, the tears, the shock are real. You need not your mother or brother to tell you how you were as a kid, this film will tell you easily and precisely.

So if you wish to be taken back to the time when Tom Sawyer was alive, laughing, and exploring in you, you need only do this: forget who you are and where you are, erase all tension from your mind and body, think about baseball cards, and go see "Stand by Me."

This week we're going to look at some recent releases from Timeworks, the Illinois-based productivity and educational software company. Also, GEOS (Graphic Environment Operating System), from Berkeley Softworks, receives a discussion because of the excellent utilities and programs that are offered in the GEOS package.

Wordwriter 128 — Timeworks ***

Wordwriter 128 is simply the best word processor I've seen for the Commodore 128 computer. I've been using it to write this weekly column with ease. Using pull-down menus for most of the options, Word Writer 128 requires almost no reading of the manual. If you've forgotten how to do something, just simply hit the escape key to get a choice of menus highlighted at the top of the screen. From these, a help selection is included that contains information for every function in Word Writer, thus avoiding having to look in the manual for instructions. By also filling out a registration card, the user is able to call Timeworks directly for technical support.

The elements that make Word Writer 128 such a success are the wide variety of options and the fact that what you see on the screen is exactly what appears at the printer. If you switch to italics, it appears that way on the screen. There are so many printing options that it actually becomes a chore deciding which options to turn on and which to forget about. Of the many options that make Word Writer a success, here are a few: a Spell Checker and Thesaurus, automatic movement of words that extend over the selected line length, a built-in calculator usable at any time, form letter capability, chaining of pages to form a report, simple loading directly from a directory, ability to use data from Data Manager 128 and Swiftcalc 128 in reports and the list goes on and on. This program is a must buy for all 128 owners. If this short introduction doesn't catch you then Timework's policy that they'll buy for you any other word processor that works better should.

Partner 128 is another excellent product from Timeworks. What Partner actually is can best be called a cartridge, because that is in fact what it is. Partner plugs into the cartridge port at the back of your Commodore 128 and its functions are able to be called up at any time by pressing the button on the casing, thus suspending the program you were using and calling up the Partner main menu. From this point, just as in other Timeworks products, use of the cartridge utilities is as simple as reading the selection on the screen. The accessories at your command are as follows: Appointment Calendar and Date Book, Memo Pad, Phone List and Auto Dialer, Name and Address List, Calculator, Typewriter, Envelope Addresser and Label Maker, Screen Printer and some other features that allow direct commands to the disk drive or printer from within your program. Obviously, Partner does a lot in just one small package. The only requirement is a disk which is used to save your data.

The Appointment Calendar/Date Book brings an actual calendar up in a window in which a day can be selected on which to write information. The day is called up with the return key and different windows for appointments and notes are available which will be printed directly on the calendar.

The Memo Pad is a mini word processor that allows you to write notes that can be instantly be printed or saved to disk. The Phone List and Auto Dialer will automatically dial a familiar phone number from you by selection from your Name and Address List, which can also be printed by the different parameters or with all information about your entries intact. The Calculator is a small calculator that can be made into a printing calculator with the touch of a button. The Typewriter turns your computer and printer into a conventional typewriter. Envelope Addresser and Label Maker is again a function of the Name and Address List. Finally, the Screen Print allows a screen dump of text from your main program. For a system with so much in a compact form, only the best can be said about Partner 128 — it's definitely worth the money.

Word Writer 128* leads the market as one of the best word processors. Available for the Commodore 128, Word Writer can't be beat for ease of use.

GEOS — Berkeley Softworks ***

This is another excellent product that is available for the Commodore 64 computer. GEOS stands for Graphic Environment Operating System and is exactly that — a system. GEOS is made up of four main parts from which most disk work, drawing and word processing can be done without having to leave the system. Very similar to the Macintosh computer in that it uses icons, a cursor pointer and a mouse if you'd like, GEOS contains everything that you could need in daily work on the 64. GEOS is broken down into four parts; deskTop, geoPaint, geoWrite and DeskAccessories. Each of these parts contain so much.

The different options and programs incorporated into GEOS can be selected via the deskTop, which includes all possible options needed to work with files. They can be sorted by icon, name or size on a disk and formatting a disk was never so easy. The deskTop is the connection to the rest of GEOS and gives the main menus from which other GEOS utilities can be chosen. Next, geoPaint is the Commodore version of those expensive drawing tools on the market.

It allows you to change colors and patterns, insert text and shapes and choose from 32 painting patterns and brush shapes. The geoPaint utility also lets you zoom in for that close-up work. Next is geoWrite — the what-you-see is what-you-get word processor. Simple to use, geoWrite gives you a large selection of print files and the ability to change fonts and incorporate pictures from geoPaint into a block of text. Finally, the DeskAccessories include an alarm clock, calculator, photo and text albums and a preference manager for changing system parameters. In one word, GEOS is excellent and must be bought.

The Lamb Lies Down in Philly for four nights

By JOE McGOWAN

Last Thursday, on the second of four sold-out nights at the Spectrum, Genesis performed against a backdrop of tumultuous applause and the flash and glare of Vari-lites. As frontman Phil Collins had promised, Genesis' set included selections from the new, the old and the very old.

After opening with "Mama" from the 1983 Genesis album, the trio of Banks, Rutherford, and Collins (augmented for the tour by drummer Chester Thompson and guitarist/bassist Daryl Stuermer) combed nearly the full length of their repertoire for the evening's performance.

From their newer material Genesis performed the popular successes "Follow You, Follow Me," "That's All," and "Home By The Sea," as well as "Land of Confusion" and "Tonight, Tonight, Tonight" from their most recent release Invisible Touch.

For many Genesis fans the older material of their set consisted in selections such as "Los Endos" from the Trick of the Tail album. But for those fans of Genesis' halcyon days the best was to come a full hour and a half into the show.

What began as the usual Genesis medley with "In the Cage" from the enigmatic Lamb Lies Down On Broadway led into "Unquiet Slumbers for the Sleepers... ...In that Quiet Earth" and from there to the great surprise of the evening — "Supper's Ready" from the classic Foxtrot album.

"Supper's Ready" is, arguably, the best work ever crafted by Genesis, with or without Peter Gabriel. If not the best, then this 24-minute mystery is their strangest accomplishment. In the medley today's Genesis only performed the climactic last sections of "Supper's Ready," those dealing with St. John's account of the Apocalypse. And so it was odd to have Phil Collins at one moment offering modern pop with "Follow You, Follow Me" and the next absorbed with the armies of Gog and Magog, Pythagoras with his looking-glass and the New Jerusalem.

As is becoming a tradition for Genesis shows, the group finished with an encore medley of songs ranging from "Twist and Shout" to "Pinball Wizard" all encompassed with the framework of their own "Turn It On Again."

Genesis have come a long way from their formation from two high school outfits at the Charterhouse school in Surrey in 1965 (The Anon and Garden Wall). Even though so much time has passed from their own genesis, and despite the fact that Gabriel-era Genesis is wholly distinct from the current version with Phil Collins at the helm, Banks, Rutherford, and Collins are still Geriesis.

Love and the Rockets
Beggar's Banquet

What do former Bauhaus members do for a living? They rise above the techo-pop slop that one hears today and create a whole new sound for the alternative listener. Love And Rockets have emerged from the gloomy abyss of Bauhaus with an exotic blend of creative guitar maneuvering and powerful bass lines.

Without the Bauhaus vocals of now-solo Peter Murphy, Daniel Ash can bask in the limelight as Love And Rockets' vocalist and guitarist. David J., on bass, and Kevin Haskins, on drums, are also longtime veterans in the Bauhaus/Rockets band. When Love And Rockets' first LP, Seventh Dream Of Teenage Heaven, came out in 1985, it was released only as an import. Now that the dance club popularity of "Kundalini Express" and "Ball Of Confusion" is growing, Love And Rockets have released their second and most recent LP, Express, in America.

Side one begins with the slow, Tones On Tail-like "It Could Be Sunshine." Then it kicks in with the metal overtones of "Kundalini Express." Ash's metal-like jamming guitar gives this noteworthy track a polished sound. The consistent guitar chords and the train-like synth combine to create the pulsing dance beat that the listener is more likely to hear in a "new wave" club.

"All In Mind" is the best of the LP's rockers and marks the beginning of the Floyd influenced songs on the album. The droning rhythm and eerie vocals are highly representative of the modernized psycheldelia roots from which Love And Rockets emerged. Ash injects this well-produced tune with doses of his guitar genius. The amusing lyrics add an extra edge to the song: "Now, Beauty can only ever be skin deep, but if I'm honest, that's all I ever really need/So throw us some flowers and we'll give you some songs and sunshine." Side two contains the extended acoustic version of this song, which employs the unusual keyboard techniques of John Rivers.

The album's second dance hit, "Ball Of Confusion," is a moody combination of Haskin's drums and David J's intense bass with occasional bursts of Ash's guitar. The inevitability of racial discrimination is the tune's topic and the band is rather straightforward in their approach with lyrics such as: "People moving out, people moving in/Why? Because of the color of their skin/Run, run, run ... but you just can't hide." Key words like "segregation" and "humiliation" stick out and make this song a pessimistic one.

Side two's gems, "Yin And Yang The Flower Pot Man" and "Love Me," owe their unique sound to Ash's vocalizing and guitar strumming. Ash's quick-paced guitar and David J's creative bass are complemented by a choir of the band's voices in "Yin And Yang The Flower Pot Man." The second gem, "Love Me," sounds a bit like digital delay Jesus And Mary Chain. Using guitar feedback and eerie vocals, Love And Rockets produces a powerfully-dense song which is one of the LP's moody tracks.

Out of the ashes of death rock and into the fire of hip progressive rock, Love And Rockets just released their soon-to-be college radio classic, Express. Coming out of the Bauhaus scene and enduring the transition from Tones On Tail to Love And Rockets, Ash, David J, and Haskins have matured musically and gone beyond the triteness of post-punk pop.

Without falling into the trippy-pop mode that so many of their British contemporaries have done and without relying on their former Bauhaus fame, Love And Rockets have recently established themselves as one of the more important forces in British music today.

German film explores men

By THERESA JONES

The Germans have never been known for their outstanding sense of humor or production of comedy films, but if "Manner" is an indication of a new trend, it will surely be one well-received. A light comedy now playing at The Ritz at Second and Walnut, "Manner" ("Men") offers a lively presentation of a trio caught in the battle of the sexes.

As "Men" opens, (and keep in mind that the title must be enunciated with the appropriate tone of contemptuous-indignation, as when your grandparents shake their heads and mutter "kids!"), we meet Julius Armbrust, a successful advertising executive in his mid-30s, married and with two children, and mistresses to round out his happiness.

On his 12th anniversary he discovers that the scarf his wife Paula is wearing around her neck is not for her sore throat, but to conceal a hickey. He is typically aghast, and seems to feel his own infidelities are of a totally different sort. So he moves out because he can't deal with the thought of his wife seeing someone else. Men!

Paula's boyfriend Stefan is also in his mid-30s, in Julius's mind merely a long-haired hippie, a loser as a free-lance illustrator. Under the pretext of being out-of-town on business for the rest of the summer, Julius has the opportunity to spy on Paula and Stefan. When Julius sees that Stefan has thrown out his old girlfriend, he approaches Stefan in order to rent the spare room. Despite initial suspicion due to Julius's bourgeois appearance, Stefan agrees and Julius moves in under the alias Daniel.

Completely unaware that his new roommate is also his lover's husband, Stefan begins to open up to "Daniel." While seemingly the epitome of the odd-couple, it becomes clear that Stefan is somewhat attracted to good liquor, expensive clothes and cars, and credit cards. Julius constantly makes critical remarks about Stefan's lifestyle, dismissed by Stefan on the grounds that Julius is a hopeless moralist, a stuffy businessman. To make the film interesting, the two begin to develop one of those friendships only the most bizarre pair can have. The mere contrast in character contributes greatly to the comedy, and the often childish arguments of the roommates are indeed hilarious. Men!

Then comes the surprise visit from Paula. Julius dons a gorilla mask and boxing gloves to conceal his identity, and while Paula is charmed by his antics, Stefan is less than amused. Stefan and Julius bicker, but events continue to strengthen the unlikely friendship. Men!

Meanwhile Julius, still wanting his wife back, is convinced that Paula is in love with the novelty of Stefan's artisan lifestyle, and plots to undermine the situation. Playing on Stefan's weakness for some of the finer things, Julius gets him a job interview and drives him in high gear, grooming and preparing him for the business world. With the job and the ensuing success, Stefan becomes too busy for Paula, and Julius makes his return home. Happy now to have him back, Paula explains that her lover had become a bore, he got to be "like you," she says to Julius. Women!

So all is back to normal you think? So it is, until Julius is informed that he will be working with a talented new young art director. Guess who. Then comes the revelation, the confrontation, and perhaps the biggest laugh of the movie.

"Manner," just over one-and-a-half hours, is all in German but with English subtitles. Surely some of the humor is lost in translation, but don't let that deter you from going to see a truly hilarious presentation of the fickleness and frivolity of relationships. Heiner Lauterbach, Uwe Ochsenknecht, and Ulrike Kriener as Julius, Stefan, and Paula, are sure to have a place in whatever future there is in German comedic productions. If it can be done this well once, let's hope it can be done again. So girls, go see "Men" and have a laugh at their expense, and you guys can have a look at what we girls see. Men!

Women runners win national title

By SUSAN GANEM

For the second consecutive year, the women's cross country team proved themselves as the best Catholic collegiate team in the country by winning the National Catholic Championships last weekend. The 16-team field included second place Big East rival Boston College, third place St. Thomas, fourth place DePaul, fifth place Holy Cross and host University of Notre Dame, among others.

Senior Gina Procaccio was once again the first Wildcat across the finish line. She won the 3.2 mile race with a time of 17:57.8. Copping second place was sophomore Vicki Huber with a time of 17:59.7. Rounding out Villanova's scoring were Kathy Franey (ninth-18:51.1), Dolores Carapella (11th-19:03.1), Dina Alborano (16th-19:12.5), Ruth Lockbaum (21st-19:25.1), and Jen Rahn (27th-19:52.9).

The harriers earned national ranking of 18th, the first time this season that Coach Marty Stern's runners have been considered national contenders.

"Our athletes performed well and I'm very pleased with their progress," commented Stern. "Gina Procaccio certainly deserves a lot of credit for not only being the National Catholic Champion, but for also being a great team leader."

Villanova will be tested this weekend when they travel to Tennessee to face Georgetown, host Tennessee, an 11th-ranked Virginia.

The men's team finished third at the same meet behind winner St. Thomas and second place Loyola. The first Wildcat across the finish line and second overall was senior Gerry O'Reilly, who finished the five-mile course in 24:21. Roy Mascolino (seventh-24:50), Sean O'Neill (14th-25:14), Ken Fowler (26th-25:49), and Jan Friedli (63rd-26:35) rounded out Villanova's scoring.

Villanova wins 7-Up Tourney

By JOHN RICCO

Villanova's women soccer team defeated the Colgate Red Raiders 1-0 last Saturday to win the first ever Villanova/7-UP Women's Soccer Tournament. Freshman forward Jeannine McLees broke a scoreless tie midway through the second half to give the Wildcats the victory.

The tournament was played in Villanova Stadium last Friday and Saturday and included teams from Monmouth and Niagara. Wildcat Coach Don Paxson was pleased with his team's performance and with the tournament as a whole. "I'm very happy with how the tournament went," Coach Paxson said, "You have to be happy to come out of it with a win."

Indeed, the tournament ran smoothly except for one problem, the weather. The first game Friday night went fine with Colgate prevailing over Monmouth 1-0. Senior forward Kirsten Salminen scored the winning goal for the Red Raiders with 38:04 remaining in the game. It was during game two, however, that the problems started.

With approximately 10 minutes left in the first half of the Villanova-Niagara contest a thunderstorm caused a blackout at the stadium, forcing a postponement. The game was resumed with the start of the second half Saturday morning at 8 a.m. The bad weather continued as a steady rain fell all day Saturday, drenching the players and the field.

Villanova advanced to the championship game with a 3-0 victory over the Purple Eagles of Niagara Saturday morning. After the scoreless first half the Wildcats erupted for three goals, two by sophomore back Ann Beirne and the other by forward Ann Brennan.

Despite the field conditions, the championship game was a good one. The first half was even with numerous scoring opportunities for both teams. The scoring drought was finally ended when Jeannine McLees scored with 18:42 remaining in the game. Villanova's defense led by junior goalie Lynn McHale was able to shut the Colgate offense down the rest of the way preserving the Wildcat's 1-0 victory and upping the team's overall record to 6-1-2. "Shutting out Colgate was very exciting for our girls," Coach Paxson commented.

In addition to her goal, Brennan kept pressure on her opponents throughout the tournament, earning praise from her coach. "Ann did a great job," Coach Paxson said. "If I got to pick the M.V.P. of the tournament," he added, "she'd be my pick."

Field hockey drop two

By NED THOMPSON

The Villanova field hockey team struggled through a difficult week, dropping a pair of games while seeing their record fall below .500 to three and four. There were very few bright spots for the Wildcats as their offense managed only one goal and 14 shots in the two games on the road.

The team suffered their first defeat against an excellent University of Pennsylvania team, 3-0. The team was rarely able to get the ball out of their zone and managed only three shots on Penn's goal. Villanova's goalie Sue Ruff played well in a losing effort, collecting 14 saves while under constant pressure.

On Saturday the team travelled to Hofstra University where they were defeated, 5-1. Freshman Chris Atkins scored the lone Villanova goal to close out the game's scoring with only 4:58 remaining in the second half.

Sailors take first

By BOB DE GROOT

The Villanova Sailing Team kicked off their season on the weekend of Sept. 13-14 with two regattas.

The Freshman Seminar, held at the U.S. Naval Academy, was attended by six freshmen. The seminar included instruction by Navy's expert coaches in dingy racing and a short regatta. The team's advisor summed up the weekend as "the best weekend I ever had."

During the same weekend five Villanova sailors attended the Drexel Minor at Penn's Landing. With the help of the home crowd Villanova placed first in A Division and third in B Division.

Nevertheless, the regatta had a few hindrances. First off, the Drexel race committee provided the sailors with a half keg of beer at the dock, With this distraction the sailors had to deal with the shifty winds and heavy currents of the Delaware River. Unfortunately, the regatta had to be cut short when the racers discovered that the course markers had been stolen by one of the friendly powerboaters.

The next weekend of Sept. 20, four team members sailed in the Army Coed Regatta. Sustantially overweight and somewhat inexperienced, the team finished mid-fleet against its stiff competition. The West Point Race Committee seemed unenthused and called the regatta at the first hint of rain. The somewhat disgruntled V.U. sailors packed up and sailed home setting new land speed records.

The past weekend nine members of the team attended the Navy Yawl Invite. The crew headed by skipper Bob deGroot was faced with experienced competition from Princeton, University of Delaware, Swarthmore, State University of New York, Maritime and State University of New York at Stony Brook.

Golf team suffers setback

By STEVE SHMUKLER

The Villanova Golf Team, looking forward to the Big East Championships, experienced a setback at the Walter T. McLaughlin Invitational Tournament this weekend. Villanova was only able to obtain sixth place overall on the soggy Beth Page State Park black course, trailing eventual winners Penn State by 47 strokes and Big East rival and tournament host St. John's by 23.

"I wasn't pleased with their performance. Maybe they were trying too hard. We have to get the mental edge back," Coach Ficco said.

Senior Captian Chet Walsh's two round total of 152, for sixth place individually, was the only bright spot for the Cats.

"Chet could have won the tournament. He is a very five player. He should have been under par the second round," Ficco added.

Villanova travels to Georgetown next week, hoping to defend last year's Big East championship. Walsh, who has placed second and third the last two years, hopes to lead Villanova to the championship with an individual championship. Providence, St. John's and Georgetown pose the biggest threat to the Wildcats.

"I'd like to see Chet win at least. He is definitely a championship caliber player. But, if we are going to repeat, we are going to need more than one man," Ficco concluded.

Men crush Eastern

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

After going 1-2 through their first three games of the season, the Villanova men's soccer team has gone crazy by winning four straight. The week started out against Eastern College under the lights at Goodreau Stadium. Defense was the name of the Cat-attack as Eastern was allowed only three shots on goal in each period. The defense annihilated Eastern rendering them scoreless.

The Wildcats, on the other hand, had no trouble producing offense. Nova scored twice in each half. First half goals were notched by freshman John Bond and freshman Peter Esz. In the second half, juniors Jeff Collins and Ben Tatta netted a goal apiece. Final score — Wildcats 4, Eastern 0.

The men's drive for an undefeated week was not over yet. While other Wildcats were beating up on the Mercyhurst Lakers, the men's soccer team was inducing its own kind of pain. On the wet turf, under the guiding eyes of Jumbo Elliott's statue, the Cats took on Bloomsburg University. The game went scoreless until 23:60 was gone in the first half when Villanova's Joe Reteneller ripped the net for the first half's only score. Villanova protected its lead for 10 minutes into the second half before mounting another scoring drive. Ben Tatta broke the second-half ice and followed up 11 minutes later with another score. The teams traded goals before the game ended. The last Villanova score coming off the foot of junior Eric Friday.

The next teams that must run the Villanova Wildcat gauntlet in the coming week are Temple, Rutgers-Camden and Penn-[illegible] University.

Tennis wins pair

By JOSEPH RUSCAVAGE

The women's tennis team recently shut out both Millersville and Swarthmore but were beaten 6-3 by Seton Hall.

The wins improved the team's overall record to five wins and three losses. The team has already improved by three victories over last year's record with 12 more matches left this season. The LadyCats have been playing "extremely well" according to Coach Bob Langran as they enter the toughest part of this season's schedule. Their next two opponents are talented teams from Delaware and Rutgers.

Coach Langran said his team is "much stronger then a year ago" and that his team is only "going to get better" as the season continues. He hopes that with such tough competition in their conference as Boston College, Georgetown, Seton Hall and Syracuse his team can finish respectably in the Big East Conference Championship.

In beating Swarthmore, LadyCats Stacie Hall, Beth Lemon, Janet Lowe, Miriam Robinson, Lynn Slowinski and Laura Smelas all recorded straight set victories. The doubles teams of Hall and Jeanne O'Connor, Lemon and Smelas, and Lowe and Slowinski also recorded wins. Versus Millersville Cheryl Dorward, Hall, Lemon, O'Connor, Slowinski, and Smelas won in singles while the doubles teams repeated their earlier performances with straight sets victories.

Seton Hall then defeated the LadyCats 6-3. In singles Beth Lemon won in three sets while Stacie Hall won in two sets. Miriam Robinson also won in an extra match. The doubles team of Janet Lowe and Lynn Slowinski won in three sets to get the final victory in a disappointing loss.

Coach Langran feels his team has "good spirit" and that they have continued to play well. The LadyCats will soon enter a stretch where they play 10 matches in 10 days.

Women Cats claw foes

By DANTE SCALA

The women's volleyball team cruised to an easy victory over LaSalle last Wednesday, 15-11, 15-8, 15-6. The win improved their record to 6-7.

The starting squad was not used during the match. During the second and third games, five freshmen and one sophomore started on the court for the Wildcats. Nevertheless, the match took only 40 minutes, and the first game was over in 8 minutes.

Passing and serving were key factors in the team's victory. The squad served two or three aces per game, and generally, The serves disabled their [LaSalle's] offense, and gave us [Villanova] a free ball," according to Head Coach Dennis McGinnis.

McGinnis also cited freshmen Hilary Anderson and Jill Beiter for good performances.

With their latest win, the Wildcats have now won six out of their last 10 matches since their 0-3 start. McGinnis commented that the squad is "a very young team ... it takes time [for the players] to acclimate themselves to teammates, but they're now becoming accustomed to each other." All in all, McGinnis stated that there [illegible] of improvement."

Runningback Ron Sency looks for an opening during action against the Lakers of Mercyhurst.

By MICHAEL IRONS

"We got away with it. Maybe on another day we might not have," Coach Andy Talley said after his Villanova Wildcats had used a flanker-reverse pass play to score the winning touchdown in a 42-35 victory over Mercyhurst last Saturday.

"I just felt that we needed a little bit of razzle-dazzle at that point," Talley said. Villanova is now 2-0 this season and 7-0 under Coach Talley.

With the game tied at 35 the winning score was set-up by a fantastic interception by John McGowan, who caught the ball only inches from the ground, while diving over a Mercyhurst player. This gave the Wildcats the ball at the Laker 35-yard line with a little over two minutes remaining. After an incomplete pass, flanker Greg Downs hit a wide-open Bob Brady with the touchdown pass which fooled the entire Mercyhurst defense.

The Laker defense was tooled often during the afternoon as Villanova reeled off 444 yards of total offense. Quarterback Kirk Schultz was the star of the afternoon, completing 24 out of 42 passes for 309 yards and three touchdowns. Schultz has hit on 36 out of 58 passes in his first two games at quarterback for the Wildcats amassing 417 yards.

Turnovers was the other story of the game. Villanova fumbled three times, allowing the Lakers to get back in the game, and Mercyhurst four times and also threw two interceptions.

Villanova took a big 21-0 lead in the first quarter, converting a pair of Laker turnovers into touchdowns by Downs on a nine-yard pass from Schulz and a Gary Pascoe one-yard rush. Ron Sency accounted for the other score on a four-yard gallop. It was not until the 3:07 mark of the second quarter when Mercyhurst got on the board. After missing the extra point, the Lakers had cut the lead to 21-6.

Unfortunately for the Wildcats, they caught the turnover bug and fumbled the ensuing kickoff. Mercyhurst scored two plays later but again missed the extra point, making the score 21-12.

Things got worse for the Wildcats, as Mercyhurst recovered the on-side kickoff and again scored. This time the Lakers converted the point after touchdown and what had been a 21-point lead, was reduced to only two at the half.

"It was a great learning experience. Hopefully they've learned that when you have a team on the run you can't let up, Talley said.

If Talley said this at halftime, the Wildcats took it to heart by driving 71-yards for a touchdown. Another Laker turnover was converted into a seven-yard touchdown pass from Schulz to Downs and boosted the lead to 35-19 which held up going into the final quarter.

But just as they did in the second quarter, the Lakers came storming back to tie the game.

"This was a much tougher game than I expected. I never thought they had the ability to take us to the wire," Talley said. But when John Prencipe scored on a 16-yard run, Mercyhurst began to scratch back into the game.

The Lakers got two more points when Schulz was tackled in the end zone and then knotted the game on Bryan Rostek's five-yard run plus the subsquent two-point conversion, with 6:40 left to go into the game.

"Our players showed a lot of courage by coming back," Talley said. The Wildcats stiffened-up on defense and with McGowan's interception gave the offense the opportunity to win the game.

Freshman Bob Brady was another offensive star, catching eight passes for 149 yards and one touchdown. This offensive output tied Brady for ninth on VU's all-time single game best performance list. Downs also had a great afternoon catching the ball. He caught three passes, two of which were for touchdowns, and also threw the game winning touchdown.

Sophomore tight end Jim Cashman caught a career high of five receptions for 87 yards.

Villanova has its first home game tomorrow, when the University of Buffalo, with a 3-1 record, comes to Goodreau Stadium. Buffalo is lead by junior tailback O.D. Underwood who has rushed for 428 yards and two touchdowns on 64 carries. Also to look out for is quarterback Ken Crosta who has completed 33 out of 54 passes for three touchdowns and 502 yards.

The defense is anchored by inside linebackers Mike Laipple and Steve Wojciehowski.

NCAA implements testing

They have an obligation to me, to their sport, to their families and especially to themselves ... They should be examples. Coach Massimino

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

In the aftermath of the deaths of University of Maryland superstar Len Bias and Cleveland Browns' safety Don Rogers, the NCAA is now taking steps to end the growing drug problem in college athletics.

At the beginning of this week all NCAA basketball players had to sign waivers saying that they could be tested for drugs at anytime during the season. This waiver extends to all who participate in varsity college athletics. The entire drug testing issue brings up many questions and problems. Is this fair to the athlete or does this violate their rights as individuals? What will the ramifications of a positive drug test be? How will this affect college athletics and the athletes themselves? Is the cost worth it?

A NCAA board will be meeting during this month across the nation to explain the drug policy set forth by the NCAA. The policy, at present, in Division-I-A basketball is as follows: the 64 NCAA tournament teams will definitely be tested. The teams could be tested while they are preparing for the tournament, during the tournament or after the tournament, according to John Toner, chairman of the NCAA drug testing board.

If a player tests positive between the first round and before the Regionals, the team's disqualification is not retroactive. However, if a player tests positive while exiting the tournament the decision will be retroactive. For instance, if a member of the national champion team would test positive after the championship, the team would be disqualified and there would be no national champion for that year.

The cost of all this testing is between $200 and $300 per test. This means that if the top eight players, by playing time, were tested only once during the tournament, it would cost the NCAA between $100,000 and $150,000.

What will this do for the college athletics scene? The board feels that this policy will be a deterring agent and will, in the words of John Toner, "guarantee fair and equitable competition," along with the hope that it "will relieve the feeling of a need to take banned substances in order to perform."

How do coaches feel about this? Most coaches share the opinion that drug testing should be done for a variety of reasons. Basketball coach Rollie Massimino states, "They have an obligation to me, to their sport, to their families and especially to themselves ... They should be examples."

What is the athlete's response to this issue? The general consensus is that, in the words of varsity waterpolo player Ed Rae, "If I choose to play a varsity sport, drug testing is not a violation of my rights."

When asked if it is fair that athletes are tested for drugs when the general student population is not, most athletes again fell into the same category. The athletes' responses can be summed up in the words of Wyatt Maker, "I don't think it's unfair, because the impact of a drug-related problem, such as the death of Len Bias, is greater because we are in the limelight."

However, not all student athletes feel this way. Sophomore Marc Peppenelli stated that he felt it was against his rights as an individual to be forced to undergo drug testing. However, Peppenelli signed the waiver in order to continue his lacrosse career at Villanova.

In these times of political red tape and legal runarounds, it is doubtful that this issue will stop with the NCAA mandates. Long after the NCAA decides what it wants to do, lawsuits, withholding, conflicts and private schools adding expensive court battles and hurting the [illegible]

This week's Saco East Athlete of the Week is sophomore Ann Beirne of the women's soccer team. Beirne, from Dublin, Ireland, was named Most Outstanding Player in the first annual Villanova/7-UP Women's Soccer Tournament.

Beirne scored twice in the Wildcats' opener against Niagara powering Villanova to a 3-0 win.

In the championship game, Beirne again played outstandingly. She kept offensive pressure on the Colgate goal throughout the game and also excelled on defense. It was for this reason that Beirne was also named the tournament's Best Defensive Player, as voted by the coaches.

Beirne is third scorer on the team with four goals and has been a major factor for the great season the women are having so far with a 6-1-2 record.

Athletics vs. Academics

Scholarships examined

By DANTE SCALA

During the 1986-87 scholastic year, the University will give out only 51.9 percent of the total athletic scholarship money which the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), the ruling body of college athletics, allows the University to distribute to student-athletes. This percentage is based on the number of athletic scholarships currently in use at the University.

However, the estimated amount of athletic scholarship money, $1,719,228, is more than double the money given for academic scholarships, which is estimated at $758,160.

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, commented, that the difference between the two scholarship funds does not reflect an emphasis on athletics over academics. He stated that the many academic contributions, such as the upgrading of classrooms and labs, the increased number of computers, and the millions of dollars put into science buildings, have to be taken into account.

Also, many students receive benefits from the need-based financial aid grants; in the aid program, Driscoll stated that, "A good student [having financial need] is favored in the financial aid package." All in all, Driscoll said that the contributions to academics far outweigh those given to athletics.

Dr. Michael E. Burke, chairman of the Honors Program and head of the presidential scholarship committee, commented, "Financial aid is to assist students who would be coming here anyway. Athletic and academic scholarships are designed to attract people whose special talents might not be part of our student body otherwise; So that, in one sense, the breakdown of non-need based scholarships is an indication of what kind of special talents we [the University] want."

However, Burke agreed that the scholarship situation does not "show the whole picture," citing that other monies are spent on academics and that, "The University is spending a considerable deal of money on athletically and academically talented students besides scholarships."

Paul Mullin, secretary of Student Government's department of academic affairs, stated, "The number of students and parents directly reflected by the high quality of our athletic program. We can be proud of our athletic program; likewise, we must invest at least equal amounts through academic scholarships to bolster the academic program and the student body at the University, especially in the light of rising tuition costs."

Currently, the NCAA allows the University to distribute the equi-

Paper delivery probed

By SIOBHAN A. RODER

In response to numerous complaints from students not receiving delivery of the New York Times and Philadelphia Inquirer from the Villanova Student News Service, representatives of both papers have visited campus within the past two weeks to investigate the delivery problems.

On-campus residents who have subscribed to the papers have cited many problems with the delivery of their papers. A resident of Simpson Hall reported last week that no one living there had received delivery of their papers since the beginning of the semester. According to a second floor Alumni Hall resident, "Nobody on the floor gets the paper on Sundays."

Paul Rosenbaum, who is in charge of the Villanova Student News Service, was unavailable for comment earlier this week.

Williams' concert sparks complaints

By MARY E. CHAREST and CORRIN LONG

The office of Student Activities received "a good number of complaints from parents" as to the content of the Robin Williams concert Saturday night, according to Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities.

"We had hopes that it would be less offensive," he said.

According to a reliable source, there were no explicit rules in the contract as to what Williams could say at the concert, but the contract did note that he would be performing for Parents' Weekend at a Catholic university.

The source said that the contract was made with his manager and, "We don't know if his manager ever told him.

"When I spoke to him after the concert he was surprised that so many parents were there," the source said.

There was also a problem with the acoustics in the duPont Pavilion. The people in sections WA and WB apparently had trouble hearing; one student said that it sounded like Williams was mumbling.

According to Bonas, people in those sections were either relocated or refunded their money. Bonas

Minority enrollment up

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

The number of black students enrolling as freshmen at Villanova this year constitutes the largest increase yet, more than doubling the 23 that entered in the previous class, Denise Houser, minority recruiter for the Office of Admissions, said this week.

Fifty black students, approximately 3.2 percent of the 1,560 freshmen at Villanova, form almost half of the overall minority enrollment in the Class of 1990. The Rev. Harry J. Erdlen, O.S.A., dean of Admissions, reported that the number of minorities in the freshman class totals 102, approximately 6.5 percent of the class, as compared to 95 minorities in last year's entering class.

The increase of black freshmen on campus has made a noticeable difference to other minority students. Junior English/communications major Geri Barton said, "Now you can see that there are more minorities at Villanova, which I think makes the minority students here more comfortable."

Barton further stated that the increased minority enrollment is "overdue. It's not even close to the average level for most schools in the country, but it's a start."

The process of minority recruitment at Villanova was accelerated "drastically" over the 1985-86 school year, according to Erdlen. The hiring of Houser as the University's first minority recruiter in August 1985 represents the major reason for this increase.

The task of interesting minorities in Villanova University is a difficult one, according to Erdlen and Houser. The Admissions Office is limited by funding. Also, many universities are actively pursuing the same well-qualified students, according to Houser, and Villanova often competes with Harvard and Princeton for a certain student.

In addition to funding and competition limitations, the Admissions officers must work against Villanova's reputation for homogeneity. "Villanova has an image problem [regarding low minority enrollment]," stated Houser.

Although the class of 1990 represents the largest number of black freshmen to date, Houser is not completely satisfied. She said, "That's not enough for me. I want more, but Rome wasn't built in a day and Villanova University's minority recruitment won't change in a day either."

To overcome the "Vanillanova" image and to continue the upward trend in minority enrollment, Villanova must work harder than the other universities, according to Houser.

Most nurses pass boards

By DEBBIE GROSS

Ninety-two percent of Villanova's class of 1986 nursing graduates who took the Pennsylvania State Board of Nursing test in July passed the test, M. Louise Fitzpatrick, dean of the School of Nursing, said this week.

According to Fitzpatrick, the success rate can be attributed to the curriculum presented in the School of Nursing "which mixes Villanova's liberal arts tradition with experience in clinical studies."

This undergraduate curriculum undergoes an evaluation every two years and refinements are made from suggestions of both students and faculty each year, Fitzpatrick stated. Because there have been no great changes in the curriculum since 1981, the faculty is experienced with the curriculum and is therefore better able to prepare students for the boards.

Fitzpatrick explained that the board exam is a tedious process involving every state in the country. Every five years, people who represent different areas in the nursing field are chosen from each state to create an exam for each state. The exam is an assessment of the minimum safety techniques acquired by the graduates and required for practice.

The exams are given twice a year, once in February and once in July, at various sites all over the country. If the graduate passes the exam, he or she is licensed in the state in which he or she took the exam and can practice in that state, Fitzpatrick said.

Villanova's School of Nursing is accredited by the National League for Nursing and meets the standards of the State Board of Nursing in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The undergraduate program was reviewed and reaccredited in 1983 and at the same time, a recently developed graduate program received its accreditation.

According to Fitzpatrick, many job opportunities exist for nurses because of a nursing shortage. She said that many Villanova graduates begin with jobs in hospitals and then go into home health care programs, military programs, industries or schools.

Fitzpatrick also stated that many of Villanova's graduates return to various graduate schools.

Computer usage grows

By LYNN PERDEK

The tremendous increase in the use of computers on the Villanova campus has created the need to double the amount of computer equipment in the past year, Daniel McGee, manager of academic services for the University Computing and Information Services (U.C.I.S.) said this week.

Not only more students, but also the faculty and the administration are finding the need to use computers, he said. McGee noted that especially the students of the College of Commerce and Finance have increased their use of computers "at a phenomenal rate in the past year."

The increase in the use of computers on the Villanova campus has created the need to double the amount of computer equipment.

There are three public computer sites on the Villanova campus, located in Mendel, Bartley and Tolentine halls. Mendel's computer room is open 24 hours a day for the students' convenience. The other two sites are open 16 hours a day, closing at midnight, but remain open 24 hours at the end of the semester.

With many students putting off computer work until the end of the semester, there are often many more people than available computers, McGee said. When this occurs, priorities are set at Savage was released after posting 10 percent of $2,000 bail. A preliminary hearing for Savage has not yet been scheduled.

Police said the investigation was continuing.

Villanova News Service investigated

scriptions on the Villanova University campus, visited Villanova late last week after receiving a complaint from Dr. Peter S. Elek of the economics department. Elek notified him that some of his students were not receiving adequate delivery of their New York Times subscriptions.

Elek said he requires his students to subscribe to the Times for class. He reported that out of 50 subscriptions sent in, there have been problems with about 10 of them. Late last week he said that one or two of the 10 hadn't received the Times at all and that the others did not receive their papers "periodically."

Elek pointed out that the Villanova Student News Service uses two sets of student deliveries. One set delivers papers on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, while the other set works on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Elek said that he expected occasional problems with delivery, but that the frequency of problems this year was too high. He added that he did not believe the fault was with the New York Times, but rather with the sets of distributors of the Villanova Student News Service.

At the time, Allen said that he would be getting in touch with Rosenbaum last Thursday or Friday to check to see that each segment of the Villanova News Service operation was "running the way it should."

"There is no set game plan," Allen said. "I want to make sure everything is in proper order. I don't know exactly where the problem is, so I've come down [from New York City] to look into it."

Allen said that the total New York Times circulation on campus is about 175 newspapers. He did not have any figures on how many subscribers were having delivery problems.

Allen said that there are delivery "problems somewhere almost every day," but that the delivery problems at Villanova this year seemed to be of greater magnitude than usual.

Faythe Benson of the Philadelphia Inquirer marketing department said Monday that she had received "two or three" complaints from Villanova students about a week ago Sunday concerning delivery problems.

Benson contacted Rosenbaum last Saturday and reported that he said he was "not aware of the problems."

Subsequent to being contacted by the Villanovan on Monday concerning the delivery problems, Benson came to campus later that day to track Rosenbaum down. She made an appointment to meet with him Tuesday afternoon, but he failed to appear as of press time.

"The Villanova Student News Service works independently, and we try to help them develop a business," said Benson. "But, when it comes to customer problems, we have to get involved."

"We [the Inquirer] are not having problems delivering to him [Rosenbaum]," Benson said. She added that when she had spoken to Rosenbaum he had mentioned personnel difficulties.

On Monday, after hearing from the Villanovan of the delivery problems, Benson sent out a letter to all on-campus residents which read, "If you have subscribed to the Inquirer this semester and are having delivery problems, please call me at 854-5535."

Allen said that anyone having delivery problems with their New York Times subscription should contact the Villanova Student News Service or Allen himself at (212) 556-7275.

Williams' concert

said that folded bleachers from the Jake Nevin Arena were brought over for the people who wanted to move. Some people also sat in the aisles, he said.

Bonas said he was not certain of the cause of the acoustics problem, but he tends "to think it was a sound production problem which can be corrected in the future." He explained, also, that since the Robin Williams concert was the first in the Pavilion, the "quirks were bound to occur."

A number of people complained about the temperature in the Pavilion since there was no air conditioning.

According to Bonas, though, the rest of the weekend was a success.

The weekend began Friday night with an after dinner reception in Connelly Center, sponsored by the Blue Key Society. A variety of music, including jazz, folk, rock and classical, was set up throughout the center. This year, each parent received a wine glass in memory of the occasion.

Saturday started with academic program disscussions given by the dean and faculty of each college.

Following these discussions, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, gave a presentation on "The Augustinian Connection."

Many attended the mass sponsored by the Campus Ministry on Sunday morning in the duPont Pavilion. This year, mass was followed by a brunch in Connelly Center.

each of the three computer sites; commerce and finance students receiving first priority at Bartley, engineering students at Tolentine, computer science majors at Mendel.

Computer accounts are easily obtained and free of charge. If a student is currently in a class which requires the use of computers, such as a political science lab, that student is automatically credited with a computer account. Any student who requires the use of the computer for research purposes can acquire an account through his department.

Every student is permitted to use the personal computers, but those students who have priority often occupy most of the computer terminals during the most popular hours, McGee said.

U.C.I.S. provides consulting services and aid to students and faculty, and training to administrative personnel. U.C.I.S. also offers a series of seminars throughout the year designed to introduce and educate students and faculty about the operation of the computers on the Villanova campus.

According to McGee, U.C.I.S. has expanded the system making it possible to add more VAX terminals to the Digital Equipment Computers on campus.

There are also plans to increase the number of personal computers available to students as well as the number of computers for secretaries in the administrative offices.

The National Order of Omega

VILLANOVA'S GREEK OF THE WEEK

COLLEEN CANNON

Order of Omega salutes Colleen Cannon as this week's Greek of the Week! Colleen is a proud member of Alpha Chi Omega where she serves as Warden, putting her in charge of Initiation. She previously served her chapter as one of the vice presidents. Unfortunately, her chapter didn't see much of her during RUSH because she was disguised as a Panhellenic Rush Counselor.

Not only is Colleen active in her own chapter, she also serves the entire Greek Community as vice president of the Order of Omega. Her duties include anxiously awaiting her chance to design new Omega sportswear ... she plans to rid Villanova's campus of the ever-popular "toilet seat sweatshirt" forever.

Being the versatile "women of the '80s" that she is, Col doesn't limit herself solely to Greek activities. She was the "cute" member of the Steering Committee for the 1986 Orientation Program and again, is especially known for her fashion designing of the fuscia t-shirts worn by all during the program.

Taking Villanova a step further, Colleen extends herself to the community. She actively participates in the Special Olympics Program. This year she is Chairman of the Volunteers Committee (she may consider private "hugging" lessons for those who think they need practice) and she previously assisted on the Games Committee.

She is a coveted member of the Blue Key Society (because she KNOWS all the "cool" spots to point out on her tour!) and also a "valuable" member of the V.A.L.U.E. Program (Villanova Alumni Leading Undergraduate Experience).

On a more personal level, Colleen enjoys cookies, the color pink, and "that guy." Congratulations Colleen ... you're our favorite kind of cookie!!

Minority enrollment rises

pects of the active attempt to attract minorities this year will include phone-calling campaigns, letter-writing campaigns as well as a second annual Minority Student Open House, scheduled for April 11. The first open house, held last year, was pronounced a tremendous success by Houser.

In its letter-writing campaign, Villanova has written to many high schools, minority agencies, churches and minority leaders, mostly in the Northeast, informing them of Villanova's new aggressive policy of minority recruitment and requesting the referral of eligible students.

The first brochure ever on minorities at Villanova will be coming out shortly.

Two minority programs that Villanova has consistently offered are presidential minorities scholarships and the Academic Advancement Program (AAP). The Social Actions Committee works on these programs.

Five scholarships were awarded this year, one more than in previous years, to highly qualified minority students.

The Academic Advancement Program (AAP) "takes a chance" on students who might have lower standardized test scores, but high potential.

One AAP student, Cynthia Glover, a freshman finance major, said, "AAP has helped a lot of blacks come here. The minority staff went out of their way to make us comfortable."

Villanova spends a great deal of effort searching for eligible students, according to Houser. A main source is the "National Achievement Scholarship for Outstanding Negro Students" which provides the names of well-qualified students. The University also participates in Upward Bound, a minorities academic talent search.

Villanova sponsors several programs at the University. This summer, Villanova was host to PRIME, Philadelphia Regional office for Introducing Minorities to Engineering, and Aspira, a program designed to encourage hispanic students to seek further education.

Minority recruitment often requires that Villanova Admissions officers drive high school students to the campus. Some students would not otherwise have the initiative or ability to visit Villanova.

Tailgates monitored

By CYNTHIA AGRESTA

"Encouraging students to be in charge of themselves," is a Villanova philosophy that led to the creation of the Tailgate Management Team, Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities said this week.

The Tailgate Management Team (TMT), is a group of 15 students who, this year, for the first time, are in charge of overseeing each tailgating event and making sure that everything is running smoothly.

Their responsibilities include processing applications, assigning table locations, being present at each tailgate from start to finish, and evaluating the success or failure of each event, Bonas said.

Lee Loscaile, a junior who leads the Tailgate Management Team, said that the largest part of the TMT's job is making sure that all the parties end by 1:30 p.m. and that people are heading to the football game.

There were 120 tables at the Parents' Weekend tailgate and it is estimated that about 3,000 people participated in the festivities. Loscaile called the event "a tremendous success."

The Tailgate Management Team will oversee the next four tailgating parties planned for this year's remaining home football games.

Higher Ed Act designed

By KAREN L. ZIEBELL

(CPS) — The average American college student should be pleased with the long-delayed but crucial Higher Education Reauthorization Act of 1986, even if students did not get everything the college lobby in Washington wanted, the U.S. Student Association (USSA) recently reported.

The $10.2 billion bill, which was supposed to be passed in early 1985, emerged from a House-Senate conference committee recently.

The new legislation gave Congress the authority to fund all federal college programs, from student aid to campus housing, and established rules that will govern the programs for the next five years.

NATIONAL NEWS NOTES

Temple strikes over contract

Over 300 Temple University professors, librarians and other academic professionals went on strike this week after contract negotiations failed. The union, representing over 1,100 faculty members, seeks a new two-year contract to replace the pact that expired June 30.

About 53 percent of the 200 classes were cancelled as members of the American Association of University Professors walked the picket lines.

The administration reported that not all professors, especially part-time and nonunion faculty, honored the strike.

Over 30,000 students attend Temple, but no figure has been released as to how many have been affected by the walkout.

U. of Del. refuses calendar change

The Arts and Science Faculty Senate at the University of Delaware this week unanimously rejected a proposal for changes in the 1987-88 academic calendar.

The proposal was to decrease the semester's length and number of class meetings and increase class times from 50 to 60 minutes and 75 to 90 minutes.

The new calendar would have ended spring semester in early May and installed a nine-day Fall Break in October.

As another alternative to the calendar, some faculty members suggested the abolition of the winter session. This plan would allow a Fall Break and an early end of the spring semester.

Co-ed dorms rejected at U. of Ariz.

The administration at the University of Arizona (U.A.) recently rejected proposals to introduce more co-ed residence halls on campus, despite unanimous support from student government and the Residence Hall Association (RHA).

The recommendation included the idea of 24-hour visitation rights in the study lounges of Arizona and Sonora residence halls and also the conversion of these halls to co-ed living halls on a floor-by-floor basis.

U.A. Vice President for Student Affairs Dudley B. Woodard rejected both ideas, although both were fully supported by the Associated Students of U.A. and the RHA.

The president of the RHA, Ieva Bilsens, and the director of Residence Life, Cecil R. Taylor, both agreed that the Arizona and Sonora halls present the largest behavioral problems in the U.A. system. Because studies showed lower vandalism rates, Bilsens said, "those changes could have made such a big difference in the rowdiness and vandalism problems in those halls."

Scholarships

valent of 292 "full" (tuition and room and board) scholarships among its student-athletes on the 24 varsity teams. These scholarships amount to $3,309,820, based on estimated, average tuition and room and board costs of $11,335.

The University has given the equivalent of 134 and one-half full athletic scholarships and 27 full-tuition scholarships. This adds up to $1,719,228 in scholarship money (based on average, estimated fees).

In every sport except men's track, the number of scholarships given out is below the number allowed by the NCAA.

Dr. Theodore A. Aceto, director of Athletics, pointed out that "[with a] minimum amount of effort in scholarships ... our sports are thriving." He cited that the men's Big East teams had won the Big East Commissioner's Trophy for overall performance in all sports three times in the last five years, and had finished second twice. Also, the women's teams have won the award for the last three years, since the Big East began to give the award for women's sports.

In addition, Aceto commented that there has been much positive reaction to the athletic program. For instance, he cited that the gradual build-up of the football program has received favorable press. In all, he stated that the sports program has brought the University much exposure and recognition; also, a new Big East contract with CBS Sports and ESPN will bring in money to the University. He concluded, "We've got to be doing something right."

Driscoll remarked that although the athletic program is "almost totally subsidized," as it is in other institutions, the cost is justified because of the benefits the entire University community can gain from it. He stated that the University is "interested in developing the whole person," and the entire athletic program helps to provide for that; for instance, athletics aids students' health and social life.

Driscoll mentioned that students have use of the Jake Nevin Field House and the duPont Pavilion, and noted the extensive intramural program, which was described by Aceto as "one of the best ... in the East." Driscoll also said that the student body benefits from varsity athletics; most students participate as spectators, while the athletes benefit by participating in sports and getting an education. While the athletic program does not pay for itself, Driscoll described the deficits as expenses, because the program is for the students' benefit.

Of the athletic scholarships given, football and men's and women's basketball and track distribute the most. Football has given out the equivalent of 45 scholarships — it is allowed 70 full scholarships. Men's and women's basketball have given out 13 and 14 full scholarships, respectively, while they are allowed 15 each. Men's and women's track (which consists of three teams — indoor track, outdoor track, and cross-country) distribute 14 and 13 full scholarships, respectively — men are allowed 14, and women are allowed 16.

Aceto stated that more emphasis is placed on teams competing in the Big East. This emphasis includes more scholarship money for them as opposed to non-Big East teams.

Dr. Michael E. Burke, director of the Honors Program

In the academic program, there are 80 presidential, full-tuition scholarships for academic merit currently in use. With an estimated, average tuition of $7,210, the total amount of these scholarships is approximately $576,800. Also, 16 minority scholarships, which are also based on merit, have been given out; they are full scholarships, and are worth approximately $181,3600.

Dr. Charles Cherry, associate vice president of Academic Affairs, said that the academic scholarship program began in the 1970s with only six scholarships per year, and has grown to 24 per year.

He remarked, "I'm very pleased that the president has made a strong committment to academic scholarships. The academic scholarship program has grown with Father Driscoll's support and I hope it continues to grow. This program enables us to attract superior students." and housing.

Ruane mentioned at the meeting that the University plans to cut back on enrollment as well as to build new dormitories, according to the Suburban.

Brach stressed that, at the reception, "No particular issue will be discussed." Neighboring residents will be able to bring up any subject that concerns them about students. He expects, however, that noise and parking will be important points. Brach said that the meeting might bring out some problems that have not been discussed yet.

One hundred fifty invitations were sent to residents in the houses directly neighboring Villanova's campus. Brach stated, however, that the meeting is open to any residents.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, will serve as mediator in the discussion, directing questions from neighbors to the appropriate administrator.

Brach said that, in addition to Stack, he hopes that Driscoll, Neville, a representative from the Student Activities Office, as well as representatives from fraternities and sororities, will be there to answer questions.

Forum will help to improve relations

The reception/discussion session for Villanova's neighbors is a major step in improving our relations with the surrounding community. Student Government should be applauded for setting up this forum, which will enable local residents to discuss their problems with Villanova.

This dialogue with our neighbors has been sorely needed for a long time. Friction with the township has been an omnipresent problem. They complain of noise, parking problems and rowdy students. Villanova students complain of the strict housing codes and limited parking.

Invitations have been sent to 150 residents whose houses directly border the Villanova campus. Hopefully these individuals and other residents will come to the Villanova Room to air their differences. Representatives from many divisions of the University including Student Life, Athletics, the Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Association, will be there to respond to various questions.

Establishing contact with many of our close neighbors and showing them that we care about their opinions is an important first step. We cannot ignore the surrounding community, for they influence to a large extent what goes on here at Villanova. We need their cooperation for any kind of construction, whether it be for parking facilities, residence halls or classroom buildings. Their housing codes affect how many off-campus students will be able to live in the immediate vicinity. The new fire code which Radnor recently formulated will impact greatly on the future use of many of our existing buildings.

The University's relationship with Radnor Township affects the entire Villanova community greatly. Communication with them is essential if we are to work out any of the existing tensions. The forum set up by Student Government is a major step in the right direction.

Signal needed to prevent accidents

The dangerous situation that currently exists at the intersection of Lancaster and Ithan Avenues needs immediate improvement. The incredibly high number of cars which make a left turn on Ithan Avenue in the direction of South Campus dictates that a left-turn arrow be installed now.

It is quite evident how heavily trafficked this intersection is by both vehicles and pedestrians. Students make the left turn onto Ithan Avenue to gain access to the main lot and then walk across Lancaster Avenue. The area is always busy, but especially so just before clases start or just after classes finish.

The line of cars waiting to turn left onto Ithan Avenue has always been long. However, as the number of off-campus residents has increased, more and more join the line. The oncoming traffic on Lancaster Avenue is also heavy, allowing only one or two cars to make the turn before the light changes.

Because of the difficulty involved in making the left turn, cars are attempting to turn when it is not safe. Many serious accidents, including the fatal one Sunday night, could have been avoided if a left turn arrow were installed. And the danger is not limited to the Villanova community. Many area residents have been involved in accidents at this same intersection at times when it is not congested by students.

Student Government representatives are attending the Radnor Township's Board of Commissioners meeting Monday night to request that such a left-turn arrow be installed. This request has been made in the past and has been ignored. The problem is worsening daily, and immediate action should be taken. Does someone else have to be killed before the authorities realize the clear and present danger of this situation?

Concert was successful

To the Editor:

I would like to express my deep appreciation to all students, faculty, and administrators who gave their time and efforts to the Robin Williams concert, which was held Oct. 4 in the duPont Pavilion.

Concerts have not been held at Villanova in several years. Now, through the Villanova Union's Concert Committee (organized this year) and the duPont Pavilion, concerts are coming back. A goal of four diverse concerts is set for this year, and I am glad to say that the first one, the Robin Williams concert, was a success.

I look forward to the next concert, planned for Nov. 16 and hope that the Concert Committee receives as much support and more volunteers.

Unfortunately, as with any program being revived in a new facility, certain problems occurred during the Robin Williams concert. Due to the dynamic pace Robin Williams kept during his act, several people could not hear him as well as they heard the Raspini Brothers. The temperature of the building was another difficulty that we could not predict and due to the circumstances was not under our control. Ticket holders with seating problems were moved to an area set aside in case a vision problem occurred.

However, these problems were minimal if we look at what the concert means for Villanova. The Robin Williams concert was the first student-run concert in years, bringing back big-name entertainment and at the same time offering student workers an opportunity to develop leadership skills.

The concert marked the first in a series of concerts for Villanova students to enjoy. Many universities in the area, such as University of Pennsylvania, Drexel and others offer concerts for entertainment to their students. I am proud to say that Villanova is once again expanding into this form of student recreation.

Robin Williams is a witty, dynamic performer. We have all heard of him and many of us have seen his act before and thus, know the content. No one was forced to purchase tickets. They came of their own free will and knew the nature of the Robin Williams act. All in all, many were humored by his performance.

Once again, I hope that Villanova gives the support the Concert Committee needs to produce a professionally-run concert. I encourage anyone interested in concerts or anyone who has questions concerning concerts at Villanova, to contact the Union or come to the Concert Committee's meetings, held Tuesdays from 6-7 p.m. in the Connelly Center cinema.

Republicans address major issues

By ERIC P. BORIO

Republican Party principles are supported by many students on campus, and we in the College Republicans feel that the GOP is especially strong on three major issues of the '80s: drug-testing, the deficit and the military balance of power.

With drug usage at epidemic proportions, how can a citizenry of a free society ensure that those in public office and public service faithfully discharge their duties unimpeded by mind-destroying drugs? One solution may be random drug-testing of those employed by government.

American government is supposedly geared toward the protection of the rights of its citizens. These rights, however, cannot be protected and furthered by public servants incapable of doing their jobs due to the influence of drugs. Although government should not have the right to subject private citizens to mandatory drug-testing, the very nature of public employment must be that public servants remain answerable to the public at large. Hence, the old paradox of limiting the rights of a few will assure the rights of all. In civilized society no one has unlimited rights, in order to assure a stable community.

The question of the deficit remains, "How long can government spend more than it takes in and not cause detrimental effects to our recovering economy?" Under Republican leadership, the resolve to finally break the back of the deficit has become bipartisan. The most remarkable accomplishment of the bipartisanship has been the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act. Although aspects of this law have been ruled unconstitutional, it is a step in the right direction. Unless we eliminate deficits soon, they promose to slow economic expansion by competing with the private sector for capital and financing.

Despite the present bipartisanship on this issue, one must recall the early days of the battle when only a few brave Republican congressmen ventured forth with proposals to cut the deficit. The Democrats, in the hands of special interests, only began supporting such drastic measures when their re-election depended on it. The issue is now which items should be cut. Under Gramm-Rudman, across-the-board cuts will be mandatory if Congress cannot agree. It seems that a flame has finally been placed under those "spend now, pay later" congressmen to change their haphazard approach to legislating.

It has been said that the third World War began when World War II ended. This is a debatable point, but it does emphasize the complexity of maintaining peace in the nuclear age. Ideally, peace could be maintained through mutual agreement between the superpowers. Unfortunately, the world is less than ideal and this prospect is easier said than done. As such, the question of peaceful coexistence becomes a matter of maintaining a military balance.

The necessity for military parity with the Soviets is twofold. First, a military balance assures deterrence of possible attack, because the strategic price of a hostile act by either country greatly outweighs and possible benefit. Secondly, equality of military capability is motivation enough for both the United States and the U.S.S.R. to pursue meaningful arms reduction talks.

It must be emphasized; however, that military parity must be pursued in both strategic nuclear forces as well as in conventional forces. The reason is clear. A strong conventional capability provides for flexibility in responding to world crisis, and decreases the likelihood that out of necessity to protect our interests we would have to resort to nuclear weapons.

However, under recent Democratic administrations the Soviet Union had gained an unprecedented military superiority. We unilaterally cut weapon production, while the Soviets have exploited the situation in order to gain a military advantage. It was perceived that our goodwill would somehow generate in the Soviets similar goodwill. Unfortunately the Soviets responded with continued arms production and an invasion of Afghanistan.

There were of course other by-products of the Democratic mentality toward military spending. Not only was our ability to respond to the inconsistence in the world greatly reduced, but our existing military capability had been rendered almost useless by spare parts shortages and the diminished morale of the all-voluntary military personnel.

In light of this deplorable situation, the Republican administration under President Reagan has provided a stabilizing effect in the world. Much progress has been made in restoring the military balance. The list of achievements is long: shortages in communication and spare parts has almost been eliminated; obsolete nuclear missiles have been or will be replaced; and an almost non-existent maritime strategy has been replaced by progress toward a 600-ship navy, just to name a few.

The Democrats have said that increased military spending will only have destabilizing effects on the world. But we are closer now to meaningful arms reduction talks than we have ever been. Democratic blindness to this point is almost humorous.

The Republican stance on drug-testing, the deficit and the military balance of power is therefore part of America's blueprint for the next decade if we are to progress and maintain our status as the world's greatest democracy. Young people, especially, are flocking to the GOP as the party of hope and the party of the future. The College Republicans are proud to serve as a vehicle for those principles on our campus.

Gay student derives some strength through the Church

By MARTIN CONNELL

"Thanks" to the guy who wrote the letter in last week's paper "Gay Student Seeks Sympathy." My experience, however, is more hopeful and I think it is important for me to communicate some of the strength I have received through the Church and Her Sacraments. The God I've come to know in the Church has led me to a level of self-understanding that gives me the courage to live as a man attracted to men in a world that is hostile to gay men and lesbians.

Fundamentalist churches are steadfast in continually reminding us of the few biblical passages in which homosexuality is condemned. The calculating, judging god of the churches is quite different from the God I've come to know in the Church whose Dogmatic Constitution on Divine Revelation encourages us to read the entire text of the Bible to understand God's presence to God's people (Dei Verbum II).

In the Catholic faith I have come to accept and celebrate the many mysteries of life. Birth, death, forgiveness, communion, re-birth are some of the mysteries of our faith. For me my sexuality is a mystery as inexplicable as these others. As a homosexual I have hidden and, at times, continue to hide this foundational revelation of God's love for us symbolized in the attraction toward the Other.

Recently I participated in a candlelight walk and memorial service for those who have died of AIDS in Philadelphia. There I met a non-Catholic man with AIDS who spoke of the care he received in one of Mother Theresa's hospices for persons with AIDS.

I confidently look forward to, work toward and pray for the day when the purposes of Catholic marriage — unity and procreation — will be held up by the Church as a model for homosexual relationships.

In their pastoral letter "To Live In Christ Jesus," the American Catholic bishops state that homosexuals "should not suffer from prejudice against their basic human rights. They have a right to respect, friendship and justice. They should have an active role in the Christian community ... The Christian community should provide them a special degree of pastoral understanding and care." (part II, sec. 1) At what time in the life of a person with a same-sex orientation would they need a more "special degree of pastoral understanding and care" than at the college age when they wrestle with the immutability of their minority sexuality and its consequences in their emotional, social, intellectual and spiritual lives?

I look back on how lonely and directionless a time it was for me when I tried to decide if I should "come out." Knowing only of the unconditional Catholic condemnation of homosexual behavior, I could not look to the Church who sees herself as the refuge of the outcast, the weak, the minority. How does Villanova University fulfill the decade-old call to provide a "special degree of pastoral understanding and care?" Where is the evidence of our "right to respect, friendship and justice?"

Of the other gay students here at Villanova I ask that they be patient, critically thinking and, at all times, honest. A facile, idealistic enthusiasm for gay liberation on Catholic campuses would be a counterforce to popular understanding, a support of the antagonistic attitude that too often has exaggerated the stereotypes and an obstacle to serious attention f rom those who would otherwise listen.

Martin Connell is a graduate assistant at the religious studies department.

Student calls for homosexual forum

To The Editor:

I am very confused about the issue of homosexuals on Villanova's campus. I can understand where the Church is coming from, but I cannot deal with the isolation that non-heterosexual members of our community must feel.

I am calling for a forum here at Villanova where all members of our community can get together and talk about this issue. Students, staff and faculty must come forward and support the need for dialogue. The community must not be torn apart on this issue as we were on the issue of racism last year. This issue cannot be resolved on the pages of the Villanovan, we must face each other so that misunderstandings will be avoided.

I am outraged at the prevalent response to the letter which you so courageously printed last week. People are actually going around campus trying to figure out who the author was. If you have any sense of respect for the victims of these accusations, please do not enter into these conversations; believe me, it only shows your ignorance if you do.

Augustinians offer help

To the Editor:

To the gay student who wrote in last week's issue of the Villanovan, "What makes this an especially soul-wrenching problem at V.U. is the fact that I have no one to turn to." On campus there are a number of Augustinians who are available. There is a staff available in Campus Ministry and one at the Counseling Center. You do not have to walk alone.

Retired professor remains active

To the Editor:

Quite a few of the students who had pre-registered for my courses were very disappointed to learn that I had been retired by the Rev. Kail Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the college of Liberal Arts and Sciences, and would no longer be teaching.

A very interesting development took place when students discovered that I would not be teaching the courses to which they had pre-registered. At the end of pre-registration all my courses were closed. After the first class day in September this was the read-off for my classes. Religion and Art I, registered 45, after first class, dropped to 25; Art and Religion II, registered 45, dropped to 24; Spirit of the Renaissance, registered 45, dropped to 24.

Some of these and my former students had called to voice their concern that I would no longer be on the art and art history department faculty. They were interested in what I was going to do during my "retirement." For this reason I have enclosed the information regarding one of my activities to keep my friends informed.

At the present time I am writing an historical monograph about Michaelangelo's stay for two years (1492 to 1491 ca.) with the Augustinian Fathers in Santo Spirito monastery in Florence, Italy. When I get tired of working in this area I turn to translating from Polish to English the history of the "Augustinian Order in Poland." So far nothing has been adequately or accurately written in English in regard to the Polish Augustinians.

I will continue living here on campus at the monastery. My friends will be most welcome to visit me there.

The Rev. Henry B. Syvinski, O.S.A.

School bans humanitarian

To the Editor:

Our son, 14-year-old Trevor Ferrell has been applauded for his humanitarian work with the homeless population of the world. He has received acclaim and countless awards; he has also met with President Reagan on four different occasions, and twice with Bishop Desmond Tutu (now Anglican Cardinal). Trevor has worked with poor and dying destitutes at the side of Mother Teresa whom he considers, "The most loving person I have ever met."

After passing an entrance exam and after we were approved by the Board of Parents as being spiritually and socially acceptable, the Delaware County Christian School has denied admittance to Trevor because he has an older brother and a younger sister going to Catholic schools. The school insists that "Catholic Teachings are diametrically opposed to what we're teaching. It wouldn't have been as bad if Trevor's sister & brother were in public schools."

Is this a "Christian" attitude? Aren't we all members of the same human family? Trevor never asks the people he finds in need: "Do you have any members of your family in Catholic schools? If so, I can't serve you!"

Dr. John Logue
Strengthening the U.N. for world peace

By KAREN E. DUNNE

Philadelphia's Independence Hall will host our nation's celebration of the 200th anniversary of the drafting of the United States Constitution. The yearlong celebration beginning in January, is a tribute to the minds that created a federation with the power to keep peace and promote justice and opportunity.

Villanova's Dr. John Logue, a professor of political science and director of the Common Heritage Institute, which he describes as a "think tank" that studies international issues and suggests solutions to them, believes that the world can learn from the American example of government.

Specifically, Logue advocates that the United Nations charter be reformed and restructured in the likeness of the U.S. Constitution, in order to further world peace.

This is the message Logue brought with him on a 10-day journey to the Soviet Union, where he met with Soviet academicians, journalists and peace activists for the purpose of exchanging ideas on arms control and other peace issues.

Logue traveled with a five-person delegation of the World Federalist Association, an American peace organization whose primary goal is to strengthen the authority of the United Nations, particularly its enforcement power.

According to Logue, who is vice president of the Association, the United Nations is in dire need of the authority to enforce peacekeeping measures. "In the last analysis," pointed Logue, "we think law has to be enforceable, or else the arms race will continue."

The World Federalist Association equates the United Nations' lack of authoritative power to the structure of the General Assembly, which makes decisions by a one-nation, one-vote system, regardless of the size or influential power of the country. Logue suggested that it is idealistic and impractical to believe that the world community will entrust real power and real funding to such a body.

For instance, Logue documented that there are three countries in the General Assembly with populations less than that of nearby Upper Darby, which has a population of 100,000; 12 countries with fewer people than Delaware County, which has an approximate population of 500,000; 25 countries with fewer people than the city of Philadelphia; and more than half have populations less than that of the state of Pennsylvania.

Hence, a country of 100,000 barely able to feed its people, much less support a military, has as much input on significant world issues as the United States and Soviet Union, whose actions affect all corners of the globe, in one way or another.

One of the groups Dr. Logue met with while in the Soviet Union was the Institute of U.S. and Canadian Studies. Logue is in front, third from right.

Admitting that such a system does not have the authority to enforce international law and maintain peace is "tough-minded realism," suggested Logue.

In contrast, the Soviet Peace Committee, which hosted Logue and his delegation, expressed the Soviet view which holds that the U.N.'s structure, based upon the principle of national sovereignty, is fine as it stands. "All that is needed," the Soviets believe, "is the political will to make it work."

The association does not suggest that nations' sovereignty be taken away, rather they advocate that parts of it be shared, explained Logue. Further, Logue and his colleagues believe that it is impractical to rely on political will to strengthen the United Nations.

"Political will couldn't make the Articles of Confederation work," pointed Logue. "It couldn't make the Holy Roman Empire work and it can't make the U.N. work."

Logue expressed this opinion to the Soviet public in a press conference on Soviet national television, as well as to the Peace Committee. In turn, the delegation's hosts attempted to influence them by exposing them to a variety of academic, political and cultural authorities and en-

A march for nuclear freeze

By TERISE FUSCO

Somewhere in the vicinity of Harrisburg is a city on the move. This city, called "Peace City" is composed of some 650 people from all over the world. These people are taking life one day at a time, sparing nearly all social conformity on a "pilgrimage for peace," called the Great Peace March for Global Nuclear Disarmament.

The peace march began on March 1, 1986, in Lost Angeles, Calif., and is slated to wind up in Washington, D.C. on Nov. 15, 1986. The people participating devote their time, efforts and energy to the movement sparing occupations and families.

Some of the initial 1,200 marchers are still dedicated to the cause, yet others had to drop out of the march.

There is no discrimination and no requirements except for a strong, caring heart concerned about faith, life and safety. The group is unique in that it actually functions as a city in whatever region it is in, with an efficient division of labor.

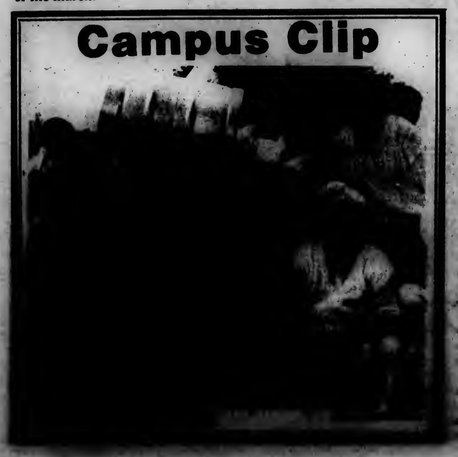
Some 300 or so marchers may go into the cities for rallies, promotions and lectures, while 300 others continue to march, and still others tackle various personal tasks.

No one passes judgement on others on the march because everyone is united for the same purpose. There is a division of roles on a city council, but all major decisions are made by the group as a whole.

The group members are young and old, professional and nonprofessional, American and foreign. Great emotional ties have developed among the group. Two marchers died, three couples conceived children and various romances have developed.

The marchers are demonstrating for a test ban treaty between the United States and the Soviet Union. Along with a nuclear freeze, they are calling for a reduction of existing nuclear weapon stockpiles and a discontinuation of the "Star Wars" space-based defense program. The sharing of goals is the strongest bond these people share, and it is keeping them moving towards their final 3500th mile.

The march has continued in spit of some seemingly helpless conditions. When attempting to cross the Mojave Desert, the group's funding organization, People Reaching Out for Peace, was forced to disband with some $500,000 in debts.



Although 400 marchers were forced to leave because of a lack of finances, water, or medical supplies, the rest trekked on.

The group is expecting to double their population in the East Coast region, where they will wind up their march after reorganizing as a non-profit organization.

They are spending 30 days in Pennsylvania, then skipping to New York and New Jersey and arriving in Philadelphia sometime around Nov. 1, 1986. An advance group selects camp sites and organizes the programs for the marchers in each area. According to Dr. Barbara Agnew, professor of religious studies, the group is considering Villanova as a possible site.

Agnew said that the "group is alive, well, and moving in each city," and that they are very active when they get into each site.

Picture a new world

By AMY TORACK

Demonstrations, lectures and workshops will be offered to visually impaired persons by the Philadelphia Museum of Art in a program entitled, "To Photograph is to See: A Workshop for Visually Impaired Adults." The workshop will be held tomorrow, at the Museum, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

This workshop, aimed at introducing visually impaired persons to photography, is being led by Geoge Covington, a legally blind photographer. Covington is the author of a book entitled "Let Your Camera do the Scene." The Museum is expecting some 30 enthusiastic participants.

For the most part, there are very few people who are completely blind (many are actually severely visually impaired and can detect distinct shadows, hues and/or images). For them, photography can act as a tool for seeing.

Although it may be impossible for a visually impaired person to see an entire object, when it is scaled down in a photograph, the image becomes very real. A picture contains such a variety of shades and color patterns that it can easily be formed into some sort of image by someone with a visual impairment.

According to a public relations correspondent from the museum, photography for the visually impaired is a personal experience. "The same picture may appear differently to each person because

Transfer students: adjusting to change

By STACEY WILKINS

The college student transferring to a new institution is faced with a number of challenges. The new university often differs from the previous institution in size, location, difficulty of curriculum and competition among students.

Students have pointed out the inherent problems of the transfer situation. They feel that sending and receiving institutions should exercise more concern in the adjustment of transfer students. Counseling could help to prevent "transfer shock," a drop in student GPA after changing schools.

Transfer students can be aided through orientation programs which help in the adjustment process, a critical time for new students. In order for a college orientation program to be successful, the concerns of each student should be addressed.

One fault of Villanova's orientation program is that transfers and freshmen are grouped together — a process which can alienate transfer students from the beginning.

Many colleges believe they should keep in mind these key concepts when admitting students to a new institution: the student needs career and academic advisement to help them make the transfer from one college to another; the advisor should help the student adjust to a new locale and enlighten them on rules and regulations particular to the university.

The transfer student need not go unrecognized at a large institution like Villanova. But since there is no support system to help solve the problems of the transfer student, transfers coming to Villanova often feel confused and frustrated about credit evaluation, housing, advisement and other areas.

Villanova transfers often live off-campus. This can make it difficult to meet other students.

In addition, the students who come from community colleges are not familiar with University activities. Therefore, they tend to remain uninvolved during their "short stay" at the University.

V.U. broadens prisoners' horizons

By SHARON KELLY

Did you know that Villanova University has a "branch campus," known as University College at Graterford? It is not really a campus at all, but a state correctional facility, located about 20 miles north of here near Collegeville in Montgomery County.

The University College program was started in 1971, and is one of the oldest post-secondary education programs for inmates in the country, according to Dr. James McKenna, the program's founder and director of the criminal justice department at Villanova.

"This program offers the inmates an opportunity to better their lives and gain an optimism for the future. Also, it enables them to be more competitive in the job market when they are released," McKenna said.

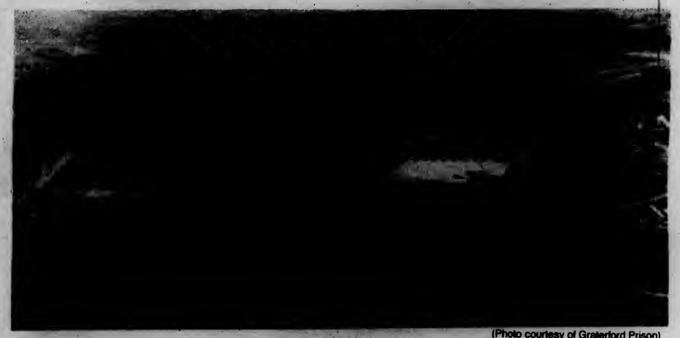
Motivated by a personal interest and a desire to gain first-hand experience of prison life for his research, McKenna began teaching at Graterford on his own in the late 1960s. He has taught inmates courses as principles of sociology, social problems, and criminology.

The State Correctional Facility at Graterford is one of three maximum security prisons in Pennsylvania. Built in 1928, it has a capacity of 2,000 men, but now houses about 2,400, McKenna said.

"Clearly, he continued, conditions are overcrowded. In fact, space for classes is so limited that we have held them in such unusual places as the prison mosque," McKenna noted. He added that expansion is now underway.

Prison inmates, or residents, work in a variety of occupations, including textile manufacturing, farming and clerical positions. Numerous inmate organizations, counseling programs and religious personnel support the population.

In addition to the inmates, Graterford has a staff of about 650 guards and administrative personnel — all of whom are welcome to participate in the program, McKenna said.



"Prison personnel, particularly guards, often have difficulty finding time to go to college because of their work schedules," explained McKenna. "We, in effect, brought the college to them."

Prison personnel and inmates participating together in class was an innovative idea in prison education. McKenna studied this situation and concluded in a research paper that a majority of the prisoners saw their co-participation as contributing to a decrease in the tension and hostility usually associated with guard-inmate relationships.

In recent years, however, most prison personnel no longer choose to participate in the program, because of personal and work-related reasons.

There are presently about 60 inmates enrolled in University College classes. "There is a great interest among the inmates in our program because they see it as prestigious to be taking college courses," notes McKenna.

If an inmate has nine credits and a 2.0 average when he is released from Graterford, he can come to Villanova to pursue his bachelor's degree. About 20 ex-inmates have continued their education here since the program's inception. Right now, there are four ex-inmates enrolled in University College courses at Villanova.

Members of the Villanova faculty provide prisoners at Graterford with the opportunity to acquire a college education.

Each semester, Villanova otters two liberal arts courses at Graterford. In a two-year period, the courses offered satisfy the requirements for the first two years of a Villanova liberal arts curriculum, McKenna said.

Daniel T. Regan, an assistant professor of philosophy, believes the program is worthwhile. "The residents really appreciate the chance to get into a college atmosphere, and they participate enthusiastically."

He added, "Unlike many students here, when you give these men an assignment or reading, they actually do it. I guess they don't have as many distractions as students here do."

Professors who have participated in the program in past years include Prof. June Lytel (English), Dr. Sayed Omran (Modern Languages), Dr. James Markham (mathematics), and Dr. Angelo Armenti, the dean of University College (physics and astronomy).

"In addition to the great support among Villanova faculty, we get excellent cooperation from many offices, including financial aid, the registrar, University shop and others. Without their work, the program would not run so smoothly and efficiently," McKenna asserted.

Regan added, "Dr. McKenna is the real superstar here. He has worked incredibly hard to bring a solid university curriculum to the prison. The entire Villanova community can be proud of his efforts."

Most inmate-students apply for state Pell grants to finance their education. This is all handled at Villanova's financial aid office. If an inmate does not receive a grant or receive an insufficient amount to cover his educational costs, he can receive a presidential scholarship from Villanova to make up the difference.

McKenna believes that the strong financial and administrative support the program receives from Villanova is proof that, "proportionally to our resources, Villanova does more to provide post-secondary educational opportunities to Graterford inmates than the state does."

Controlling T.V. broadcasting

By SUSAN TOLVE

Striving to improve the quality of television, concerned viewers have banded together to form Citizen Action for Better Television (CABTV). This group is working towards the common goal of "a media-wise society in control of television — not controlled by television," as stated in their brochure.

The non-profit, non-partisan organization held their annual meeting and luncheon on Oct. 2 in Connelly Center. In addition, a symposium was sponsored by Villanova's communication arts department on the topic "Morality and Ethics of Television Programming in light of the First Amendment."

CABTV encourages high standards in television broadcasting. Its objectives include: persuading broadcasters to provide quality programs for people of diverse backgrounds, informing parents and teachers about the importance of TV's effect on young people and encouraging the curtailment of excessive violence, sex and materialism. The organization strongly supports educational programs or programs which teach positive social values.

In order to achieve these goals, CABTV is involved in various activities. It uses seminars, workshops, newsletters, films and brochures to educate the public.

The aim of each of these methods is to involve viewers in television broadcasting. This idea is embodied in Project Postcard, a qualitative monitoring program which encourages viewers to mail their critical judgements of television programs to local stations and advertising sponsors.

Some of the Soviet leaders with whom Logue met included: editor-in-chief of the Soviet newspaper Pravda, Yevgeny Y. Grigoryev; secretary general of the Soviet Union's United Nations Association, Dr. Serguei P. Gribkov; and the director of the Russian Orthodox Seminary of Zagorsk.

Although most of the delegation's time was spent in conferences, their hosts also treated them to a plethora of cultural events. Evenings were spent attending puppet shows, circuses and plays. Logue and his colleagues also toured a fabric factory, the Kremlin and the summer and winter palaces of the late czars.

As to the success of the visit, Logue explained that it is difficult to measure in terms of the association's goals. As far as making progress towards building a better understanding of the values and objectives of other world powers, Logue was encouraged.

"Personal relationships are important," expressed Logue, "and I think we built some personal relationships."

Logue invited his Soviet hosts to attend the World Federalist Association's next congress, which will be held in honor of the U.S. Constitution's bicentennial, in Independence Hall, in August of 1987. "It is much more exciting to have the world learn something from the American Constitution," rather than United States citizens exclusively, believes Logue.

For Logue, Soviet participation in the Congress represents one further step in his goal to reform, restructure and strengthen the United Nations, in order to bestow it with the "power, the authority and the money to achieve peace."

Here are some presidential tidbits from our history:

— When John Quincy Adams lost to Andrew Jackson in the 1828 election, the town of Adams, N.H., changed its name to Jackson.

— James Garfield was the only man in United States history who was a congressman, a senator-elect and a president-elect all at the same time.

— President Calvin Coolidge loved having his head rubbed with Vaseline while he ate breakfast in bed.

— When Dwight Eisenhower's mother discovered her son reading books about war, she took them away and stored them in the attic; she was a pacifist.

Life? — Our most precious gift and perhaps the one most taken for granted.

Respect for Life? — A single political issue or a consistent ethic to live by?

During this past week, these concerns were the focal point of Villanova's third annual Respect Life Week. This week afforded us the opportunity to reflect upon the meaning of life for us as Christians, who are forming values to live both as students and as participants in our modern world.

We welcome this occasion to share some of our reflections and challenges which have been offered to us as we are now involved with our fourth year with the Villanovans for Life.

Consider the following: the grandmother in the nearby nursing home, the prisoner on death row, the man sleeping on the street vent on a cold autumn's night, the unemployed father searching for food to give his family the evening meal, the battered and neglected child and the child in the womb waiting to enter the world.

What is the thread that binds this tightly knit seamless garment together? We would like to submit that it is the love of God our creator presents as the gift of life, indeed all creation, which makes the human family one. Therefore, our respect for life confirms and is proportional to our respect for God.

This belief enables us to agree with the Scriptural analogy that we are all one body in Christ. Therefore when any member of the body suffers the whole body suffers.

And so we are challenged to develop a broader perspective of our world. This means going beyond socio-economic, and political constraints to discover that whether old or young, black or white, rich or poor, we all share a common gift — life!

This belief forces us to be consistent with our ethic regarding life. To accept these assertions means to respect life in all its' many forms — how can we do any less?

For me, the real difference was the people. I could tell from the beginning that was the DH&S difference.

Donna Vidas
Senior, DH&S Philadelphia
BA, Villanova University, 1982

It's a very open firm. Doors are open: people let you know you're welcome.

Put it another way: DH&S cares.

At all my interviews—on campus, at the office—everyone helped me give my best.

That concern for my professional development has been there from day one.

The training is excellent; I have a career advisor who knows my strengths; the supervisors on my jobs are thorough. All the way up the line, people are there when you need them.

Everyone told me accounting was more than numbers, that it was really a people profession.

That's why I'm sure I made the right decision. I work with good people who have the highest technical skills—together, in a total business environment.

There's no question. It's an outstanding business career.

V.U. philosphers recognized

By KRISTIN A. SWITALA

Tucked away in a tiny office in Vasey's basement, lies Villanova's philosophy department. If you expect to find a decrepit Aristotle-type musing over dusty books there, guess again.

In the past two years the department, under the direction of Dr. John Doody, has exploded onto the scene by expanding its faculty and programs and by winning prestigious awards and honors.

According to Carol Anthony, secretary of the department and the graduate program coordinator, student interest in the philosophy major and minor has been growing.

"The basic skills of clear thinking, expression and critical analysis that an education in philosophy affords," said Dr. Tom Busch, professor of philosophy, "are the natural carry-overs into other fields. The attention Villanova gives to current political and social questions is invaluable to the students."

One Villanova graduate, Rob Zampetti (class of 1984), recently won a Fulbright Scholarship to study in France.

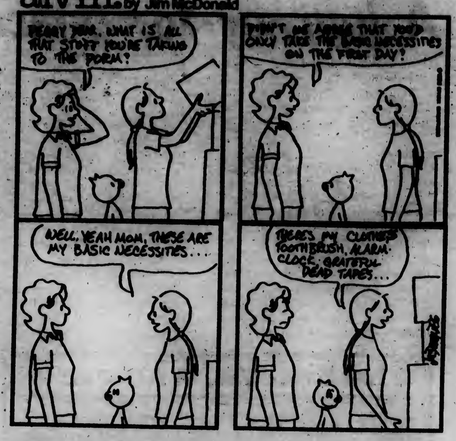
Members of the faculty have also been recognized for outstanding scholarship. The Council for the Advancement and Support of Education has chosen Dr. John Immerwahr, professor of philosophy, as one of 25 silver medalists in the 1986 National Professor of the Year competition. Immerwahr was also named one of the top 10 area professors in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Dr. John Caputo, professor of philosophy, has been elected president of the American Catholic Philosophical Association. Caputo is the first faculty member to become president of this prestigious organization while teaching at Villanova.

Also a distinguished adjunct professor at Fordham University, Caputo's third book, Radical Hermeneutics, is scheduled for release next fall.

An "extremely important" addition to the faculty, according to Doody, are two recently hired tenure-track women, Dr. Barbara Wall and Dr. Margaret Crouch, assistant professors of philosophy.

According to Crouch, there are still few women philosophy professors. "Most students are not aware of the oppression of women in society. They don't think of it as a problem, because in college they can compete more equally than out in the job market."



Crouch, Wall and Anthony are assisting in the development of a women's studies program, in conjunction with the philosophy department. Other faculty members involved in organizations as Villanova include Daniel Regan, the director of the peace and Justice Center, Dr. Joseph Betz, the director of the Liberal Studies Program, and Dr. Lawrence Stepelevich, the editor of the Hegel Society's journal, the "Owl of Minerva."

Villanova's philosophy department is also among the Schools of the Greater Philadelphia Philosophy Consortium. In this program, students at Temple, the University of Pennsylvania, Villanova and Bryn Mawr can attend any of the schools in the Consortium for one-third of their courses.

This provides graduate students with an opportunity to get to know a school before applying for Ph.D. work.

According to Caputo, "Philosophy is the heart and soul of education. It provides a thoughtfulness in one's life through a critical, analyzing frame of mind. Promoting confidence in one's own mental resources, philosophy means being a learned, knowledgeable person."

of its varied shades and the photographer's own impairment," she explained. Through photography, one can "adjust the object to one's own eyesight," she continued.

Susan Gagnon, a senior customer representative for Polaroid Corp., will be joining Covington in this day-long workshop. In addition to leading the two concurrent camera workshops entitled "Orientation to Instant Photography" and "Orientation to 35mm equipment," she will provide a demonstration of the Polaroid instant photography equipment.

Even for those with impairments as common as tunnel vision or haziness of vision, this workshop can provide a new hobby that is not only enjoyable, but also accessible to anyone willing to "give it a shot."

About 60 people attended the symposium, which featured Dr. Benedict Paparella of the philosophy department; Doris Brogan, attorney and professor of Villanova Law School; and Dr. Marguerite Farley, professor of communication arts.

Ms. Mary Anne Sailus, who recently obtained her masters' degree in religious studies at Villanova, also participated in the symposium.

CABTV has been in existence for about 12 years. According to Virginia C. Powers, professor of communication arts, the organization held a "very successful meeting and symposium."

In my mind there is no doubt. If I had it to do all over again, I'd make the same decision.

Alan S. Alpert
Partner, DH&S New York
BS, Villanova University, 1973

Coming to work for DH&S was a decision I felt good about, right from the start.

The growth opportunities, exposure to a lot of different business environments: all outstanding, better than my original expectations.

At DH&S we have always been strong on the quality of our people. And because good people expect your best, you look for every opportunity to give it.

On top of that, DH&S has always been in the forefront of technical changes within the profession – sampling techniques, new computer modeling.

But most important, we've recognized that the whole accounting profession is a changing environment.

It's not a numbers game; it's a people profession. It's people, working within a total business environment.

We're always working as a team directly with clients to help them solve their problems. We provide input and advice on tax matters, operations systems, accounting questions – things that really impact the bottom line.

There's no question. It's an outstanding business career.

Robin Williams heats up Pavilion

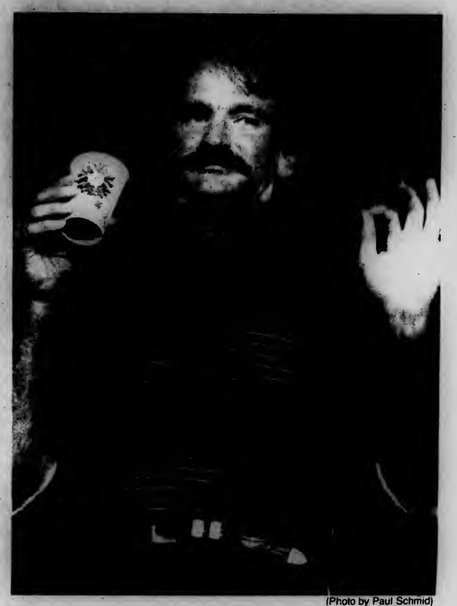
By MARYJO YANNACONE

Playing to a sold-out house of Villanova students and parents, Robin Williams displayed his brilliant comedic talents despite the sweltering conditions at the, as he put it, "John D' Eleuthere duPont memorial sauna."

Best known for his portrayal of Mork, a wacked-out alien from the planet of Ork on the former hit sitcom and now syndicated series "Mork and Mindy," Williams has risen to star proportions with guest appearances on "The Tonight Show," "Late Night with David Letterman," and "Saturday Night Live." He has also appeared in the motion picture "Moscow on the Hudson," and the more recent release, "Club Paradise."

Williams appeared this past Saturday at Villanova as part of a college tour he is currently involved in, which takes him to the Metropolitan in New York, where his performance will be taped for HBO Productions.

Technically, the performance was far from professional. This is not to say that an attempt at high-tech convenience was not made; the concert committee went into the project with great aspirations and a desire to provide the 6,000 concert-goers with a highly entertaining evening. They fell short, however, both in acoustics and video production.



An entire section of the third level had virtually no speaker capabilities, leaving patrons in that area frustrated and waiting for a punch line. The two large video screens, designed to aid in satisfying viewing for all members of the audience, became instead a distraction. The picture jumped, went in and out of focus, and persisted in presenting either a close-up which cut off Williams' forehead, or a long shot which gave no better a picture than Williams himself. Attempts at tricky camera angles were contrived and misplaced, once again drawing the audience's attention to the screen and away from the performer.

Williams' 60-minute performance got off to a strong start, covering a broad range of topics. In the first 30 minutes alone, the subject matter jumped from conservative pro-Reagan Republicans to the NRA to the joys of parenting according to Williams' first-hand experiences with his young son. There were also the standard racial jokes, puns of Dr. Ruth Westheimer and William F. Buckley and improvisational material with regard to the adverse weather conditions in the Pavilion.

Perhaps the greatest conflict came with Williams' sensitivity in regard to his audience. In one respect, the Villanova community was well-represented in the routine. Reference was made to both the basketball and football team members, as well as to the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president. One would think that if a performer displays foresight in discovering a campus joke concerning the University's president, he would also uncover the essentials of the evening — namely, it being parents' weekend.

An entertainer's first rule is to know his audience, but Williams appears to have been absent for that particular session of comedy class. If he had been present, someone surely would have mentioned the inappropriate nature of jokes heavy in sexual connotation when delivering to an auditorium filled with parents and families of college students. The audience was not merely those in the 18 to 22 crowd, who would naturally be more open to and amused by Williams' wit in that area, but also had many people from the over-40 and under 12 crowd who came to spend an entertaining evening with their sons or daughters or brothers or sisters.

Regardless of any conflict, however, Robin Williams provided a highly entertaining evening to the campus community. He is truly one of the great comic geniuses of the day, rich in spontaneity with an unbelievably quick wit. This writer fully enjoyed his performance, and would love to see him back at another time, but preferably not with parents

The Oasis captures the hungry Villanova crowd

By KATIE KRACKELER

The Oasis American Cafe opened their doors for business Sept. 3, 1986. A mere 10-minute walk from campus, located at the Radnor House Condominiums, The Oasis has become a popular weekend spot for hundreds of Villanova students, and after one month of business, The Oasis has made a solid name for itself.

Villanova students, without a doubt, constitute the majority of The Oasis' clientele. Capturing the college crowd was exactly what the owners Sam Loth and Steve George had in mind when they opened. When the Chetwynd Apartments began their conversion into The Radnor House Condominiums last spring, Sam and Steve saw it as an opportunity to change their image. For two years they were co-owners of The Upper Crust Restaurant, which as the names suggests, attracted an older, more conservative crowd. The concept of a restaurant bar, with drink specials and lower food prices was definitely geared to attract the college students from up the street. This concept blossomed into The Oasis and is proving to be a profitable business endeavor.

Since September, the management at The Oasis has added to their staff several Villanova students. This definitely helps to draw a Villanova crowd. However, one of the most valuable members of The Oasis' staff is the bar manager, Len Barry. Len is a man who knows how to bring in a crowd. He is what every bar needs; someone who makes you relaxed and gets you in the mood to have a good time. Through animated conversation and amazing maneuvers with bottle caps, Len keeps the atmosphere at the bar lively. He is undoubtedly a key factor to the success at The Oasis.

The decor of The Oasis consists of polished wood, plenty of mirrors, white lights, and a roomy dining room. A unique physical feature is the front door entry way which has two walls covered with graffiti murals which were done by actual graffiti "artists" from the city.

There is yet another side to The Oasis. When those lights aren't flashing and the music isn't blasting, and when there is no capacity crowd of co-eds, The Oasis is in fact a nice cafe.

White table cloths and soft lighting help to give The Oasis a pleasant dining room atmosphere. Most of the tables are next to full length windows that look out onto the lawn and swimming pool which gives it an airy, garden-room setting. Presently, they are building a large outdoor patio which they plan to use for dining during the warm weather.

The menu is varied with selections ranging from sandwiches, pasta, salads, and pizza to full course entrees. The best item on their menu is undeniably the Burger Barn.,

Beach Boys mark 25th Anniversary with album

By THOMAS MARTIN

Made in U.S.A.
The Beach Boys
Capitol Records

Made In U.S.A. is the New Beach Boys album on Capitol Records. This double album marks the 25th anniversary of the Beach Boys. A collection of their greatest hits, the album presents the songs in chronological order beginning in 1962 right through 1986, including two newly recorded hits.

The quality of the recordings are excellent. Capitol Records remixed the collection to play on current stereo equipment. Liner notes, provided by David Leaf, give a brief history of each tune. The album also contains a mixture of older and current photos of the group. These new pictures are concert shots.

"Surfin' Safari" kicks off Side One with a splash. This early surfing anthem was the boys' first hit. As a single its flip side was "409," the next tune on the album. Complete with engines revving and tire squeals, "409" was the Beach Boys' first car song. "Surfin' U.S.A.," one of the most famous Beach Boys songs, follows. Taken from the Chuck Berry hit "Sweet Little Sixteen," "Surfin' U.S.A." let everyone know that surfin' was hip, no matter where you lived.

"Be True To Your School" adds a little spirit to the collection. This first recording of the song features The Honeys as cheerleaders and background vocalists. Considered a rare version, its inclusion brings a collector's status to the album. "Surfer Girl," the first hit ballad by the group, slows down the pace a little. "Dance, Dance, Dance" follows to wake us up from the girl surfers undoing our hearts.

Side Two jumps into the action with some great hot rod songs. "Fun, Fun, Fun" and "I Get Around," the latter being the group's first No. 1 hit, gave teenagers an impetus to cruise around town with a purpose. An interesting mix of "Fun, Fun, Fun" here allows the ending to have a longer fade, enabling the falsato of Brian Wilson to be heard.

"Help Me, Rhonda," a song about healing a broken heart with another woman, was another No. 1 hit. The song also has a history of being re-recorded. This version was produced by Wilson after his disapproval of the first recording on The Beach Boys Today album. "Don't Worry Baby," a car song ballad, reinforces the Beach Boys' ability to create lush harmonies. In the same fashion, "California

Pageant disappoints progressive crowd

By JOHN C. MANDLER

Lifes Rich Pageant, R.E.M.'s much-anticipated fourth LP, has been on the shelves for about six weeks now, and it's time the beans were spilled. The jacket seems R.E.M. enough — the familiar cave-art drawings and juxtaposed photographs, as well as the usual quirks (fragments of lyrics on the sleeve and the deletion of two song titles from the cover this time). But how about the music? Gone from the booth are Mitch Easter and Don Dixon, the band's previous producers. The new quarterback is Don Gehman, master of the Big Play, most noted for his recent work with John Cougar Mellencamp.

Though the production is pumped-up and cleaner than ever, Michael Stipe's mystical mumblings are, for the most part, indecipherable as always. Are these guys ever going to give us a lyrics sheet? Hopefully not — a large part of this band's appeal is the murkiness of Stipe's vocals and the ambiguity of his messages, even when the lyrics can be picked up. This makes for some exciting imagery, the specifics of which are left up to the listener.

While it is frustrating to listen to a repetitious, seemingly simple chorus and not have the slightest idea what is being said (as so often is the case with these guys), it is equally rewarding to catch a line here or there and be able to form an image from it. Let's have a listen:

"Begin the Begin," appropriately the opening track, gets the record off to a flying start as Peter Buck tears into a thunderous lead, full of feedback, that sounds a lot closer to The Golden Palominos' "Clustering Train" (with Stipe at the mic) than anything R.E.M. has done to date. Stipe seems the epitome of angry frustration as he growls "I can't even rhyme/ in the begin." I particularly like the line "Tiger run around the tree/ follow the leader/ run, turn into butter," a reference to the greedy tigers in one of my favorite childhood stories, "Little Black Sambo." Such a vivid picture of futility. Bill Berry's big beat and a confused organ break add to the mood of the song.

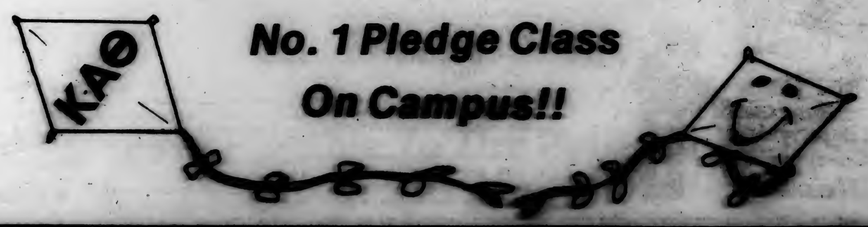
"Fall On Me," the token AOR number, is undoubtedly the catchiest track on the record; and commercial radio programming has already jumped on this melancholy lament about the acid rain problem. I can't help but like this song regardless. Propelled by the archetypical Peter Buck guitar hook (that mesmerizing circular riff he's perfected), "Fall On Me" is one of Stipe's best vocal performances of recent memory.

I must confess that at first I had it written off as a sellout, but who can fault the boys for lands smack dab in the middle of a niche that, after all, they themselves created? You will no doubt find yourself humming along with this one (and not because you can't make out the words this time).

"Cuyahoga," though a noble undertaking, doesn't quite come off. Michael is an Indian whining about how his people's river has been badly trashed (I keep thinking of that cheesy commercial with the Indian chief, tear running down his cheek, trying to paddly through the sludgy Hudson River or whatever). Why is it that Stipe and Co. feel compelled to culture us so much of the time? Like history class, this one is a snore.

Perhaps my favorite cut is the closing number, "Superman," a cover of the Clique's '60s tune. Notorious for their outrageous covers in concert, R.E.M. has never before put one on vinyl. Nor has Michael Stipe ever relinquished the mike to the other Mike (Mills, the bassist). The result is a bouncy, entrancing piece that captures the psychedelic aura of the original while breathing new life into it at the same time. The rest of the album is, regretfully, merely the rest of the album. While these songs are listenable enough, they lack the compelling elements that we have come to associate with this band.

A month of listening to Lifes Rich Pageant has led me to the following synopsis: when it's good, it's very, very good, but when it's bad, it's average. R.E.M.'s earlier works hit me the same way for the first few listenings, but almost all of the tunes were infectious and eventually came through. I would find the songs growing on me, sneaking into my head before I was consciously aware of likinng them. A few of the tracks here, however, have never really crept up on me in this way.



While R.E.M.'s distinctive sound continues to be a breath of fresh air in this age of throw-away pop retreads and six-month bands, they only hint at their potential greatness on Lifes Rich Pageant: one is left with the impression that their definitive disc, their Sgt. Pepper's, so to speak, is still forthcoming. Lifes Rich Pageant doesn't quite stand up to the band's previous efforts, either, although the sound is still basic R.E.M. for the most part (despite Gehman's high tech approach to production). It is often unfocused and not nearly as consistent as Murmur, for example. Perhaps Lifes Ups and Downs would be a more fitting title. Come on guys, life gets richer than this!

Cinderella storms Philly with 'Night Songs'

By CAESAR ETTORE

Night Songs
Cinderella
Polygram Records

Metal bands come and go. Those that have real talent as musicians and songwriters stick around a lot longer. Bands and performers such as Iron Maiden and Ozzy Osbourne continue to prosper. The likes of one-hit wonders such as Twisted Sister and Quiet Riot continue their downward plunge into obscurity as their audiences get bored with their adolescent anthems. A band who should be around for years to come are the Philaldelphia-based rockers, Cinderella. On their debut LP, Night Songs, Cinderella proves that they're more than your average hard rock/heavy metal band.

The band made up of Tom Keifer (vocals/guitar), ex-Ozzy Osbourne and Keel drummer Fred Coury, Eric Brittingham (bass) and Jeff LeBar (guitar), have put together a powerful collection of songs that can be appreciated by more than just metal heads. Produced by Andy Johns, Night Songs has that heavy edge to it without being thrash and bang and with more melody.

Opening the LP is the title track "Night Songs." Obviously, AC-DC influenced, the song as a slower, heavier number with a little bit of erriness thrown in for good measure. It is one of the best tracks on the album, and gets things going in fine fashion. "Shake Me" and "Nobody's Fool" are the LP's first two singles and videos. The former is an up-tempo party-type song, while the latter is a slower, moodier song and should get the band plenty of air play.

The first side concludes with perhaps the album's best two tracks, "Nothing For Nothing" and "Once Around the Ride." "Nothing For Nothing" with its memorable chorus and energetic presentation shows that Cinderella can write powerful songs with melody. "Once Around the Ride," the LP's real scorcher and the band's stage opener, is much in the classic Aerosmith mold. The song is a real rocker and just solidifies the fact that Cinderella is more than just another pop metal band.

On to side two and "Hell on Wheels," the LP's only average track. Even though mediocre, the song takes on a whole new life when performed live. After this, the album picks up again with more high-quality songs. Among the highlights of the album's remainder are "Push Push" and "Somebody Save Me." "Push Push" (lyrics aside), is definitely one of the more commercial tracks on the LP and if released as a single will surely have the PMRC screaming.

The song is commercial enough to appeal to a larger than metal audience, and once listened to, the memorable chorus will not be forgotten too soon. After a few listens to "Somebody Save Me" the one thing that starts to stand out are its humorous lyrics. Credit for this goes to Tom Keifer. Not only is the music catchy, but the lyrics are hilarious while being realistic.

With Night Songs already gold and quickly approaching platinum status, there is no doubt that Cinderella are the hottest band in the United States today. If they continue to put albums like Night Songs out, there is little question that they'll be around for year's to come. Cinderella play rock'n'roll the way it was meant to be played, hard and from the heart.

The Faction breaks into mainstream rock

By MEGAN GUIDERA

Philadelphia, the first stepping stone for multiple talent, gave the public Bill Cosby, David Brenner, Beru Review, and The Hooters. However, this city's vast artistic ability does not stop there. The Faction, a band from Wayne, Pa., is steadily coasting into the mainstream of the Philadelphia Club scene.

The Faction, a young vibrant and talented band, consists of four members. Jeff Byrne, the 28-year-old lead vocalist, plays guitar and synthesizer. Paul Spiegel, 27, plays the guitar and lends background vocals. Bass guitar and background vocals are performed by Ben Dority, 27. The youngest member of the band, Fabian, 24, manages drums and percussion.

Together these four men create a sound that is exciting and unique.

After breaking away from the band Shylock, Byrne founded The Faction in 1984. They began playing in Philadelphia clubs such as: Empire Rock Club, Central Park, Grendel's Lair, Bigelow's and Orleans. During this time The Faction's repertoire consisted of half-original, half-cover music. After two years of success, the groups songwriters, Byrne and Spiegel, took a break to change the musical menu to all original music. At this time, two band members were replaced with Ben Dority and Fabian.

Byrne's and Spiegel's brain storming produced enough original material for two albums. Their creations entail rock-n-roll songs like "I Like This Town" and "Everything I Feel." "Just A Dream" is an example of a slow-paced dance tune. Aside from many other upbeat rock-n-roll tunes, the band's best song is "Somethin' Comin' Up." "Somethin' Comin' Up," with its different rock beat, has gained the band a great deal of notoriety. Recently, "Somethin' Comin' Up" received airplay on WMMR's Sunday night music show, Streetbeat. If interested, one can request hearing this song every Sunday night during WMMR's Streetbeat at 263-8933.

In August of 1986 The Faction recorded a demo at Warehouse Studios where Led Zeppelin rehearsed prior to Live Aid. This demo is available through their manager at Princeton Management in Devon, Pa. (688-2997).

For more mellow occasions Byrne and Spiegel mold together to form a musical duo. Their repertoire consists mainly of Motown and good time Rock-n-Roll. Byrne made several appearances at some of Villanova's Coffee Houses.

Although The Faction occasionally divides to suit the occasion, their future goals consist of getting back into the Philadelphia Club scene as a whole group. The Faction is presently in pursuit of breaking into the college music scene. The group's lead singer, Byrne, has future hopes of playing at Villanova and other surrounding colleges. The Faction is also seeking the reception of a major recording contract. With The Faction's spirit and ability, their goals are sure to be fulfilled within the near future.

The Faction, Philadelphia's newest child of talent and quality, is sure to put a dent in the music industry. To enjoy their music one can see Byrne and Spiegel this Friday and Saturday night at Orleans in Paoli. If that can not be made, they are also at Smokey Joe's in Wayne every Tuesday night.

This week we're going to look at four original ideas from four different software companies. All are available for most systems and definitely worthy of review. Look for four games from Accolade next week.

SPITFIRE 40 — THE AVALON HILL GAME COMPANY ••••

Spitfire 40 is the first realistic combat game to come out in a long time. It involves not only learning to fly a World War II Mark I fighter jet, but also intercepting and destroying German planes. The way that these two tasks must be integrated is what makes Spitfire 40 so realistic. The controls are easy to use, involving only a few keys and the joystick, yet it is also just as easy to crash the plane because the landing gear is in the down position. It is good to use the Practice mode first to learn how to fly the World War II ace. After the controls feel comfortable, then enter combat.

There are two choices for Spitfire 40 from the main menu — Simulator and The Game. The Simulator is just that — a simulator of the Mark I plane in which you can choose either Practice or Combat mode. In Practice, you only fly the plane, but in Combat there are enemy planes. The Game starts you out at 10,000 feet fighting against German Fighter planes or Stuka dive bombers. Either way, Spitfire 40 us a challenge that must be taken. Just don't forget to take down the flaps over 150 miles an hour.

LEADER BOARD — ACCESS SOFTWARE INC. •••••

Leader Board is quite simply the best golf simulator I've ever seen. It won't be hard to get anyone to agree either. Leader Board gives the player the choice of between one and four golfers, three difficultty levels, how many courses are played at a time and a selection from four totally different courses. What's better is that the course difficulty is determined by wind direction and speed and amount of slice or hook that is placed on a ball, both factors of which are chosen randomly for each game. The problem with getting the same course never occurs. Taking a shot in Leader Board involves choosing a club, direction of the shot, power behind the swing and amount of hook or slice in the swing. These factors are easily controlled with the push of the joystick button.

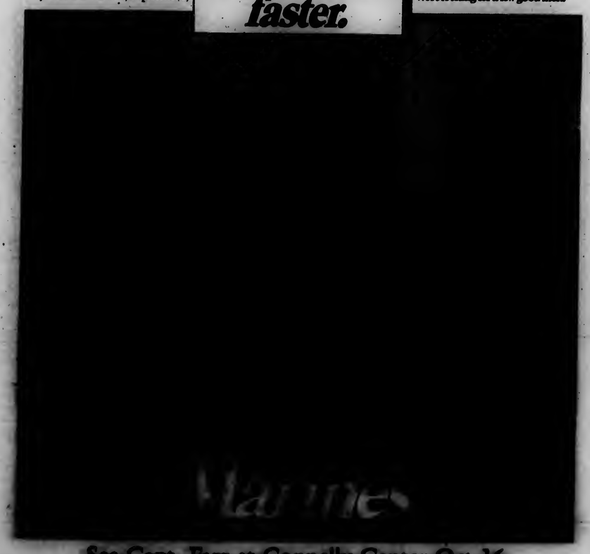
What puts Leader Board at the top of its class is that the player must actually think before taking a shot. The graphics are so good that you get to see the computer constructing each image from perspective. The game can show a position looking in any direction — this in itself is worth the ticket price. So, what we have is excellent graphics, excellent game play and a running total of the score automatically computer — in other words the pick hit of the week. Don't think of copying Leader Board because every game comes with a special security key that plugs into the parallel port.

WORLD GAMES — EPYX ••••

The latest entry in the Games series from Epyx proves to be the best of them all. World Games has eight new events: Cliff Diving, Sumo Wrestling, Bull Riding, Barrel Jumping, Log Rolling, Weight Lifting, Slalom Skiing and the Caber Toss. All events were chosen because of their international connections, centered in eight countries. Cliff Diving is from Acapulco, Bull Riding from the U.S., etc. Each game also has a small introduction to the country in which the game originates. And what's even better is that there is a contest that goes with the release of World Games. Winners will receive free plane tickets and other prizes.

The games themselves are easy to learn, but hard to master. Playing an event involves a combination of joystick movements to execute a certain series of moves in the event. The most difficult event, also the one that Epyx boasts about, is the Caber Toss, in which the player must try to flip the equivalent of a long log over vertically. Weight Lifting isn't as easy as it might sound either. Timing is critical in all events. One fun thing is to jump the cliff diver at such an angle as to hit the cliff. Graphic reactions to this and other blunders are priceless. World Games takes the gold.

PERRY MASON — SPINNAKER/TELARIUM •••••



For all you mystery enthusiasts, this game's for you. Perry Mason is the best thought-provoking game to hit the market in a long time — all you would-be lawyers take heed. In this adventure from Spinnaker/Telarium, you are Perry Mason, faced with a seemingly impossible challenge — to clear a woman from murder charges of her husband. The catch is that her husband, a wealthy restaurateur, was about to divorce her and the lady was found at the scene of the crime with the murder weapon in her hand. Look suspicious? Perry Mason is a complex game, with many twists and turns in the investigation.

As Perry Mason, you have the help of Della Street, your attractive secretary, and Paul Drake, an assistant detective. You must first find out all evidence about the case by visiting the scene of the crime, talking with different people, sending Drake and Street on info quests and investigating the storry of your client. After all information is gathered, you must go to court for your case. If you don't have enough evidence, you might as well send your client to jail yourself. Perry Mason is an excellent text adventure with a good plot and a difficult resolution — but well worth the challenge.

As a Marine Officer, you could be in charge of a Mach 2 + F/A-18A, a vertical take-off Harrier or one of our other jets or helicopters. And you could do it by the time you're 23. But it takes a special commitment on your part. We demand leaders at all levels. We teach you to be one. If you're a freshman, sophomore, or junior, ask about our Platoon Leaders Class program. If you're a senior, check out our Officer Candidate Class programs. Starting salaries are from $18,000 to $24,000. And you can count on going farther . . . faster.

Go farther... faster.

We're looking for a few good men.

Lauper's only True Colors are in her hair

By KEVIN HECHT

True Colors
Cyndi Lauper
Portait Records

Seemingly out of nowhere she exploded into the music industry and bopped her way into the hearts of a new audience that had never seen the likes of her before. This enigmatic multicolored pixie pranced her way to the top of the charts, onto MTV, and could be seen everywhere from "Wrestlemania" to the cover of Newsweek along the way. She released one of the most successful debut albums in history, and she was one of the hottest performers around. Cyndi Lauper was riding on a crest of popularity brought about by her first album, She's So Unusual, and an outlandishly original style topped off with a hairdo that looked like an ad for the Crayola Crayon Co., and that made Tina Turner seem conservative.

When Lauper charged into the studio to put together her second album, it seemed that the ingredients were there to make it just as successful as the first. She was going strong with momentum and popularity, and was backed up by a cast of stars that included Adrian Belew, Nile Rodgers, Billy Joel and the masterful musical genius of Pee Wee Herman, who were sure to create a solid musical masterpiece that would surpass the success of She's So Unusual in 1983. Tragically though, somewhere along the line amidst Lauper's hype and colorful image something was lost, and her latest release True Colors clearly illustrates that this something was good music.

True Colors produced by Lauper along with Lennie Petze on Portrait Records is an incohesive, chaotic compilation of songs that seem to go nowhere, and in the end leave the listener scratching their head and wondering what it was that Lauper was trying to convey. The album never takes off in a solid direction, and it shifts around aimlessly having little, if any, impact on its audience.

Part of this problem is due to the fact that too many artists were involved in the composition and arrangement of the songs on the album, and it destroyed any sense of unity it could have possessed. Most of the songs contained in True Colors tend to be monotonous with an overuse of linn drums and synthesizers, and have lyrics that are about as easy to figure out as the color of Lauper's hair.

There are some redeeming aspects of the album. Lauper's remarkable voice is fun to listen to, and she shows off her astounding range, which adds some color to some otherwise listless songs. She also has scored a hit with the album's title cut, which is a beautiful and moving song that is the only highlight of the album. This tune shows that Lauper is still capable of producing fine songs such as those on She's So Unusual, but unfortunately the album doesn't go much deeper than this.

Cyndi Lauper certainly has the potential to put forth great music equal to that on her first album. She has the unmistakable voice, sensitivity and support of some very talented people to back her up, but she is going to have to pool all these resources together in a congruent manner, with a solidly composed musical basis in order to recapture the successful sound that this album lacks. The jury is still out on Cyndi Lauper and one hopes she can change direction to take full advantage of the talent she possesses. "She Bopped" her way through a tremendously successful debut album, but unfortunately, "She Flopped" with her latest release.

'Til Tuesday can wait until tomorrow

By THERESA JONES

I looked forward to the release of the second 'Til Tuesday album, having seen their Voices Carry tour and thoroughly enjoying that album. The follow-up, Welcome Home, is a bit disappointing, however.

After the first playing I was truly let down, feeling the album was much too mellow. Though Voices Carry may not be what you would call powerful rock, my first impression of Welcome Home was that it lacked the energy of its predecessor. I looked for Side Two to be the livelier, but found it to be mellower than the first.

Though disappointed, I felt a second playing might give a different opinon, and admittedly the second time around was somewhat more enjoyable. The energy level on the replay seemed a bit greater, whereas the first listen left me with a sluggish, dragging feeling. Perhaps I had listened with too many expectations of another Voices Carry.

At any rate, I suspect Welcome Home may grow on me. Yet my major complaint with the album is that the band does not seem to have progressed any since their 1985 release. Lead vocalist Aimee Mann, also lyricist for all their songs except Welcome Home's "Lover's Day," has incredible vocal talent. She can range from the soft and sweet sound of "Sleep" from the first or "David Denies" of the second album, to the more throaty and powerful sound of "Love in a Vacuum" or "Voices Carry," the band's most well-known releases.

Thematically, Welcome Home is not remarkably different either. Most songs deal with a lost love or strained relationship, and usually Aimee, as the singer, is the self-assured one.

Side one begins with "What About Love," (not to be confused with the song of the same title by Heart), which is probably the album's best hope for a successful single. Joey Pesce's performance on the synthesizers is at its best here also. "Coming Up Close" follows, a line from which the album title arises. The Welcome Home image created here is one of overalls, plaid flannel shirts, and haystacks, with the guitar performance more toward the acoustic, not quite in character with the rest of 'Til Tuesday's songs.

"On Sunday," "Will She Just Fall Down," and "David Denies," none of which are anything special, complete Side One. "Will She Just . . . " created mixed images — a cross between the Beatles and the Partridge Family. I know . . . I know . . . The Partridge Family!?! That was my reaction exactly.

Again on Side Two, the first tune "Lover's Day" is probably the most energetic. "Have Mercy," "Sleeping and Waking," "Angels Never Call," and "No One is Watching You Now" follow. The theme of a broken heart becomes tiresome by the end of the album. The lyrics are not anything out of the ordinary, and as my roommate put it, "She [Aimee Mann] must be miserable!"

Besides Mann and Pesce, 'Til Tuesday is rounded out by Michael Housmann on drums and percussion and Robert Holmes on guitar and background vocals. Housmann must have been rather bored by this production, for the tone of the album never availed him the chance to truly perform. The band writes their own music, which is perhaps a reason for the some-what limited range.

As I listen now to Voices Carry instead of Welcome Home, my impression that there is a greater energy and life to the first album is verified. Welcome Home, while not necessarily a step backward for 'Til Tuesday, certainly doesn't offer anything innovative in the lyrics or musical composition. I have to say I prefer by far Voices Carry, and do not foresee any releases from Welcome Home being as successful. I would be willing to buy a third album to see if any development occurs there, but if you are looking for a new and improved 'Til Tuesday, you won't find it on Welcome Home. You may not even find the old and familiar, but an old and tired, worn out theme. Look for better next time.

Pizza, a shell pizza that comes stuffed with cheeses and toppings of your choice. The pasta dishes are good but, unfortunately, come in very small servings. So if you are hungry, try their sandwiches or stromboli for a great meal that will definitely fill you up.

Overall, the Oasis Cafe has a great menu. The prices are moderate so that a dinner for two could easily be under $15. It is a delicious and unique alternative to the other "moderate priced" restaurants further up Lancaster Pike. The dining room is open daily for both lunch and dinner.

Keep your eyes open for their daily specials. For the Monday night football crowd they offer 50-cent hotdogs with chili, sauerkraut and onions. Plus $1 domestic beers. Wednesday through Friday they feature DJ. Howard for dancing on their newly illuminated dance floor.

Friday afternoons, 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. is The D.J. Dance Party. Come early because it gets packed. They offer 25-cent hoagies, 50-cent drafts, 75-cent bottled beer and 50-cent drinks. This is one of the most popular Friday afternoon "happy hours" and is definitely a good time.

I highly recommend you check out the Oasis American Cafe for a great meal. Or bring your I.D. and check out their specials or take a spin on their dance floor. Whatever you choose, there is no doubt that by midnight at the Oasis, you will have to send your camel to bed.

Beach Boys compilation

Girls" creates the image of the perfect female. Though it peaked at No. 3, the song was recently covered by David Lee Roth, which shows its lasting appeal.

Taken from the Beach Boys Party album, "Barbara Ann" shows the group, with help from Dean Torrence of Jan & Dean, demonstrating what their music is about — fun!

Side Three goes into the later part of the '60s. In 1966, "Good Vibrations" was the group's first million-selling single, a great song to begin the side. "Heroes And Villains" followed and was of the same genre. "Wouldn't It Be Nice" has an unusual mono mix. This version has a strong lead vocal and thye lyrics, "Maybe if we think and wish and hope and pray . . ." has lost the echo effect. On close comparison with other Beach Boys albums, this version differs considerably.

Side Four has one song from the late '60s two from the '70s, and three from the '80s. "Do It Again" was a 1968 revival song of the Beach Boys' early years. In 1976, they reprised Chuck Berry's "Rock And Roll Music." Mike Love provides a powerful lead vocal. Two years later, "Come Go With Me," the Dell-Vikings' hit, was recorded but did not become a hit for the Beach Boys until 1981.

In 1985, "Getcha Back" was a comeback hit off the self-entitled album, The Beach Boys. A new recording, "Rock 'N' Roll To The Rescue," is a hot tune about a shy kid who learns to enjoy life through rock music. The last song, "California Dreamin'," features a superb 12-string guitar by Roger McGuinn, a member of the legendary Byrds group. It seems fitting that the Beach Boys incorporate "California Dreamin'" in their list of hits. Currently, the song is climbing the charts, indicating the timeless appeal of the California based band.

Made In U.S.A. is an excellent collection of Beach Boys hits. Anyone who plans to have a beach party during the school year should obtain this record. The Beach Boys are: Brian Wilson, Carl Wilson, Mike Love, Alan Jardine and Bruce Johnston. This album is dedicated to the memory of Dennis Wilson.

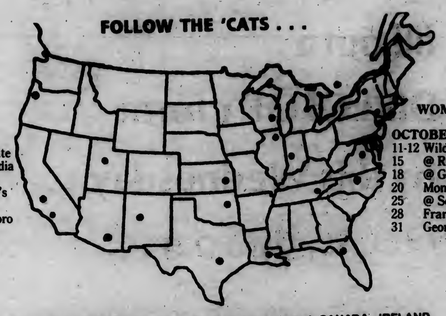
Field hockey drop two

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER



Under the sunny skies of early autumn, the Villanova field hockey team took on the Drexel University Engineers and tried to improve on their disappointing 3-4 record. The skies weren't the only things shining that day, the Wildcats had a sparkling performance as well. Goalie Sue Ruff shone through for the Cats with a six-save performance to lead the Wildcats to a 3-0 shutout. Goals were scored by Sharon Seiz, Melissa Grubb and Sally Poliwoda.

However, although the skies held out the Wildcats performance did not. The Wildcats proceeded to lose two in a row to the Temple Owls and the LaSalle Explorers, 3-0 and 2-1 respectively. The Wildcats will now go up against Yale, LockHaven and Rider before Fall Break.

Greeks go on all summer

Summer is here . . . school is out . . . and Villanovans head to the beach or to summer jobs everywhere. Most student organizations go into hibernation during the summer months, but not the Greeks.

Fraternities and sororities continue their programming efforts even during the summer months. Summer social events are popular as are programs in preparation for rush. Most importantly however, are the summer conventions that all of the national fraternities and sororities convene.

The national sororities convene their conventions in June, usually at a popular but off-season resort location. Other sororities meet in major metropolitan centers. The locations this past summer varied from Camelback (in Phoenix, Arizona) to Philadelphia and Dallas. These conventions, usually lasting from three to four days focus on leadership development, legislation and self-governance, and current trends and issues prevalent in the sorority world.

Nationally renowned speakers and well-known experts in applicable fields are frequently present to provide the up-to-date ideas and information which these national gatherings supply. Idea exchange is also a prominent feature of these programs. While the convention locations might seem to imply that "partying" or "sight seeing" is important, the sorority women who attend will quickly report that most of their time is spent in session or meetings. Very little free time is provided for extracurricular activities.

All six of Villanova's sororities were represented at their national meetings this summer. Each participant returned to the campus enthused and renewed to do a better job in meeting the goals of her group.

The national fraternities convene their meetings in August in major metropolitan locations. This past summer saw our fraternity representatives travel to such locations as Lexington, Ky., New Orleans, La., St. Louis, Miss., and Boston, Mass. As with the women's groups, much attention at these events is focused on leadership training, fraternity management, and legislative matters. Unlike the sororities however, the men are provided with considerably more free time to enjoy the sights and excitement of their convention site.

Villanova's fraternities were also well represented at their summer conventions this past summer. Seven of our 11 national groups held meetings and all seven had representatives from our campus.

Hot topics that were featured this summer included alcohol use and abuse, sexuality and date rape, chapter liability, successful rush programming, dry (non-alcoholic) rush, chapter scholarship and ritual renewal.

Assistant director of student activities, Gary Bonas, was a guest speaker at three national fraternity conventions this past summer. Bonas reported "that attendance at these meetings was at an all-time high and that conference delegates were eager to participate in the leadership or informational sessions. Everyone seems to be encountering similar problems and these meetings provide an ideal opportunity to share solutions. To attend one of these meetings is also a 'real shot in the fraternity arm' "

Summer conventions are just another example of the serious management efforts that have begun to pervade the Greek world. Villanova Greeks are fully involved to actively represent their fraternity or sorority at a national level.

Cats kick Keane

By MIKE SMITH

Villanova's women's soccer team defeated Keane 1-0 on Oct. 1 to up their record to 7-1-2. The only goal of the game was scored at 30:14 of the first half on a corner kick by Mary Burns, while forward Ann Brennan was credited with the assist. Solid goaltending by Lynn McHale and tough overall defense enabled the lady cats to preserve the victory.

Ann Brennan, who, in addition to her assist had seven shots, talked about the team's upcoming games. "We have the toughest part of our schedule ahead, but we feel that we can compete. If we put our best game on the field we can come out winners."

Upcoming games include a bout with Princeton, whom the Cats have never beaten. However, Brennan states, "We have the potential to do it this time."

In addition to the Tigers, the women will be hosting the Wildcat tournament here next weekend. At press time, Holy Cross, Yale and Rhode Island are expected to participate.

Lady cats fault

By NED THOMPSON

The women's tennis team traveled to Rutgers Oct. 1 where the team suffered an 8 to 1 defeat at the hands of a very strong and experienced Scarlet Knight squad. The Wildcats record dropped to 6-4 on the year.

Freshman Jeannie O'Connor, playing number four singles, was the lone winner for Villanova, romping over Leslie Thau in straight sets, 6-2, 6-2.

Another freshman, Lynn Slowinski, also came within an eyelash of victory. She dropped a well played match, 7-6, 3-6, 6-4, to Jacqui Jende in the no. 1 singles contest.

Despite this setback the outlook for the team's future remains bright. Dr. Robert Langrans team sent a squad of three freshman, one sophomore and two juniors into the match against Rutgers as the team looks toward an excellent second half and the playoffs.

The Villanova's Men's soccer team four-game winning streak was ended by Top 20, ranked Temple University last Wednesday, before shutting out Rutger-Camden later in the week.

Villanova, which had won four straight games to improve their record to five wins and two losses, was shutdown 4-0 by a Temple University team that has been ranked in the Top 20 for most of the season.

Temple held a 1-0 lead after the first half, but scored three straight goals at the start of the second half to put the game out of reach.

Later in the week, Villanova was able to start a new winning streak against Rutgers-Camden, shutting out the New Jersey School 3-0. Junior Ben Tatta, raising his team lead in goals to six, scored twice. Freshman Joe Mellinez added the third score against Rutgers.

Senior Brendan Quinn, with three saves, recorded his third shutout of the season.

Track recruits

Sports Information

Dr. Charles Jenkins and Jack Pyrah recently welcomed a batch of new talent for the Villanova track program, which opens its indoor season next month.

A late arrival was Jan Friedli, regarded as the best junior middle distance man in Denmark. Friedli specializes in the 800 and 1500 meters. He is from Lyngby, near Copenhagen, and lived for five years in Japan. Friedli is a native of Switzerland with outstanding academic credentials and will major in computer science.

Friedli joins Lyle Smith of Bernard High School, Bernardsville, N.J., who anchored his team to the Penn Relays distance medley title and won the high school division mile in the Fifth Avenue Run in New York.

He is joined by Mark Raney, a 200, 400 and long jumper from Vethel High School, Hampton, VA.; Marc Jones, the Pennsylvania PIAA champion in the 200 and 400 meters; Howard Johnson, junior world champion at 400 meters from Markham, Ontario.

From the football team will come Jeremy Worell, Falls Church, VA., a hurdler who can also long jump and triple jump.

Mike Seeger joins the team as a walk-on. Seeger has a sister on the women's soccer team and a brother on the football team.

Women ranked 16th

By SUSAN GANEM

By placing three runners in the Top 10, the women's cross country team bettered their national ranking from 18th to 16th at last week's meet in Tennessee. As a team, the Wildcats placed second behind 14th nationally-ranked University of Virginia, and ahead of third place Ohio, host Tennessee, and Big East rival Georgetown.

"I'm very pleased with our progress. We appear to be right on schedule for our season goals," said Coach Marty Stern. "Vicki Huber and Gina Procaccio are running super and the rest of the team continues to improve. We're looking forward to the championship part of our season which starts next week."

Vicki Huber was the first Wilcat across the finish line, placing second overall with a time of 18:19 for the 5000-meter course. Gina Procaccio (fourth-18:44), Dolores Carapella (10th-19:33), Kathy Franey (15th-19:52), and Dina Alborano (21st-20:12) rounded out Villanova's scoring. Lauren Searby (22nd-20:17), Ruth Lockbaum (26th-20:35), Jen Rahn (30th-20:50), Elaine Duck (33rd-21:04), and Tina Mahar (39th-21:45) also ran well for Villanova.

The harriers will take a week hiatus to prepare for the upcoming Big Five and Big East Championships.

THE BIG EAST CONFERENCE

Golfers double bogey

By EILEEN GRADY

The Villanova Golf Team entered the Big East Conference at Georgetown last weekend determined to defend their title. Yet, despite a valiant effort on the team's part, the title was captured by St. John's with one stroke. St. John's finished first with a two-day team total of 603, while the Cats finished second with 604. Boston College came in third with a score of 612.

Villanova's Tom Feeney, a promising freshman, finished tied for fourth with a two-day total of 148, while Captain Chet Walsh finished tied for sixth with 150. Sophomore Jim Clark followed close behind with a tie for ninth at 152.

The stroke that set St. John's ahead came about by a decision that went in favor of St. John's by the Rules Committee. Since the weekend the team has heard added details and feel that there was erroneous judgement on the part of the Rules Committee. Coach Don Ficco is making a point of information so that the rules will be clarified for future understanding.

Mistakes kill Cats, Talley loses first

By MICHAEL IRONS

"We will learn a lot from losing. We will be beat again in the future and it will be up to us to take positive steps from our losses," Coach Andy Talley said after his Villanova Wildcats had suffered their first loss under the new program to the University of Buffalo, 29-27.

"We lost to a team that was not better than us. We beat ourselves. We made too many stupid mistakes," said Talley. Ten of these mistakes were penalties which were called on the Wildcats for over 60 yards.

"I can't say anything about the officiatingbut there were a lot of penalties called on us, especially for being at home. They called 'holding' on us but not on Buffalo," Talley said.

The loss put a damper on another fine showing from quarterback Kirk Schulz. The red-shirted freshman passed for 254 yards and a pair of touchdowns on 22 out of 39 attempts. Schulz has now completed 58 out of 97 passes for 771 yards at a .598 completion rate.

Tailback Ron Sency also had a strong outing, rushing for 94 yards on 15 carries and one touchdown.

The loss, Villanova's first since a 17-7 setback at the hands of the Delaware Hens, on Nov. 1, 1980, was put in perspective by Coach Talley.

"It is not the end of the world. Last week we had one last bullet to fire, today we had no more bullets," Talley explained. "A loss is not bad now as it would have been last year. This takes the monkey off our backs and now the kids can relax."

The game started off well for the Wildcats. After holding Buffalo and forcing them to punt, Villanova drove 85 yards on six plays for the games first touchdown. The key play of the drive was Sency's 43-yard sweep off left tackle for the score.

"We made some mental mistakes on defense. They [Buffalo] ran the toss-sweep very well," Talley said. This was evident on the very next series as Buffalo drove 75 yards to tie the score at 7-7. The big play coming from O.D. Underwood who rushed for 26 yards, 18 on one play during the drive. Underwood, however, was injured on a one-yard gain and never returned to the game.

"When O.D. [Underwood] went out early, it forced them to throw the ball more," Talley said. Unfortunately, Buffalo quarterback Ken Crosta was up to the challenge by completing 15 of 26 passes for 216 yards and a pair of touchdowns. Both touchdowns came in the final quarter when Buffalo scored 22 points to take the lead and the game.

Villanova went into the fatal fourth quarter with a 21-7 advantage. But the advantage easily could have been bigger.

"We squandered a lot of opportunities. Our offense did not score," Talley said. The first big opportunity came after Villanova had upped the lead to 14-7 on a Schultz to Bob Brady touchdown pass. On the first play after the kickoff, senior John McGowan recovered a Buffalo fumble at the Buffalo 39 yard line. Sophomore Art Condidina fumbled three plays later and the chance went by the boards.

The next opportunity that went by the wayside happened when Schulz threw an interception in the end zone, stopping the Wildcats cold.

Villanova upped the lead to 21-7 on Schulz's second scoring toss of the afternoon, this one to Jim Cashman late in the third quarter.

Buffalo cut the lead to 21-14 on a six-yard run by Bob Mettica and were the recipients of another Villanova turnover shortly afterwards. Schulz handed off to Gary Pascoe who faked the run and threw for the end zone. The pass was intercepted, once again stopping the Wildcats. Buffalo drove the 80 yards for the score, Crosta to John Withers, and then converted on the two-point conversion to give Buffalo its first lead.

Villanova came right back with a drive of its own. When Pete Lombardi scored with only 1:54 remaining in the game, Villanova seemed to have the game wrapped up. The extra point try was fumbled, giving the Wildcats a 27-22 advantage and depriving them of the margin of victory.

Unfortunately for the Wildcats, another "mental mistake" gave Buffalo excellent field position to start the game winning drive. Instead of squib kicking the ball down the middle of the field, the placekicker rolled the ball only to the Buffalo 40 yard line. It took Buffalo only six plays to go the 60 yards for the score with only 1:07 remaining.

"Its tough to score with only 1:07 on the clock and without any time-outs," Talley conceded.

"We are still boys going against men. We are a young team, these kids have been together for the most only eight games," Talley said. "I had never lost to him [Buffalo Head Coach Bill Dando] before. I never thought I would lose to him especially here at Villanova."

Rugby remains undefeated

By SHANA LYNCH

The Rugby Club stood alone as the only Villanova team to remain unbeaten by sweeping both Lafayette and Wharton in the past two weeks. But more importantly, the team achieved its 395th victory since its inception in 1959.

Head Coach Brian "Gigger" Fisher feels that, "This is the team that will get the Club's 400th win. They shouldn't lose a single game all season if they keep on rucking." The team boasts of a 92 percent winning percentage in its 27 years, and is presently playing solid rugby.

The A side blanked Lafayette 12-0 as rain turned to cats and dogs. Billy Mendricindy opened up the scoring, and the graceful wing closed it with Tim Whalen bursting through Lafayette. Tim converted both kicks and called it a day.

Against Wharton, the fourth Annual Noone/Walsh Banquet took place as the A team scored early and often. Noone scored first, with Matt Lyons following suit just minutes later. As Denis "the Menace" Graeber scored his first of two tries, Mr. Robert Poch made a good hit. Hoss Poch capped the scoring with a try, as Tim went five for seven — kicking some tough kicks in this lopsided 31-6 victory. Chris "Skin" McStarr and Ken "Pasta" Gianelli played tough ball.

The killer B's beat LaFayette 8-0, with two tries by John Paul McCartney, and fine play by the stylish Joe "Patch" Stalb, Tom "Curly" Galino, and the real Mike Burke. The B team also downed Wharton by a score of 10-4. Tries were awarded to Buck "Pen Pal" Reitmeyer, who will be mad if you're not at this Saturday's match at 1 p.m., and Pat "T" O'Connell, as well as Mike McMorrow.

The C team got on the winning track behind Zulu Warrior Ken "Killer" Lamb. This 4-0 shut out lead Terrance "The Terrible" Dalton to believe that, "We played well, Lafayette didn't even score." Against Wharton, Greg LaMond scored two tries and said "The tour took a lot out of him." But apparently he's back.

This Saturday's match versus University of Pennsylvania will also be played at home on the Merrie Rennes Rugby pitch, at 1 p.m. after the tailgaters. So if you don't have a football ticket, or just don't want to get Buck Reitmeyer mad, you'll be there.

Political races tight

By ROBERT M. JORDAN

Villanova students are actively campaigning for several state and local candidates this election year, especially Democratic hopefuls Bob Casey and Bob Edgar and Republican candidates William Scranton III and Arlen Specter.

"This year's Democratic candidates are the best slate we've seen in a long time, and Bob Edgar is the best candidate for senator that Pennsylvania has ever had," said Fred Valente, senior political science major and vice president of the College Democrats.

"I think that Edgar will win and Bob Casey will be elected governor because Pennsylvania is basically a Democrat-oriented state. Registered Democrats outnumber Republicans by 800,000 and many pro-Democratic demographic groups, such as unions, the poor, and blacks, are found in this state," Valente said.

Valente serves as a Democratic committeeman in Marple Township and as the issues director in Seventh District congressional hopeful Bill Gray's campaign.

Senior political science major Scott Cannon feels that the Republican slate will emerge victorious. "The G.O.P. candidates have raised and spent more money than their Democratic counterparts. The Republicans also did not have bitter, divisive primary battles last spring," said Cannon, vice president of the college Republicans.

Bob Casey beat Philadelphian Ed Rendell for the gubernatorial nomination in the May primary election. However, both Donald Bailey and Rendell are supporting the candidates who beat them in the primary.

Junior Paul Cypher is the campus chairman of Students for Specter. Dozens of students have joined Specter's re-election campaign for the U.S. Senate this semester, registering new voters, distributing literature and making phone calls.

Housing ordinances questioned

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

In the wake of local zoning ordinances limiting the number of unrelated people living in one household, several members of the Villanova community have recently questioned the constitutional basis of these multiple occupancy restrictions.

The townships of Radnor and Upper Merion possess the strictest legislation against multiple occupancy in the vicinity, prohibiting more than two unrelated persons to live in the same residence.

The Township of Upper Merion adopted these measures "because of all the problems that we were having with and the complaints that we have received about students," said Rita Winchell, executive secretary to the township engineer of Upper Merion.

Lower Merion and Haverford Townships permit a maximum of three unrelated persons per housing unit. According to Will Rosser, an intern with the Township of Lower Merion, the town received numerous complaints of "commotion, partying and a general ruckus." The zoning codes were adopted "to maintain a peaceful atmosphere."

In Haverford Township, although three students may share one household, all residences with two or more unrelated persons must first register with Charles Held, director of Code Enforcement of Haverford Township. In September, there were reportedly 108 detected violations of these codes. Held cited the prevention of overcrowding and parking problems as the prime motivations for Haverford's housing codes.

These zoning laws affect "approximately 1,400 full-time and part-time undergraduate students," according to the Rev. Francis A. Farsaci, O.S.A., advisor for off-campus residents. These are students who reside off-campus, but do not commute from their homes.

A Student Government committee was established to explore solutions for the plight of the off-campus Villanova student. Members of the committee have been conducting extensive research since the summer on the various nuances of multiple occupancy or "extended family" rulings.

The central controversy in the multiple occupancy zoning laws is if, in constructing a strict definition of a family, a municipality is violating a person's constitutional rights of association and right to privacy.

The single most important decision concerning the subject is the 1974 Supreme Court ruling in Belle Terre v. Boraas, according to John M. Hyson, a Villanova Law School professor. In this court case, the appellees, who had leased their house to six State University of New York (SUNY) Stonybrook students, challenged the ordinances of the village of Belle Terre, which permitted no

The Radnor Township Police Staff Traffic Committee recommended last January that a letter be sent to the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDot) for permission to place a left-turn arrow at the intersection of Lancaster Avenue and Ithan Avenue. After nine months and 11 accidents, including one fatality, little more has been done.

The letter was sent to PennDot in February, according to B. Duncan Hubley, Radnor Township engineer. He explained that PennDot does a traffic analysis before approving changes in signalization and that PennDot may be waiting to respond until the Schuylkill Expressway construction, which added extra traffic to Lancaster Avenue, is completed.

PennDot Traffic Engineer, Phil Wursta, though, said that Penn DOT never received a letter concerning a left-turn arrow and that he "doubts a letter was sent."

On Oct. 21, Joe Allman, Student Government president, attended the Radnor Township Police Staff Traffic Committee meeting. "The last letter written to PennDot concerning the intersection that they showed me was written in 1979," he said, "and that was a request for a walk light."

Allman has joined forces with George Calvert, president of the Association of Commuting students, to fight for the left-turn arrow. "I'm writing a letter to

Liability insurance's effect on V.U. examined

By JOANNE L. CONRAD

The premiums that Villanova pays for liability, property and other insurance more than doubled from the 1984-85 to the 1985-86 school year, Gary B. Fenner, vice president of Financial Affairs, said recently. Fenner said further that, "This year [1986-87 school year], there's been a stabilizing effect in the insurance industry, but the premiums will still go up."

Although liability insurance coverage has become increasingly in short supply nationwide, Fenner said that, "Villanova has been able to obtain adequate liability insurance coverage at reasonable premiums by the Hartford Insurance Company and has been for "a good number of years."

Despite the increases in insurance premiums and concern about potential liability lawsuit risks, Fenner said that, "No activities have been cut back at Villanova because of insurance or liability to my knowledge."

When asked whether Villanova has had to increasingly play it safer as a defensive legal maneuver, Fenner said, "No and I don't know why we would have to. Obviously, though, before we do anything new, insurance is immediately under more review and examination. Given the current state of affairs, insurance is a prime consideration."

Fenner continued that he and Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of Student Life, had recently discussed the potential risk and liability arising from Saferides, the student-run organization that provides rides for students who have been drinking and are not in condition to drive. The organization reorganized this year and is now recognized as a campus organization under the Office of Student Activities.

"Saferides is a fine program, but it could be a problem in today's world," Fenner said. "If a student is killed in an accident while using Saferides, the driver of the van and the University could be sued because it is a Villanova-run program.

"The situation today with horrendous lawsuits and the awardings of enormous amounts of money has everybody running scared. Until society changes the system, we're going to be confronted [by these concerns.]"

> "The situation today with horrendous lawsuits and the awardings of enormous amounts of money has everybody running scared. Until society changes the system, we're going to be victimized by these outcomes."
> —Joseph Fenner, vice president for financial affairs

Neville said that Saferides is not yet functioning this year. "We want to have it [Saferides] and we believe in it, but we haven't been able to resolve the liability end of it. We have the vans available and we'd like to work it out some way and get it started."

Colleges face lawsuits

Statistics kept by the National Association of College and University Attorneys (NACUA) show that between 1946 and 1956, about 150 lawsuit cases concerning higher education were reported, an average of 15 cases per year.

V.U. not totally divested

By DANTE J. SCALA

At a meeting with the Anti-Apartheid Coalition prior to Fall Break, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, stated that the University still holds investments of about $550,000 in seven companies that do business in South Africa.

This statement contradicted his previous announcement reported in the Villanovan, that he thought the University was completely divested. Driscoll explained that his previous announcement was correct, to the best of his knowledge at the time. Between that time and the meeting with the coalition, he received different information.

When asked about Driscoll's change of statement, Mike McGinnis, a coordinator of the Anti-Apartheid Coalition, commented, "We are at a loss to explain how there could be such confusion on a matter of such great importance.

"We do question why the University seems reluctant to make an official statement regarding our financial ties to apartheid. Whatever position the University adopts, we should hope that such would be clearly stated to the Villanova community," he continued.

However, Dr. John F. Stehle of the economics department stated in a recent issue that it is difficult for investors to know exactly where their money is because of "all the changes in the marketplace."

Driscoll said that the issue of divestment may be on the agenda of the Board of Trustees meeting, which was held yesterday. He stated in a later interview that he would be discussing the issue in a conference with the Board of Trustees' Investment Committee prior to the board's meeting.

According to a source within the Anti-Apartheid Coalition, Driscoll stated that the University has investments in Avery International, Exxon, Proctor and Gamble, Rolex, Raytheon, Union Carbide and Westinghouse. Driscoll also reportedly stated that all seven companies are in accord with the Sullivan Principles.

However, a source within the coalition found that two of the seven companies had no connections with South Africa. When Rolex and Proctor and Gamble were contacted, sources from the companies stated that neither company had ties with South Africa. The five other companies do follow the Sullivan principles.

Driscoll commented that the University's investments in companies doing business in South Africa are minimal. However, these investments may have significance in a morally symbolic sense, he explained.

Finally, he said that there are two prevailing opinions concerning divestment. One view is to pull out totally. Another stance is to stay and try to have a positive impact, such as through companies following the Sullivan Principles. Driscoll stated that it is unclear as to which should be followed.

Assembly reviews grading

By JOHANNE C. SHARP

Issues such as a new grading system and the academic calendar were discussed at the second Student Government-sponsored student assembly held on Oct. 8. Although student attendance was low, Joe Allman, Student Government president, said he remains positive and hopes to reach more students by visiting resident halls.

Allman explained a new grading system that would include minuses as well as pluses. Under this system proposed by the Academic Policy Committee of the University Senate, an A grade would have the value of 4.0 quality points and an A- grade would be worth 3.67 quality points. A grade of a B+ according to the proposed system would be worth 3.3 quality points in comparison to 3.5 points under the current system.

Students at the assembly overwhelmingly opposed this proposed grading system and questioned how this system would be implemented. Allman said Student Government is looking into the possible implications of the proposed grading system.

In addition, discussion of the academic calendar conflict brought other issues such as Fall Break, reading days and the start of the fall semester with respect to Labor Day into debate.

The Student Government proposed calendar for the fall 1987 academic semester includes classes starting before Labor Day, a full week Fall Break and guaranteed reading days.

Allman also proposed that classes be held on Labor Day instead of being in session the day before Thanksgiving. "The Wednesday before Thanksgiving should be a travel day, but then we would have to have classes on Labor Day.

"We want guaranteed reading days no matter what. Snow days should be separate," said Allman.

Other issues discussed at the assembly include the left turn

Neighbors seek to close bar

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

The District Attorney of Delaware County, on behalf of Radnor Township, is currently preparing to take legal measures to close down Smokey Joe's bar as a public nuisance.

Residents of Louella Court in Radnor Township have voiced complaints of late-night noise, food and beer bottles left on the residents' property, and the use of the neighboring streets and lawns for bathroom facilities.

After listening to the complaints of the 13 neighbors present at a forum on Oct. 14, called specifically for the purpose of discussing the Smokey Joe's issue, the Board of Commissioners of Radnor Township unanimously authorized the upstart of proceedings against the establishment.

To successfully initiate the proceedings against Smokey Joe's, the residents must give a written affidavit under oath and be willing to testify in court.

In response to the allegations against the bar, Smokey Joe's Pat Ryan, son of owner John Ryan, was quoted in the Suburban as saying, "I don't know what else they want us to do.

"Anytime anyone complains, we don't find anyone [causing trouble] up there. Radnor [police] has a man on duty; we have one [police officer] off-duty. When complaints come in, the police say there's nobody there. We have a license to do business until 2 a.m. in a commercial district. It's costing us extra money each week to help the neighbors."

"I continually walk over to Louella Court and crickets are all I hear. We'll go talk to the police," he said.

Senate to discuss Fall Break today

By SUSAN CORCORAN

At today's University Senate meeting, the Senate will discuss the proposal to be made by Student Government President Joe Allman for a Fall Break next year.

Allman said that he will propose a full week break during the fall semester, even if it requires classes to begin before Labor Day. He said that he feels that students will not mind returning to school before Labor Day if it means that they will get a week-long vacation after midterms.

Paul Flanagan, University College senator, stated that after much research, the student government feels that this proposal will be more favorable to the students than the proposal in which the week-long fall break is dropped.

However, Phillip Maurone, chairman of the University Senate, said that many students cannot return to Villanova before the holiday because of summer jobs. Maurone feels that students and teachers alike need the break and he expects that the point will be well-argued. He said that he hopes that the Fall Break debate will not pit the students against more than two unrelated persons to share a single household. The appellees claimed that the code entrenched upon the students' rights to privacy and association.

In the article "Minority Enrollment Up" (Oct. 10 issue), it was incorrectly reported that the Academic Advancement Program (AAP) is a minority program. The Program is open to any Pennsylvania resident who meets the economic and academic criteria. Currently, between 35 and 40 percent of the student population enrolled in the Program is non-minority.

Codes' legality probed

The Supreme Court upheld the village ordinance. Although the Court admitted the rights of privacy and association — Justice Douglas, who voiced the court's final opinion, was a champion of free association and privacy — the environmental considerations of a family-oriented neighborhood prevailed. Douglas was also one of the prime environmentalists of his time, said Hyson.

The general consensus among the law profession is that Douglas' argument was "not a well-reasoned opinion," said Hyson. "He gave very brief attention to these very important values [of privacy and association]. The environmental values overruled the others." The ruling, decreed on April 1, 1974, is commonly known as "Douglas' April Fool's joke," said Hyson.

Nevertheless, the U.S. Supreme Court ruling was made, and it is very difficult to get the Supreme Court of the United States to reverse a decision, explained Hyson.

The Student Government committee has been investigating several New York state court cases that have ruled against the local zoning ordinances in favor of the rights of the citizens who chose to live together despite a lack of familial ties.

Hyson explained that a state supreme court may decide that although the federal constitutional rights of association and privacy are not violated by an ordinance, the state constitutional rights of association and privacy are violated.

The Pennsylvania courts, however, have as yet refused to consent that the state constitution gives individuals any more rights of association and privacy than the federal constitution as interpreted in the Belle Terre v. Boraas ruling.

In New York and New Jersey, the courts have allowed for rights of association, "But it doesn't help you a whole lot in Pennsylvania," said Hyson.

The question of where this leaves students who wish to live in groups larger than two or three for financial or social purposes remains.

According to Hyson, one must look at the definition of family given by each local ordinance. Some municipalities define a family as simply "a single housekeeping unit," a group sharing basic expenses of living. Under such a definition, groups of students could live together.

There is not considerable hope for this possibility, according to Hyson, because since the Belle Terre case, many townships, including those surrounding Villanova University, have changed their ordinances to manipulate the definition of a family to exclude groups of unrelated persons.

Another aspect of the housing laws which is being investigated in order to find its benefit for Villanova students is a concept called the "fair share" principle. It requires local political units to plan for and provide land-use regulations which meet the legitimate needs of all categories of people who may desire to live within its boundaries.

The "fair share" principle was adopted by the Pennsylvania state courts in 1975 in the case of Township of Willistown v. Chesterdale Farms, Inc. and was used again for the individual's benefit in Surrick v. the Township of Upper Providence.

Hyson said, however, that it "doesn't really help students. It is a very ambiguous statement." He explained that as long as

The Rev. Francis A. Farraci, O.S.A.

Radnor Township, for instance, has a fair share of land zoned for apartment housing, then they can have the remainder zoned for single family homes.

Student Government plans to continue exploring the laws in order to alleviate the housing problems for Villanova students. In addition, Student Government is involved in talks with Radnor Township, which has been described as very cooperative, in an effort to reach a compromise situation.

Despite the rigidity of the housing codes, Hyson stated, "The reality is if no one complains, everything is fine."

Hyson relayed a "practical message" to students who have more than the maximum number of unrelated persons in one household, "If you are living there in violation of the ordinance, at least be good neighbors."

the faculty.

If no agreement can be reached, an alternate motion will be suggested by Dr. Roger Van Allen, faculty senator and Faculty Council chairman.

Another motion to be discussed concerns the 1987-88 budget. The Senate Committee has yet to see this budget. Alvin A. Clay, dean of the college of commerce and finance, will announce to the Senate that one meeting of the budget committee has met so far, and that the proposals for the fiscal budget have yet to be drawn up.

A meeting in mid-November should be called to discuss the 1987-88 budget in full detail. Maurone said that the Senate probably will first look at the budget itself before discussing the specific proposals.

[redacted] accredited

By ELIA DITADDEO

Villanova University is an institution accredited by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, Dr. Charles Cherry, associate vice president for Academic Affairs, said this week.

Accreditation is important for a college or university. Cherry stated that the loss of a school's accreditation may mean the subsequent loss of federal aid to that school. This would mean the loss of federally funded loans, such as the Guaranteed Student Loan, for students.

By meeting the standards set by the accrediting board, said Cherry, a program is able to receive its seal of accreditation.

All of the undergraduate programs at Villanova are accredited programs. The various courses of study of the graduate program are approved by the Department of Public Instruction of the State of Pennsylvania. In addition to the general accreditation, specific programs may receive accreditation from their respective organizations.

According to the Villanova University Bulletin for undergraduate full-time studies, for instance, "All degree programs in the College of Commerce and Finance are accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB)." Only four colleges in this area have met the high standards set by the AACSB. They are Villanova, the University of Pennsylvania, Temple and Drexel.

Political races

"The support for Arlen Specter by the college students has been tremendous," said Cypher, "and this race is especially exciting on campus because, for most students, this is their first chance to vote and be active in a political campaign."

Pollsters say that all of the major races in Pennsylvania are still up for grabs. Democrat Bob Casey and Republican William Scranton III are tied in the polls, with political observers saying that Casey's momentum is on the upswing. Some say that Scranton's admitted use of drugs in the '70s and his poor attendance record as lieutenant governor seem to have taken away the Scranton campaign's impetus.

Incumbent Republican Arlen Specter has a slight edge over Bob Edgar in the senatorial race, but the race will be decided Tuesday by the voters image of Specter. Specter has campaigned as an independent thinker, a moderate Republican and a man in touch with the needs of his state.

Bob Edgar has sought to portray Specter as "the two Arlen Specters," because Specter has sometimes voted one way on an issue and then later voted the other way on the same issue. Edgar also says that Specter is "a Reagan yes-man who can't take any heat from the White House."

HANK HALTER

The Order of Omega is proud to name Hank Halter as this week's Greek of the Week. A senior accounting major from Melbourne, Fla., Hank is extraordinarily involved in the Greek community and many other activities and well deserves this honor.

An active member of the Zeta Psi Fraternity, Hank has served as historian, assistant treasurer and currently as corresponding secretary. In addition, he serves the entire Greek community as this year's president of Order of Omega and last year's treasurer.

While he isn't studying or working for the Greek community, Hank can be found at the Villanovan office, where he is finishing off a second term as a fantastic managing editor. Under hank, the advertising income of the paper has tripled. He also contributes to the Villanova community through the Special Olympics program, which will be held this weekend. Last year he was named as Finance Chairman and this year he is Vice Chairman.

On top of all his extracurricular involvements, Hank has done extremely well academically. He is a member of the Beta Gamma Sigma National Honor Society, the Phi Kappa Phi Interdisciplinary Honor Society, and the Gamma Phi Honor Society. He has won a Zeta Psi educational scholarship for every year of his undergraduate education and is a member of the Accounting Society. Hank also interned last semester at Coopers & Lybrand in Philadelphia.

Although Hank has been on the Dean's List every semester, his studies have not entirely taken up his time, for he can often be seen at his favorite bar, the Oasis.

The Order of Omega would like to congratulate Hank on this week's honor and on his four consecutive [illegible]

Political activism [illegible]rce

By DANTE J. SCALA

While political fervor mounts with the approach of the November national elections, student political leaders and political science professors interviewed this week agreed that Villanova students are not very involved politically, nor do they show a great deal of political activism.

This lack of involvement has been indicated by recent Student Government elections. Only 197 of the 1,600 freshmen voted in the recent class representative elections; also, only about 2 percent of eligible voters voted in Student Government's presidential elections in April.

Various reasons were given for students' political apathy. Joe Allman and Mike McGinnis, president and vice president of the Student Government respectively, cited lack of awareness and a feeling of helplessness among students as causes.

McGinnis stated that students being "aware of the world around them" is an important issue, and that students need to "expand their horizons." He said that one possible way of doing this is to create a core requirement of social and "peace and justice" issues for all students "to allow students to realize that he or she is part of the global community, and that as a member of the community, particularly a Christian member, he or she has a special obligation to be concerned about their fellow brothers and sisters in the world."

McGinnis feels that the administration and faculty "share the responsibility of educating the Villanova community about the world around them." He stated that the University has made progress toward this goal by the creation of the Center for Peace and Justice Education. Also, students can now apply for University grants to do social concern programs. However, he thinks that the University should make more of a commitment to direct funds towards "projects of social concern," especially within Student Activities.

He concluded, "There's always progress to be made. The bottom line is that it comes down to the individual. At Villanova, ignorance is a choice."

Allman added, "Students and people in society in general are not informed of the issues, and don't have a sense of empowerment, [they don't realize] that they can make a difference." He stated that a cause of student apathy is that, "Students don't think their voice matters."

Allman continued, "So often, decisions are made without the consultation of the majority of Villanova community members. We [the Student Government] have a responsibility to go to the students, inform them, and get feedback. We have a vision that if we can inform the students of the issues, and they are open to us, then they will become more concerned and naturally, more involved in the issues of the University."

Professor Cheryl Wilf, who teaches introductory courses in political science, said that there is no fervor for political involvement among her student. She said that they are "concerned," and take strong positions on certain issues, but they are not "troubled" or activists, and apathy exists among them. Wilf cited poor voter turnout as an exam,ple. Wilf said that students are concerned about social issues, the nuclear threat, "guns versus butter" issues, high military spending and cuts in social programs. However, their personal concern is not being turned into personal activism.

Sean Carroll, leader of the Political Union, also sees apathy among the students. Only about

Meal card system studied

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER

The Villanova meal plan has been a major issue to both students and administration over the years. Although it has often been debated there have been no changes made to it.

According to J. Les Gies, director of Food Services, Villanova has had the same meal plan "forever." This year one of the Student Government sub-committees hopes to begin an investigation to prompt change.

Students, who are presently on a uniform meal plan, wait to enter the Dougherty Hall cafeteria.

At present, John Floyd, secretary of the department of internal affairs for Student Government, and Terise Fusco, assistant secretary of the department of affairs for Student Government and a sophomore representative, have been heading an investigative committee which has been researching Villanova's meal plan as well as others since the summer. According to Fusco, the committee is researching all aspects of the meal plan.

The committee is investigating what options are open to Villanova if and when a change does occur, by seeking what other colleges and universities similar to Villanova have. Some of these options

Temple ends three-week strike

After a three-week strike Temple University faculty members and students resumed classes this week. The strike, the first in the university's history, represented the proposals of 1,110 faculty members, librarians and other academic professionals requesting a pay-rate increase.

After long deliberations, a tentative contract for a 9 percent salary increase was agreed upon. Many faculty members were not completely happy with the agreement but Phillip Yanella, strike organizer, believes it would be approved by the union members, who will vote on the contract in mid-November.

Many students were relieved by the ending of the strike and the continuing of classes. It was feared that the semester would be cancelled, something that the administration had threatened if the strike continued.

College offers unlimited meals

The University of Maine recently implemented a new trial meal plan where a student with a 21-meal per week plan can use the dining facilities up to 50 times a week.

"The real reason we did this was if we could attract students with additional services we could keep them happy and on campus," said H. Ross Moriarity, director of Residence Life at the University of Maine.

Unlimited dining has been well-received among students and many students who "like to have coffee before their 8 a.m. class and then be able to have a full breakfast after it."

During the trial period, "There was a 10 percent increase per day in the number of students. But the amount of food [consumed] didn't increase. They came mostly to snack between meals. It didn't necessarily increase the cooks' production," said Moriarty.

Villanova neighbors voice complaints

By NATALIE McKENNA

Villanova Student Government invited representatives from several campus groups, members of the administration and residents of Radnor and Lower Merion Townships to a forum on Oct. 13 in the Villanova Room in an effort to improve student and community relations.

The Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, moderated the forum. Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, and Eugene J. Ruane, director of Public Relations for the University, were available to answer questions asked by the public.

Philip Brach, secretary of Student Government's department of external affairs, opened the forum, addressing the members of neighboring communities with appreciation for their interest and a hope that they would share their concerns and complaints during the session. He proposed that this meeting be a time for "open communication between the community and students."

Members of the community living near south campus asked about the University's plans to build more residence halls in the area. Stack responded that the University would like to build residence halls on south campus, but would need the approval of both the Board of Trustees and the township.

Student Government recently sponsored a forum for local residents to air their complaints about Villanova.

Residents of the area surrounding south campus complained of the loud music during tailgating on Saturday mornings. Neville replied that "there must be some give and take." Other residents living near Rosemont College complained of vandalism, noise and speeding in residential areas.

One resident who owned property near Kelly's complained of broken bottles and litter in the PennDot, and George and I are documenting the accidents at that intersection over the past three years. We found so far that most of the accidents involved that left-turn onto Ithan Avenue," Allman said. They plan to present their findings to PennDot.

"We can't wait for other tragedies. This issue is so urgent. People's lives are at stake," he said.

According to Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, in order to get a left-turn arrow placed at the intersection "a formalistic approach must be followed." The township must first send a request to PennDot. Once PennDot receives the letter they begin an engineering study in which "people go out and actually count the traffic," PennDot's Wursta said.

Wursta said that the intersection must meet several criteria. The product of the left-turn volume of traffic and the opposing through volume of traffic must equal or exceed a certain conflict volume. PennDot also takes into account the accident records for the intersection, the types of vehicles travelling through the intersection as well as the adjacent traffic signals.

If the left-turn arrow is approved, PennDot revises the township's permit. "The township makes and pays for the change," Wursta said.

Neville also asked the township to investigate improvements for pedestrian safety at the Ithan Avenue underpass near County Line Road.

Last March, the staff traffic committee recommended that a sidewalk, complete with curb and fencing, be installed on the west side of the Ithan Avenue underpass. They also recommended extending the sidewalk to the existing power plant driveway and to the existing sidewalk on the south side of the underpass.

Many people believe that the intersection of Ithan and Lancaster Avenues needs a left-hand turn arrow.

This month, seven months after the original recommendations, the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners voted for and approved the measure.

When asked why it took so long to get the measures approved by the Board of Commissioners, Hubley said, "I don't know. I didn't really know what you were supposed to do [after the recommendations were made]. If I had known about the problem sooner I would have included it with Villanova's field house project."

With the Board of Commissioners' approval, Hubley plans to contact an engineering firm to begin planning the changes. "At the same time, we will attempt to find out who owns the property. We have to give the owner an adequate time [60 days] to make the changes," Hubley said. If the changes are not made within that time, the township will make the changes and charge them to the owner.

Hubley explained that putting a sidewalk in the underpass will cost more than the usual $6 per square foot because the concrete will have to be wheeled in. A concrete truck will not fit under the underpass, he said.

reorganized

By NOEL E. FALCO

This year Saferides will be officially recognized as a campus organization under Student Activities, Roe Brennan, vice president of Saferides, said this week. The group reorganized last semester and plans to limit the student participation in order to create a more efficient organization.

Saferides is a student-run organization that provides rides for students who have been drinking and are not in condition to drive. The organization had a problem with a lack of money and serious student support — not only did the loss of one member of a six-member team cripple the operation, but Villanova students often abused Saferides, using it as a "taxicab service," said Brennan.

Saferides was created three semesters ago at Villanova through the work of Gary Degan, now graduated, and Mark Greene, a senior, and included a year of research before it could be installed under Residence Life, said Brennan. At that time, Saferides had no executive board, but instead a steering committee of five students. According to Brennan, a lack of financial backing and of serious student support often crippled the operation.

This year Saferides has not only created a backup team on call, but also intends to limit its size to 75 members who must enter an application process and pass an interview.

Financially, the alumni donation has helped, said Brennan. They have also established a policy of leasing, rather than renting, the team vans in order to cut costs.

Student opinion on Saferides seems to uphold the value of the organization.

John Delfini, a junior, said, "It's a good idea, because you can go out drinking and not have to worry about driving, but there could be problems with students abusing it."

Freshman Rich Shinn said, "Saferides is a good idea, but it should get a little more funding. From what I hear, it's really not supported and it should be supported because it saves a lot of lives."

Sheila Dunleavy, also a freshman, commented, "It's a really good program to have because there are so many times that you're out with people who are too drunk to drive, or you are, and the fact that it's confidential would make me want to use it."

Sodomy law discussed

By LYNN PERDEK

"Man's most valued right is the right to be left alone," stated Richard N. Lipow, Esq., guest speaker during a presentation by the Villanova Political Union on Oct. 16. Lipow's lecture opposed the recent Supreme Court decision upholding an anti-sodomy statute in Georgia.

The Georgia sodomy law states that a person commits sodomy when he performs any unusual anal or oral sexual act. The law further states that the penalty for one who is convicted of sodomy is imprisonment for up to 20 years.

The Georgia sodomy case went to court in the case of Bowers v. Hartwick. Hartwick failed to pay his parking tickets and was called to trial. When he did not appear for his court date, the judge ordered a bench warrant.

The police officer assigned to find Hartwick went to Hartwick's home and found him involved with his homosexual lover. He was arrested and convicted of sodomy in the lower courts. The case then went to the United States Supreme Court to determine whether this statute was unconstitutional.

Hartwick's case was argued by Lawrence Tribe, an authority on constitutional law. The decision, however, went five votes to four upholding that the statute is constitutional. Justice White, who wrote the decision, had been supporting the other side of the issue only one week before the hearing, yet he cast the deciding vote against Hartwick.

Lipow noted that this decision means that homosexuals have no rights in the courts. He claimed that had this case involved an incident with a heterosexual couple, it would never have reached the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court accepted this case in order to make a statement. Lipow's lecture conveyed the idea that this decision is an "invasion of privacy and a violation of rights."

Lipow stressed that we are a heterogeneous society. The people are not similar and have different views and values. He posed the question that if the state tells the people that they must not do anything unusual, who is to say what is usual behavior? It was questioned further that if the state can tell an individual what to do in his own home, where will that lead?

In answering a student who asked if there is any chance of this decision being overturned, Lipow stated that with all the Supreme Court appointments during Reagan's term, the shift in the Supreme Court has been to conservatism, and that these justices serve in life tenures.

Lipow referred to this decision as being "a step backwards." He claimed that the situation "is analogous to the Jews in Germany. Our privacy is being limited and the ability of minorities and any individuals who do not share the same values to speak out has been limited."

The courts did not want to hear Hartwick's case because of sodomy, but because of his sexual preference, Lipow claimed. "Most people have a terrible view of homosexuality and therefore homosexuals are a feared people." Lipow stated that certain rights are personal and that we as human beings have certain fundamental rights.

Meal system studied

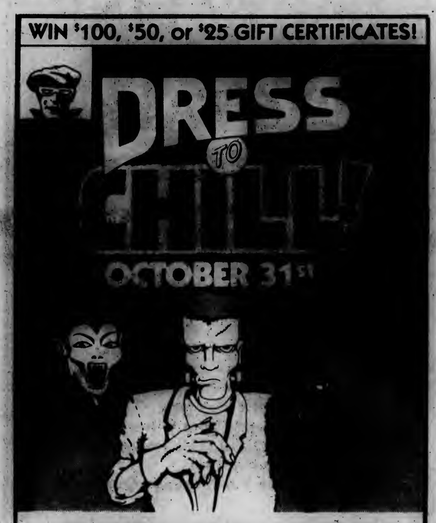
include: an option for students to have 15 meals per week instead of the present 20 meals per week, an option for students to eat meals only during the week and not on the weekend, an option for students to eat only a certain number of meals per day or per week, and an option for students to eat on campus if they live off campus.

According to Gies and Fusco, if any changes occur there will most likely be a change in the way students receive their food and the amount of food they can eat. Gies feels that if students get to eat only one or two meals a day they will make up for the others that they do not go to by eating more at the ones that they do attend. Therefore the students are actually getting the same amount of food as they would on a lesser meal plan.

Fusco says that the committee is investigating whether the present meal plan is profitable and if it is being used to alleviate losses in other departments. Fusco says that they are also investigating whether a change would bring quality changes and financial changes. For example, would students pay more or less. Fusco also believes that a change in the meal plan is almost inevitable due to the building of new dorms on south campus within the next five years.

Presently, Villanova has new computer meal card system machines that are capable of handling different meal plans when needed as well as the present one.

Recently many students had to have their meal card pictures retaken because a roll of film that was sent to the Vali-Dine System in Victor, N.Y., where the cards are processed, was inadvertently exposed.



When asked this week, many students felt the need for a new meal plan, at least a meal plan with options. Most students said that they did not eat all 20 meals per week, either because they were gone for the weekend, because they had a class, or because they did not feel like going.

One student was quoted as saying, "Eating at Villanova's dining halls is ridiculous, the food is mediocre, and the lines are so long, so why bother going? Luckily there are places that deliver pizza."

Liability insurance's impact

In recent years, nearly every issue of the weekly Chronicle of Higher Education reports two or three legal cases involving universities.

When asked whether the number of lawsuits has increased at Villanova within the past few years, Fenner stated, "It's not an increase; it's just the normal cases that come up. We still have a few cases here and there. One lawsuit from several years ago resulting from an accident is still open."

He said that Villanova has encountered lawsuits from students, faculty and staff, "but nothing outside of the ordinary course of business."

Unlike corporations, which tend to have assets tied up in buildings and equipment, colleges and universities usually have a major portion of their assets in endowments. Because the endowments are easily converted into cash, universities have a greater potential than some other corporations to pay out settlements. This becomes a concern sometimes, because under the current legal system, the defendant most able to pay, even if only partially liable, is often forced to pay the entire settlement.

Fenner said that he did not see Villanova as particularly vulnerable to lawsuits because, "Villanova is not heavily endowed." He continued, "However, in society today, you sue anybody and everybody, and you're looking for the person with the deepest pocket, that's the danger."

Fenner pointed out that the potential risks of lawsuits that a university faces are different from those that a manufacturing corporation does. "Unlike manufacturing corporations, we don't have to worry about product liability or suits from workers exposed to hazardous conditions."

Universities, however, can face other types of lawsuits. With the tightening of the academic job market in the 1980s, discrimination suits filed by faculty members who do not make tenure have become more common. Fenner said that Villanova has had "one or two cases about faculty tenure," but that, "Villanova has always proven correct in these cases," and further that, "these types of cases are not really significant in terms of monetary awards."

Fenner said he thought it would be unlikely that, in the future, the University would curtail its study abroad programs because of lawsuit worries; that it would be "more likely that a study abroad program would be cut back because of terrorists."

Fenner explained, "If a student abroad was killed, it is possible that the student's parents would sue the University, but it would more than likely be a frivolous case and nothing would come out of it. Probably the University wouldn't be at fault. However, defending it could cost the University an enormous amount in legal fees."

area. "Think of our homes as if they were yours — would you want someone to vandalize your home in such a way?" questioned one concerned resident.

"This forum is a great idea ... it will create a positive attitude," said one resident who attended the meeting. Rosemary Brennan, junior class representative, stated, "The neighbors are making us aware of how they feel ... there has to be a compromise between students and neighbors; it's a two way street."

Political activism

20 to 25 people came to each of the first two Political Union meetings. He said, "Most [students] won't take the initiative to be involved." He continued, "They're unimaginative politically. They don't think for themselves [politically]. They are not impassioned believers in anything."

He further stated that those who are politically involved are "fashionably political. [Most] follow the popular issues. They won't come out and look for issues, they will wait for issues to come to them." He cited that while a Political Union meeting on South Africa drew 60 people, a meeting about repression in South Korea only drew 20. All in all, he stated that student attitudes are "very conservative, when it's there."

He concluded, "Students have given up on idealism that was common in the late '60s and early '70s because they perceive it as a failure." For instance, the Political Union was then the largest group on campus, and now it is one of the smallest.

Dr. Priscilla Hopkirk, chairman of the political science department, agreed that, "Students aren't as easily aroused to either publicly support or oppose public policies" as they once were. She commented that this is true at most colleges, and reflects the political temperament of the nation. She thought that probably most are moderate or conservative, which reflects their family background and the more conservative views of the nation.

On student voting, she stated that it is "well-known that young people vote less frequently than those in their middle years."

Housing laws unfair

The housing laws of the local townships which limit the number of persons living in one household are discriminatory and unfair. By allowing only two or three students to live together, they are punishing the entire student population for the actions of a few of its members. Furthermore, it is absurd to expect that students can afford to live with only one other person.

Authorities from Radnor, Lower Merion, Upper Merion and Haverford townships all stated recently that the laws were specifically formulated because of problems with students living together. "Commotion, partying and a general ruckus" are the main problems one township representative cites. Exactly how often and how extreme are these general ruckuses? Of course, students will have parties and create noise sometimes; however, these incidents are much more the exception than the rule. As one resident stated at the recent forum with Villanova's neighbors, "It's only 1 percent of the V.U. students who are causing the problems that ruin it for the other 99 percent."

These housing laws are discriminatory because they treat all students as guilty before the fact. They make that automatic assumption that students will be rowdy and disrespectful and then make sure that students have no chance to exhibit such behavior.

The other blatantly unfair aspect of these laws is based on simple economics. Most students cannot finance an apartment with only one or two roommates. We are in school the majority of the time, so income is limited to part-time jobs. Money is an essential consideration; local apartment and house owners cannot reasonably expect that two undergraduates will be able to split the high cost of rent fees.

These housing laws have not yet been proved unconstitutional, and maybe they never will be. But a good look at them shows that, through their overgeneralizing about all students and their unrealistic economic notions, they are inherently disrespectful of rights.

Save Smokey Joe's

Neighbors of Smokey Joe's in Wayne are currently taking steps to have the restaurant/bar declared a public nuisance and closed down. If the situation is as bad as they say, certainly something must be done. However, authorities should closely examine all aspects of this case before they act, because the bar may not be the public nuisance these neighbors claim.

Angry residents of Louella Court told the Radnor Board of Commissioners Oct. 14 that they have "had as much as they can take" of the trouble from the bar. They cited problems such as the use of public streets as bathrooms, discarded litter in yards, noise, and the parking of the bar's patrons on residential streets. They are now in the process of giving signed statements to the Delaware County district attorney so that he can bring suit against Smokey Joe's.

However the owner's son, Pat Ryan, told Phil Brach, the secretary of external affairs for Villanova's Student Government, that they have received only 14 official complaints, 10 of which are from the same person. Ryan also told Brach that the police have investigated these complaints and stated that some were "unfounded."

Moreover, the owner and his son have taken steps to make sure that Smokey Joe's is not a public nuisance. They have an off-duty policeman working there all night every night. They clean up the parking lot and immediate vicinity of trash every night. And Ryan says that those involved in the incidents mentioned were not Villanova students.

Villanova students should be thankful to Smokey Joe's owner and his son for their support. They should also make sure that they continue to respect the neighbors' rights, and discourage others from such behavior. And the district attorney should thoroughly investigate just how Smokey Joe's is a "public nuisance" before he considers the extreme action of closing it.

Letters to the Editor

Academic freedom is needed

To the Editor:

I read with dismay the letter to the editor by Miriam McCue in the Oct. 3 issue of the Villanovan. In her criticism of Fr. Charles Curran, a theologian at Catholic University, McCue has displayed a regrettable misunderstanding of the meaning of intellectual honesty, its role in the academic mission of a university, and a university's profound reliance upon conditions of academic freedom.

Intellectual honesty is the invitation to examine issues and differences under the protection of reason; it embodies the imperative for reasoned dialogue.

The Catholic Church is a living institution, sustained in its vitality by the creative tensions between faith and reason. Thus the men and women who are Catholic educators have the professional responsibility to examine tradition in the light of contemporary experience, no less than to judge experience by tradition. This process, which reflects the highest ideals of the Platonic dialectic and the Thomist conception of the compatibility between faith and reason, constitutes the first principle of every Catholic university's mission in education, research, and scholarship.

Curran's research has conformed scrupulously to the guidelines for dissent established by the Vatican II Council. The question of papal infallibility has not been raised — neither within Curran's scholarship, nor by the Vatican in its critique of his scholarly publications. Furthermore, given that Curran has observed the highest standards of academic scholarship, the preferred course would be to continue dialogue.

Thus the importance of academic freedom becomes clear. Academic freedom is the foundation upon which alone the university's academic mission can be attained, upon which alone intellectual honesty can be secured for educators, students, institutions, and the Catholic tradition alike. Anything less than free and open dialogue under conditions of academic freedom would entail a rejection of the authority of reason, not for any authoritative doctrines of faith, but for the authoritarian imposition of will.

I have read Prof. Rodger Van Allen's published remarks regarding Curran, and I must take exception to McCue when she characterizes him as "so stridently supporting the likes of Curran." While he was president of the Villanova Chapter of the American Association of University Professors, Dr. Van Allen did indeed support "the likes of Curran," if by this is meant other persons who have been denied academic freedom in their professional activities. Van Allen has indeed defended academic freedom, but on no occasion has he appeared "strident"; a mere assertion to the contrary is to ignore both the texts and the facts.

Although it is reminiscent of McCarthyism when McCue suggests that "maybe parents should find out what Van Allen is teaching in his class," and although I have not spoken with Van Allen about the matter, my guess is that he would welcome McCue, or any parents, to visit his courses. I am certain that they would receive [illegible] not only in [illegible] but as well.

Treat minorities like the rest of us

By CHRISTINE A. WNUK

I am sickened to think that had I been born black I would have been encouraged to come here by letters and phone calls, treated to visits to the school, and competed for a scholarship that is awarded to one out of every 20 students versus one that is given to roughly one out of every 100 students.

I have just finished reading the Villanovan's article on minority recruitment Oct. 10 and I am livid.

I, like the students mentioned in the article, am a "highly qualified" student attending Villanova University. I graduated first in my high school class of over 200 and distinguished myself in many extra-curricular activities.

I, however, was not fortunate enough to be considered a minority, at least in the terms defined by the office of admissions. I therefore had to compete with the other 1,900 incoming freshmen for one of 20 presidential scholarships offered by the University. Since I was not a recipient of either scholarship or grant from the school, my parents footed the entire bill.

After nearly two years at Villanova, my parents have informed me that our financial resources are exhausted and after the spring semester, I can look forward to entering the job market, lacking a college degree, and trying my best to afford night classes at a Penn State branch near my home.

I feel I had the same disadvantages entering Villanova as did any minority student. I did not have the luxury of attending a private high school, as did many of my friends. And, since neither of my parents attended college, I had no one to turn to when making important decisions about my post-secondary education.

When I began applying to schools, I had no knowledge of Villanova. I had only the "initiative" to find out. I talked to my guidance counselor, wrote a few letters, and discovered that Villanova was a highly respected academic institution.

I am sickened to think that had I been born black I would have been encouraged to come here by letters and phone calls, treated to visits to the school, and competed for a scholarship that is awarded to one out of every 20 students versus one that is given to roughly one out of every 100 students.

Villanova appears to be contradicting itself by saying that on one hand minority students have as much aptitude as the rest of the student body and yet refusing to allow them to compete for the 20 Presidential Scholarships like the rest of us.

Notice the difference in eligibility requirements. According to the Villanova University Bulletin 1985-1986, for the Presidential Scholarships:

"The University Selection Committee will invite the most promising candidates from all students who meet the minimum requirements of a combined SAT score of at least 1,200 and a high school rank in the top 5 percent to apply for the scholarship. Scholars are chosen competitively on the basis of academic promise, demonstrated leadership, and communication skills"

For the Minority Scholarships:

"Eligibility is limited to students who are: U.S. citizens, minority (Asian, Black, Hispanic, Native Americans); minimum combined SAT scores of 1,200 preferred; excellent high school record and class ranking; entering their freshmen year."

Minority students, do you realize the University is acting condescendingly by creating a scholarship that denies you the opportunity to have your skills judged by the same criterion as everyone else's?

I realize that every qualified student deserves a chance to go here, regardless of race, but that statement applies to me, too. Villanova, in failing to recognize the needs of ordinary, stereotypical, white students like me, has served to sour my opinion of an institution founded on "truth and justice."

Democrats lead the way for social progress

By FRED VALENTE

What the Democrats must do is have enough guts to make drastic cuts in the ludicrous military budget, and begin to channel that money where it is really needed: into social programs, job programs, repariing our damaged infrastructure, etc.

Quote of Note

"I'll take a drug test as soon as my opponent takes an IQ test."

Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C.

Someone once asked Franklin Roosevelt why it was that the Republicans always had a uniformity of opinion on the issues while the Democrats were constantly arguing and going off in different directions. Roosevelt answered by saying: "There are many ways of moving forward, but only one way of standing still."

Why should college students vote Democrat? An interesting question. Most of the students today seem to be, as Pink Floyd once put it, "comfortably numb." There is a lack of a distinct, gut-wrenching issue nowadays. There is no Vietnam war or civil rights movement to get people up in arms. But, to argue the first question, for most of this century, it has been the Democratic Party that has been at the forefront of the social progress in this nation. The New Deal, Great Society, Peace Corps, Social Security, Medicare, and civil rights all have come from Democratic administrations.

But to use more recent examples, the Republicans have cut back loans to higher education by close to 50 percent in the last five years. It has conducted a confrontational foreign policy that hangs onto outdated Cold War mentalities. It has placed extremist judges on the federal bench (including Mr. Rehnquist), who totally ignore the progress that has been made in minority, and Constitutional rights. It has presided over the largest peacetime deficit build-up in our nation's history, and has systematically contributed to the 12 percent rise in the poverty rate.

Enough enough, folks? The Democratic Party has always stood for [illegible] dignity and giving people pride in themselves as individuals. As Eugene McCarthy once said: "The Republican Party is a lot like the lowest forms of plant and animal life. Like moss on a rock, it doesn't have much vitality even at its highest point."

It took 200 years and 39 presidents to run up a deficit of $100 million. It took Ronald Reagan 5 years to double it. The irony is that all of this has been done with the cooperation of the Democrats in Congress. The danger that now looms with Trojan horses such as the Gramm-Rudman Bill, or the line-item veto, is that the situation may get so dire, that Uncle Ronnie will suddenly take it upon himself to wield the axe. Remember Social Security? Sorry, we can't afford it anymore? Remember veteran's benefits? Sorry, no money in the till for that one.

What the Democrats must do is have enough guts to make drastic cuts in the ludicrous military budget, and begin to channel that money where it is really needed: into social programs, job programs, repairing our damaged infrastucture, etc. Reagan speaks a lot of fiscal responsibility, yet he has shown no concerted effort to practice what he preaches. The Democrats have to know when to say, "enough."

What about the Democrats do about the drug problem? For [illegible] of a campaign theme, politicians of both parties have pounced upon the evil specter of drugs in order to collect votes. But what they don't realize and certainly no one can claim that members of Congress really know what is going on outside the banks of the Potomac) is that drugs are here to stay in our society, and there is little if anything that can be done about it.

What both parties must begin to address in the next several years is the fact that maybe it's time we thought about making these substances clean and legal. Liquor is a legal drug, tobacco is a legal drug. When we tried prohibition in the 1920s, the government eventually had sense to realize that the more you take it away, the more people want it. Those who have a drug problem have done so under their own volition. It is now time for the government to say, "Fine, you want to be a pariah to society? We don't care. But, to help repair the damage you'll do, you pay us a tax to use this junk."

Let's get off the drug bandwagon and look at ourselves as a society. What is it in the emptiness and misery of a person's life that causes them to choose this escape? Let's work on repairing that first.

Neville apologizes for Williams' act

To the Editor:

I want to express my apologies and regrets to the students and their parents concerning the Robin Williams concert. The University administration was greatly embarrassed by the sexual content and inuendo voiced by Williams as well as the religious flippancy used.

We thought we had obviated any potential unacceptable content by writing into Williams' contract that the concert was on a Catholic campus and for Parents' Weekend. Williams alleged, after the concert, that his manager never communicated that information to him. In any event the Student Affairs office was greatly embarrassed by the show and now extends our apologies to all who were offended by Williams' humor.

Our hope had been that the humor of the "Mork and Mindy" days that had made Williams famous would have enlivened the evening. Instead we received a Vegas Night Club act. We are now sadder but wiser.

Support women's teams

To the Editor:

Villanova has a great sports program. It is one of the best in the country. This includes not only the men's teams but the women's teams as well.

Last year, the women's basketball team won the Big East Conference Championship and reached the second round of the NCAA tournament. The volleyball team was the 1985 Philadelphia Big Five Champion. The swim team and soccer team were successful also. The track team continues to be one of the best in the nation. Kelly Toole, Debbie Grant, Joanne Kehs and Veronica McIntosh set a world record at the NCAA Indoor Track Championships in 1985. This is, indeed, a great feat, but one I doubt few Villanova students know about.

It is obvious that there are many outstanding women in sports at Villanova. Their tremendous success proves this. Although there are many successes in our women's sports, there are few who see them. Attendance at games and meets is very low. I urge more students to attend them. They are in store for fun and excitement, most of the time free of charge.

There is really no reason why women's sports have such a low spectator turnout. These talented women deserve a lot more. They have continued to succeed without much fan encouragement, which gives great moral support to a team. Just think of what they could accomplish if more people would attend their games.

Shawn McLaughlin
Women's Studies Society
Class of 1988

To the Editor:

Congratulations to the women's track team for capturing top honors in the Big East track meet. This is another example of the excellence of the women's athletic programs at Villanova.

Student encounters some discourteous security guards

To the Editor:

Instead of protecting and providing security for the students of Villanova, they are acting to cause a danger or at least acting as accomplices to it.

In an effort to reduce the number of non-resident students parking on campus via the main lot, Villanova security has adopted the following practice: any car parked over night that does not have a resident parking sticker will receive a fine ($10) and/or removal of that car via Radnor Garage towing.

I recently had a run in with security and found them to be inflexible and discourteous. My story is as follows:

On the night of Sept. 29, after studying in the library with a friend until 11 p.m. we decided to stop off at a local bar for a few drinks. We took my car, and left my friends' car in the main lot. Upon leaving the bar I realized my friend had had a little too much to drink. I felt it would be unwise to let my friend drive home in that condition. I felt it would be a smart thing to do to register the car with security to avoid the possibility of a fine or towing.

The security guard at the main entrance refused to register the car stating it was against procedure and only resident cars could be parked there.

After trying to convince this officer that my friend was too drunk and could not drive safely he called the lieutenant of security in Dougherty Hall and let me talk to him. He told me it is against school procedure and that the car had to be moved or it would be towed. He said to "move it to a residential street or elsewhere."

I explained the danger of moving the car in my friend's condition, and that if I moved it I would have to hitch hike back to my own car. He was inflexible. I then asked the lieutenant on the phone, "What am I supposed to do then, notify Radnor Police that there would be a drunk driver on the road and . . ." The officer on the telephone then hung up on me in mid sentence by slamming down his receiver. Nice guy.

Luckily we were not stopped on the way home. I still however feel the attitudes, reactions and policies of the Villanova security are way out of bounds. Instead of protecting and providing security for the students of Villanova, they are acting to cause a danger or at least acting as accomplices to it.

Villanova Should end tobacco ties

To the Editor:

That a university should allow its personal business to be printed on the stationary of a tobacco company . . . is reprehensible.

The most recent plea for money from Villanova University — dated Sept. 8, 1986 — came to me on stationary of Philip Morris Companies, Inc., one of the nation's largest cigarette manufacturers. The author of the letter, John A. Murphy, identified himself as a "lawyer and executive" for the company, and told of his "full and varied career" within it.

Enough has been said (one had thought) about the harmfulness of cigarette smoking and the grievous destruction of life and health that this addiction has already caused. Every day over 1,000 Americans die from diseases directly related to use of the product produced by Philip Morris and its competitors.

That a university should allow its personal business to be printed on the stationary of a tobacco company, and use as a spokesman someone who not only is affiliated with this industry but boastful of his success in it (success meaning, of course, as in any business, profits gained — which here can be translated literally into cigarettes sold and lives lost) is reprehensible.

[illegible] disturbing in Murphy's request [illegible] professional success to his instructive years at Villanova. Quite unfathomably, he writes: "My professors realized that an education is barren unless students acquire a sense of "moral and social responsibility."

Were Murphy's brand of "moral and social responsibility" indeed the kind instilled by four years at Villanova, then the school should not only not [illegible] more money, it should be ashamed of whatever money it has.

Freshman representatives call for involvement

Dear Class of 1990:

We would like to thank you for your support in the recent elections. As your freshman representatives we hope to serve you, the freshman class, as best we can. We encourage you to come up to the Student Government office on the second floor in Dougherty Hall with any complaints or suggestions and talk to us or leave a note in one of our mailboxes. Thank You.

To the Editor:

We must not tolerate the confused, misguided ideals that the sexually immoral portray.

Prostitution, crime, and homosexuality still epitomize the underworld of loose morals and blatant unethical ideals.

It is, therefore, obviously wrong to think that the Church, and moral members of society, should support or tolerate these types of unethical activities. This is especially true here at Villanova.

On the contrary, it is the obligation of the ethical, and the Church to suppress immorality that threatens our society's well-being. Additionally, we must combat the apathy that allows for immorality to flourish.

In response to Martin Connell's op-ed Oct. 3, it is true that you must read the entire text of the Bible to understand just what it says. However it is quite clear that sexual immorality has no place with God, nor should it be associated with God. In essense, sexual immorality receives no degree of respectability in the Bible, from the Church, or from the students at Villanova. (Try reading Corinthians 6:12.)

Homosexuality is morally wrong; homosexuality is religiously wrong.

Quite obviously, our country was founded on God. And God and the church serve as our foundation of morals, when inadequate, deviant and misguided ideals tempt us to act in an objectively wrong manner.

We must not tolerate the confused, misguided ideals that the sexually immoral portray. Rather, we should confront and try to help those who are acting in such an inadequate manner.

AAP not just for minorities

To the Editor:

In the article entitled "Minority Enrollment Up" (Oct. 10 issue of the Villanovan), the Academic Advancement Program (AAP) is identified as a minority program.

Please be advised that the Academic Advancement Program (AAP) is not a minority program. The Program is open to any Pennsylvania resident who meets both the economic and academic criteria. Currently, between 35 to 40 percent of the AAP student population is non-minority.

I would appreciate it if this common misconception could be corrected.

Don't print names of accused students

To the Editor:

This is the first time I have felt compelled to write to the Villanovan. In the past, I have felt this newspaper to be very professional and have been proud to show it to my parents and friends.

I am distressed that the Villanovan chose to print the name of the student arrested for "alleged" possession of cocaine. This was inappropriate for several reasons.

First, it was inconsistent. Starting some time last year, the Villanovan began to print violations by students on campus. At that time, you elected to forgo names; even though several times the violations resulted in suspension or expulsion.

Second, I cannot believe that this student was the first Villanovan to be arrested by the local police. A major article appeared earlier this year about some freshmen students who got into an altercation; the Villanovan did not print their names.

Third, this cannot improve our public relations with Radnor Township. Their opinion of Villanova students is low enough without the Villanovan adding to their misconception of us. How are students supposed to find housing with this kind of negative image permeating our own newspaper?

In conclusion, I am not debating whether a crime was committed; that decision is left to the courts. What I am questioning is the random and capricious inclusion of some students' names for "alleged" crimes. This practice is prejudicial and inconsistent. My questions are, do you have a policy for the revealing/printing of students' names for alleged crimes or offenses? If so, what is it? And most important, is it in the best interest of Villanova University and its student body?

Students should support Specter

By CHRIS BURGHARDT and PAUL CYPHER

Sen. Specter has been described as "brilliant, hard-working, disciplined, and determined." He's the kind of independent leader that we need to represent us in the Senate.

As election day rolls around, only one thing is certain — you have probably been so busy reading textbooks that you've lost touch with the outside world. However, it might interest you to know that Nov. 4 is election day and there happens to be an important race going on for the Pennsylvania seat in the United States Senate.

Even if you have been in a marble-like state for the past few months (or years), here's a name on the outside world that you should recognize — Arlen Specter. And you'll recognize that name for one important reason. Specter has been a hard-working senator for Pennsylvania who deserves to keep his position so he can continue fighting for Pennsylvania.

So we have a name, but of course there's more to this than name recognition. We need to ask the what-have-you-done-for-me-lately question of an incumbent senator looking to keep his seat. Well, Specter is glad to talk of his record on the Hill. In fact, on Oct. 17 he held a press conference specifically to answer questions posed by representatives of area college newspapers hoping to spread information to those voters who have dinner in libraries rather than in front of the evening news.

The press conference occurred as Reagan and Gorbachev were winding down their summit in Iceland. Specter recalled how he proposed a Senate Resolution in 1982 calling for a summit between the United States and the U.S.S.R. Now, he is able to see his idea in action.

Specter stated that he was in favor of arms reduction and viewed summits as a valuable tool to achieve this goal. He also stated that he believed the United States should deal with the Soviets from a position of strength. He supports the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) as a worthwhile method to increase research and development, although he added that he was opposed to extending the arms race into space. Specter also viewed SDI as an important lure that succeeded in bringing the Soviets to the bargaining table.

Yes, Specter is a Republican, but whether that excites or bothers you, you should take note that he is known for weighing and considering the interests of his constituency and voting in their best interests before he would consider merely following the party line.

Specter advocates measures to create a strong economic climate that promotes the greatest productivity. He believes tax cuts are important to revitalize the economy. He also believes the deficit must be kept within bounds, but states that he works to maintain funding for important social programs such as urban development, senior citizen and veteran's programs, the job corps and student loans.

Sen. Specter also takes a strong stand against unfair foreign imports. He stressed a need to insist on reciprocity with foreign markets.

Also, Specter noted that he is pro-choice. He takes the stand that the government should not be in the business of telling people what to do on moral issues.

Specter has been described as "brilliant, hard-working, disciplined, and determined." He's the kind of independent leader that we need to represent us in the Senate. So take the time away from your studies to ensure that you have an active, competent and interested representative in the U.S. Senate. Vote Arlen Specter for senator on Nov. 4.

Steering Committee member defends orientation program

To the Editor:

Over the years the orientation staff and all the University offices with which we work have shown a genuine and active interest in the incoming students, freshmen and transfers.

My letter is in response to an article "Transfer students: adjusting to change" in the last Villanovan. The article started out okay, enumerating some of the challenges (not problems) that a transfer student may face. Later it attacks our orientation program for offering "no support system to help solve the problems of the transfer student." The article went on to say that "...transfers coming to Villanova often feel confused and frustrated about credit evaluations, housing, advisement and other areas."

As a member of the orientation staff for three years, the last two of which were spent on the steering committee, I am distressed at the total lack of research done on this subject. No references were cited and while criticisms were made, no suggestions followed. So, in response I would like to offer a more educated view of our orientation program.

Approximately 120 transfer students enter Villanova each fall. While most enter as sophomores, a sizable portion enter as juniors. Our experience shows us that the above mentioned topics are of major concern to the transfer student. Each and every concern (mentioned in the article) as well as many others, is addressed specifically not only by the orientation counselors but by the steering committee, the Career Development Center, the Dean of Students Office, the Student Activities Office, the Office of Student Life, Campus Ministry and others.

The transfers are divided into three groups, each of which will be led by a second or third-year OC. The OC's experience helps them to better handle the different maturity level and types of concerns that the transfers have.

The attitude with which the transfer is approached is slightly different than that for a freshman. The transfer has some ideas and first-hand experience about adjusting to a new environment, making friends, handling the college workload, etc. So our approach is a bit more mature but equally as enthusiastic. And yet we understand also that Villanova is still a new place for them and they therefore share some of the concerns of the freshmen.

The transfers who choose to stay with the four-day program have a golden opportunity to receive the necessary information to handle credit transfers, off-campus residency questions, etc.

Transfers also have the opportunity to interact with the other transfer students as well as the freshmen, a process which does anything but "alienate transfer students from the beginning." Rather, we hope to make their transition from one college experience to another as easy and happy as possible.

Over the years the orientation staff and all the University offices with which we work have shown a genuine and active interest in the incoming students, freshmen and transfers. It is this concern which prompts us to call our program not the freshman orientation program but rather the new student orientation program.

Students should vote for the pro-peace candidates

To the Editor:

Voting provides the opportunity for students to make our views known on vital issues facing the country.

It's rare that single events can change the course of world history. It's rarer still when students can play an important role in such events. The Nov. 4 elections can fundamentally alter our future. Indeed, these elections can determine whether there is a future at all.

Voting provides the opportunity for students to make our views known on vital issues facing the country. We can also give them clout by helping elect a Congress that shares our views.

Today's student activism reflects the conscience of our nation. Millions of people oppose the arms build-up, apartheid, intervention in Central America, cutbacks in student aid and other social programs and new levels of racism and discrimination. On these issues we share the sentiments of the overwhelming majority of the U.S. people. It is the Reagan Administration and its supporters that are out of step with the people of our country and the world.

For six years students have been taking it on the chin. During the Reagan presidency tuition has gone up 34 percent. Every year we fight administration attempts to impose deep cuts in student aid. The funds axed from these and other social programs is diverted to the astronomically expensive arms build-up. This includes Reagan's Star Wars program that will cost an estimated 1 trillion dollars over the next 5 years.

Eighty percent of the people of the U.S. support a nuclear test ban. The House recently voted for a moratorium on all but the smallest nuclear explosions. A majority also opposes Star Wars. The 18-month Soviet moratorium on nuclear testing means an historic agreement is within reach.

The administration can be compelled to reverse its disastrous course. But to do this, we need a change in the political balance in Congress. This November, we can do that, by electing a pro-peace and pro-people majority to the U.S. Senate.

'Leichting' the way for WIOQ

By FRED VALENTE

Flashback — Summer, 1968:

— Robert Kennedy lies helplessly bleeding in the kitchen of the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles.

— Detroit Tiger pitcher Denny McLain fires a myriad of unhittable spheres past American League batters for a record-breaking 31 wins.

— The gnarled expressions of the Chicago police are hidden behind face shields as their truncheons crash down upon unprotected craniums along Michigan Avenue. And over the chaotic din, through the stifling summer heat came strange sounds.

Perhaps it was the slow hypnotic ticking of a metronome from the Chambers Brothers opus, "Time Has Come Today." Or maybe the eternal ending of the unprecedented 7-minute single, "Hey Jude."

STOP, children! What's that sound? Why, it is FM radio playing a mixed bag to a generation bored by AM's incessant top 40 and screaming announcers selling everything from pimple cream to suntan lotion.

Flashforward — Fall, 1986:

It is distinctly quieter now. There are no more anti-war fists shoved into the air in defiance, no more metal coffins being unloaded from planes. The politicians rarely stir emotion ... the country is content.

And even frequency modulation has sought to adopt its AM counterpart's commercialism. What happened to the grand experiment?

I asked this and many other questions of Helen Leicht, 10-year veteran of FM station WIOQ in Philadelphia. For many years, her voice in the afternoon has been soothing and friendly to a world at work. And on Sunday mornings, her program "Breakfast With The Beatles" somehow helps you to forget that you have to work on the Lord's Day.

"I think there was a period of time when, because FM was new, there were no guidelines," Leicht explained. She related as we sat in a small office at the radio station in Bala Cynwyd, "There were all these bands coming out that really had no place on the AM band."

Helen Leicht began in the broadcast business in 1972, leaving a career in television as a production assistant for KYW-TV. Her ambitions toward spinning records for a living came mainly from her uncle, who was general manager of WIBG-AM.

Working in television was what made her realize how much she liked radio. Helen considers radio a more personal medium than its video rival. "Music was always very important to me, and knowing that, I knew it was important to other people. It wasn't just a job ... that was the role I wanted," she said.

However, lobbying for work as a woman disc jockey at a time when the occupation was literally unheard of was not easy. She had to work her way up through the ranks as a news editor at WILM radio in Wilmington, Del.

Not being content with news, she managed to land a spot as a weekend DJ at WQIQ in Chester, Pa. But all along, her sights were set upon WIOQ. After a massive amount of audition tapes, Leicht was finally hired by the station.

Commenting on what many see as endless repetition in the programming on FM stations, Leicht responded, "People don't take the time like they used to sit down and listen to the new music. Philadelphia is basically a conservative market, although they're good on new music in small doses."

I drew a comparison between old and new as far as programming goes. A lot of FM stations are now experimenting with oldies to draw the typical Yuppie audience.

"For people who listen to music [that was] a very important time for them," responded Leicht. "They're going to hear what they heard in those days and can relive the memories, but now they're a different kind of listener."

WIOQ D.J., Helen Leicht, offers Philadelphia area radio listeners a variety of music programs.

But, what can one do to satisfy the fickle public? Leicht answered, "Right now we have to take an audience and say: Okay, this is the music they're into. There are FM listeners who like to hear the record when it becomes a hit, but there's no way to satisfy those people."

I had, of course, wanted to get to the meat of the subject. I was anxious to ask Leicht how her Sunday program, "Breakfast with The Beatles," got started, and moreover, her recollections of her meetings with two of the fab four, John Lennon and Paul McCartney.

She beamed when speaking of her encounters. I listened intently

False alarms endanger lives

By SCOTT GRANDE

Asleep in bed in the early hours of the morning, you are suddenly awakened by the sound of a fire alarm. You are about to get out of bed, but you decide not to because the last five fire alarms were false.

Falling back to sleep, you wake up a little while later coughing and hearing sirens. You open your door and the hallway is full of smoke and fire. Now you are trapped.

This unfortunate situation could have been avoided had the person not ignored the fire alarm, however, the real fault lies with the individuals who pulled the false alarms.

For some reason, certain individuals find joy in rousing an entire dormitory for no good reason, thereby lessening the effects of a fire alarm should some real emergency occur. I guess these people never read the story of "The Boy Who Cried Wolf."

The amount of false alarms pulled throughout Villanova dormitories is amazing; eight to 10 false alarms since school began in September. An average of almost two per week by people assumed to be adults by society's standards, who still can so deliberately endanger other human lives and property.

Equally amazing are the penalties for pulling a false fire alarm. Individually, any student caught pulling a false alarm will be suspended for at least one semester with no tuition refund.

This penalty is clearly stated in the Bluebook on page 24. In the dormitories, either the floor or the building will be fined $300, to be divided among and paid equally by all residents.

The penalties are stiff but the reasoning is justified. Tampering with and misusing fire safety equipment is serious and can result in the endangering of human life. When an extinguisher is fired and the right people are not notified, the extinguisher will not function properly in the event of a real emergency.

"Fire safety equipment should be left to serve their purpose, they are not toys," said the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A. dean of students. Stack went on to say that the students "need to have the same consideration for people in the school as for their own families."

This makes sense because a dormitory should be considered a student's home, and no student would fire an extinguisher in their living room or wake up their families with a false alarm.

In order to lessen the chance of casualties in the event of a real fire, the Office of Residence Life has held several fire drills at all

Special Olympics gives hope

By DR. HELEN LAFFERTY

"In a world where poverty, war and oppression have often dimmed people's hopes, Special Olympians rekindle that hope with their spiritual strength, their pursuit of excellence and their outstanding achievements. For as we hope for the best in them, hope is reborn in us." These words of Eunice Kennedy Shriver, Founder of Special Olympics, poignantly summarizes the meaning of the Olympic ideal.

As the Villanova community comes together to celebrate the unique elan of Special Olympians, it is worthwhile to reflect on the history and significance of Special Olympics.

Founded in 1968 by the Joseph P. Kennedy, Jr. Foundation, Special Olympics is the largest program of sports training and athletic competition for mentally handicapped children and adults in the world.

At the time of its founding, many were skeptical about what these individuals could actually accomplish. Could they learn to run 400 meters or swim the length of a pool or communicate well enough to participate in team sports?

The skeptics were silenced at Chicago's Soldier Field where the first Special Olympic Games were held in the setting of Olympic ceremony and ritual.

The Special Olympic Torch was carried proudly into the stadium and the "Flame of Hope" was lit. There were the Parade of Athletes with Special Olympians regaled in colorful uniforms carrying the banners of their states and nations. These first games were a declaration of recognition.

Since then, Special Olympics has been a significant catalyst in directing mentally handicapped persons into the mainstream of life. It has inspired individuals from every walk of life to celebrate the unlimited potential of the human spirit.

Because of Special Olympics, we are better able to appreciate the courage and determination expressed in the lives of these individuals. No time is too slow, no distance too small.

Consider Colin Bailey, a swimmer from New Zealand. Colin spent 10 years learning how to swim and won a gold medal in his nation's Special Olympics. This accomplishment helped to earn him a place on the community swim team for non-handicapped youth.

Another participant was Travis Guidry, the brother of pitching star Ron Guidry. In the living room of the Guidry home the Special Olympics medal Travis won hangs next to his brother's Cy Young Award. Both awards are equally prized, equally cherished.

At the heart of the continuing growth and success of the Special Olympics movement are the volunteers who give so generously of their time. We salute and thank the students, faculty and administrators of Villanova who organize this event and who embody yet another dimension of the Olympic ideal.

The seemingly tireless efforts of the Management Team, the Games Committee and student volunteers contribute to the spark of enthusiasm and commitment that teaches the true meaning of team work.

Finally, we thank most especially all Special Olympians for the reminder of hope that they are ... "for as we hope for the best in them, hope is reborn in us."

Interviews are key:

Personal savvy lands the job

By KAREN M. MITCHELL

Most of us assume that the best-qualified candidate always gets the job, but that is not necessarily true. How you really get hired: The inside story from a college recruiter is a newly published book written by John LaFevre.

As a college recruiter for Bethlehem Steel Corporation, LaFevre interviewed thousands of individuals for corporate positions. He has conducted interviews at many colleges including Penn State and Notre Dame.

A popular campus speaker, LaFevre has elicited praise from students and counselors nationwide.

According to LaFevre, "The candidate who'll win out on any level is the job search expert. The job search expert is the one who has practiced, studied, and thought out the components of the interview and who can consider the interviewer's point of view."

How you really get hired raises questions that most career books neglect, questions that every job seeker would do well to consider.

A few examples of these questions are: In what sort of interview should you ask no questions? How can a candidate rule himself out in the first minute of the inter-

Ensemble dances into community

By CINDY CLEMENT

The Villanova Dance Ensemble is leaping into its sixth year with enthusiasm. Since its inception in 1981, each successive year has brought the ensemble more applause and they are hoping that with hard work this will continue.

Auditions were held Sept. 7, where 25 hopefuls memorized and rehearsed a jazz/ballet combination. From these dancers, 13 were accepted into the 26 member group.

This year, Lois Quay is working alongside Jean Haver, the Ensemble's Founder, as assistant director. Quay brings her technical and performance experience to the group, which she will direct next year. Some skills Quay hopes to foster are the technique, consistency and quality of the numbers performed by the Ensemble.

The Ensemble members are versatile, incorporating jazz, tap, ballet, modern and character dance into their performances.

Their variegated talents are showcased at Parent's Weekend, Super Sunday in Philadelphia, as well as various great malls, nursing homes and retirement centers. This year the troupe will attend The Invitational College Festival of Dance at the University of Delaware.

Musical pieces used are as varied as the dance styles. Selections from the Dance Ensemble's repertoire include Elton John, Marvin Hamlisch, Stevie Nicks, Cole Porter, Vivaldi and Scott Joplin.

In preparation for the year ahead, 22 girls attended dance camp at Villanova the week before orientation. Camp consisted of daily rehearsal, a visit to a conditioning gym and a trip to Atlantic City to see "Waves," a Philadelphia-based dance company.

PICK UP A PARTY

THIS PUPPY FOR YOU

College students party by telephone

By FRANK ORZECHOWICZ

O.K. kids, here's the story. It is Friday night, but you would not have known if you did not look at your calendar. All your friends have either blown you off or mysteriously disappeared.

It is so quiet on campus you can hear the leaves crashing against the ground. Oh well, just another boring evening at good ole' V.U., right? Not necessarily.

"Why?", you ask, perched on the edge of your seats. That is because now there is 976-TALK, a new phone service in the 215 calling area.

976-TALK is something like an old party line out of the past, but with a lot more people. When a caller dials in, they are connected to a maximum of five other callers, all joyfully blabbing away for six minutes.

The service is offered to all major colleges in the 215 calling area (sorry Pennco Tech!) At any time, there could be people from six different colleges on the line at once.

This all started about six months ago in the land of sun, surf, and early senility, California. It is so popular there that on a slow week, there is an average of about 100,000 callers. The idea was brought to the East Coast by Dave Meade, of Meade Associates.

The original idea was for the line to handle eight callers at a time, but the sound was too confusing (Have you ever tried talking and listening to eight people at once?)

This is just another way to meet new people, something like an electronic pen-pal of the '80s. People call in and talk, exchange phone numbers, plan parties or just eavesdrop (ahh, the thrill of anonymity!).

It's just $1.25 for six minutes, so it will not break anyone's bank.

So the next time the hallowed halls of old V.U. are so quiet you can hear the leaves falling on the campus of Rosemont College, live life on the wild side and give 976-TALK a try. You just never know who you might meet.

of the dorms, and they "are not impressed by the response to the drills," said Christopher M. Janosik, director of Residence Life.

The residence life office feels that it is better to educate rather than punish. As a means to this end, they are planning a fire safety education campaign in the near future.

"The best deterrent is responsible behavior," said Stephen McWilliams, judicial affairs officer. "By the time people are living in dormitories they can realize the possible consequences of their actions such as pulling a false alarm."

This is just another way of saying that the supposed maturity level of the students of this school should be the best preventative measure against these false alarms.

The pulling of alarms and the playing with fire safety equipment has to stop before a serious altercation occurs. People seem to be able to live with a fine and even a lengthy suspension, but we don't need to find out if a person could live with causing another person's death, even inadvertently.

Through education and responsible behavior, the scenario at the beginning of this article will never come true.

Helen Leicht's journey to WIOQ to the storyteller weave her tale.

"I love the Beatles," said Leicht, "they got me through tons of things. I said one Sunday; 'Can I do the Beatles for 15 minutes? Who is it gonna hurt if I do that? I got such a good reaction to it. I was personally excited about it because it was at a time when no one was doing anything with the Beatles.

"I feel close to the people who listen for a number of reasons," Leicht continued. "There are some people who know everything that ever had anything to do with the group, and there are others who just love the Beatles. The music has been a part of their life.

Leicht managed to echo the feelings of many with her memory of Lennon's death six years ago, and the long days of pain felt by all of his fans.

"I lost a friend, and I didn't even know the man," related Leicht.

There was a feeling of kinship in that grim situation, and likewise in her meeting two years ago with McCartney. Her excitement was felt by all of her listeners.

"I was so excited and scared at the same time," Leicht explained. "I could not believe that I was meeting this man. I didn't know what he was going to be like. I thought, 'If this guy's a jerk, I've just wasted all those years.' I wrote to him so many times [as a teenager] and never mailed them."

Leicht speaks with equal excitement about her encounter with Lennon back in the early '70s when she worked at KYW. Lennon and Yoko Ono had been guest-hosting for a week on The Mike Douglas Show in 1972. Leicht related, "For the whole week I stood on the side watching the show, and went backstage. The producer said, 'If you want to meet him and get his autograph, stand right here, this is where he'll pass.' There was no one there but me. Then, here comes Yoko, here comes John, and I stare at them, nothing came out of my mouth. The producer came running over and said, 'John, Yoko, this is Helen Leicht . . . she wanted to meet you and get your autograph.' "

Leicht lets the music do the talking for her. "We're able to be ourselves," she said of disc jockeys. "I don't have to be anybody on the air." She added, "Whatever anyone picks up is their own interpretation. I've become so comfortable with being me on the radio and not having you know who I am."

Researchers have recently postulated that the witches were suffering from ergotism, a toxic condition produced by eating grain tainted with a fungus similar to LSD.

Imagine becoming a "parent" to a 10,000-pound elephant or a feisty Siberian tiger. On Oct. 18, the Zoological Society of Philadelphia held an "ADOPT Recognition Day," in which contributors to the ADOPT program were honored and given the chance to help feed their adopted animal.

In return for a contribution, ADOPT parents can choose an animal from a variety of reptiles, amphibians, mammals and birds.

According to Arlene Kut from the Zoological Society, the most popular animals include rabbits, gorillas, lions, tigers, snakes and lizards.

On "ADOPT Recognition Day," parents received a behind-the-scenes tour, an official ADOPT Certificate of Parentage, a fact sheet about their animal and a T-shirt. For all adoptions of $100 or more, parents received an 8x10 photograph of their animal friend.

ADOPT dollars are used to provide the animals with a proper diet. In any one week, the zoo uses 145 pounds of bananas, 300 pounds of carrots, 250 pounds of cabbage and close to a ton of raw meat. The annual food budget for 1986 is $250,000.

You can adopt a Koala from the Philadelphia Zoo.

College students grow conservative

By TERISE FUSCO

Many pepole say that it is the students in society who set the standards. They are the pace setters because of the wholly unified lifestyles in their communities of academia. As a unified body they are a strong, forceful group.

Considering these facts, the College Stores Research and Educational Foundation conducted a survey out of Oberlin College in Oberlin, Ohio to reveal students' attitudes and buying habits. The survey revealed that the nation's college students are now more conservative than students of the past.

The survey was conducted to over 12.5 million students with more than $20 billion in discretionary annual spending, representing a vital chunk in the social, political and economic picture of society.

Beginning with supposedly ingrained characteristics, the survey reflected on the spirituality and morality of college students. Religion was claimed to be important in varying degrees in 69 percent of people's lives, and some 26 percent attend church services at least once per week.

Sex outside of marriage was believed to be wrong by 95 percent of these students and some 69 percent are willing to postpone marriage to achieve other goals.

On the social scene, it was surprising to find that 48 percent of those surveyed would never date someone who smokes. The college drug scene was also considered, as 48 percent feel cocaine is harmful and 62 percent feel marijuana is unwise. Yet only 10 percent had these attitudes about alcohol, as students continue to indulge heavily in this substance.

The beliefs of the students are unique in that 37 percent of those surveyed consider themselves Republicans and 31 percent Independents.

Students claim to respect their doctors, scientists and professors most highly, but reporters, government workers and politicians have a poor public image, commanding 60 percent, 47 percent and 70 percent, respectively, of the untrustworthy feelings of the students.

Financially, 50 percent of college students today earn half of their own discretionary income, with 25 percent earning over $5,000 last year. Spending a median of $200 per month, some college students even have such luxuries as the 55 percent that own their own cars.

While retaining conservative beliefs, the college students today remain independent enough to be a forceful, influential body in our society.

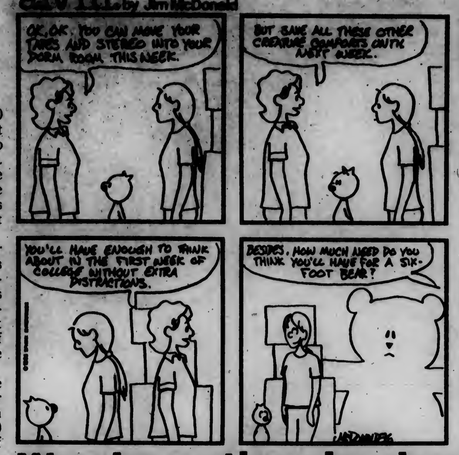
Warring nations lay down arms

By MARK V. DiSTASIO

The history of the world has been seeped in blood and soaked in sadness. Today, skirmishes, ambushes, battles and wars rage day and night. It happens on Belfast's streets, along the border of Iran and Iraq and in Central America's mountainous jungles.

In an effort to mitigate this hateful killing, Pope John Paul II declared Monday of this week as World Peace Day. The pontiff asked warring nations and insurgents to lay down their arms for 24 hours.

In response to the Pope's request, 4,000 leftist guerrillas in El Salvador, along with 20,000 Contras in Nicaragua, laid down their weapons of war for a day. In the Middle East, Moslem Iran and Iraq also agreed to the one-day cease fire.



This benevolent effort by Pope John Paul II to persuade the combatants to seek peace is overshadowed by the world situation. Today there are more wars with more people killed all over the world than 10 years ago.

In Central America they fight over liberation. In Lebanon they kill one another over religious principles. On the border of China and Vietnam men die over territorial disputes.

The common denominator in all cases is death. Since 1971, hostilities have claimed seven million men, women and children. Unfortunately, most of these participants agree that peace is an untenable goal.

On Monday, the head of the Roman Catholic Church traveled to Assisi for prayers with more than 150 representatives of 12 major religions. The Pope proclaimed, "No one can hide the great difficulties of our time, the prayer gathering in Assisi may seem Utopian to some, but it is not so for all those who believe."

Murder and monsters from Vasey

By MEGAN GUIDERA

Vasey Theatre's first production of horror this year, "Frankenstein," was definitely something to scream about. Screams of praise and congratulations should be sent to director Lon Winston and his cast and crew on their excellent "creation" of Mary Shelley's "Frankenstein."

"Frankenstein," which ran from Oct. 8 to 11 and Oct. 15 to 19, set the tone for Vasey's season of horror. Upon entering Vasey an air of eerieness prevailed. The pale blue and white lights were dimmed; and soft eerie chamber music was heard in the background. Vasey's dark central stage was set only with dark brown objects. A wooden desk, a brown bed, and what appeared to be a dark draw bridge decorated the stage. The cast, with the exception of Elizabeth (Beth Dannenfelser), dressed in drab brown, navy and gray. Elizabeth (Dannenfelser), dressed always in white, symbolic of her beauty and innocence.

Villanova's Theatre chose the stage play written by Alden Nowlan and Walter Learning. Nowlan and Learning are thought to have the production closest to Shelley's original idea. Nowlan and Learning's Creature was a thinking, feeling being that commited murders out of rejection and anger. Their Creature was more life-like as opposed to the Hollywood creature that was a hideous monster.

Victor Frankenstein (David Fiebert)

David Fiebert did a marvelous job of portraying Victor Von Frankenstein, the obsessed scientist, who created and rejected the Creature, (Daniel Richards). After his rejection, the Creature went on a binge of revenge, killing everyone Von Frankenstein loved: his fiance, his best friend, his assistant, and his little brother. However, in the final and most touching scene, the creator and creation were reunited on a ship. After Von Frankenstein finally reached out and accepted his creation, he died in peace.

It was obvious that a great deal of time and effort went into this production. The sound, lighting and set were perfect. The props were small in number, but they were versatile. The set changes ran smoothly as the lights dimmed and cast members rearranged the stage.

"Frankenstein" was the first of five horror productions by Vasey this year. On Oct. 29 to Nov. 2 an all undergraduate cast will present "Something's Afoot," a murder-mystery musical. On Nov. 19 and 20 and Dec. 3-7, a Greek tragedy, "The Bacchae" will be performed. Scheduled for later this year are: "What The Butler Saw" in February, and "Sweeney Todd," in April.

Horror, the unique theme of Villanova Theatre's season, is something that intrigues many. When asked why horror was chosen as the theme this year, Joanna Rotte, chairperson of Villanova's Theatre, wrote: "To remind us of the illogical and unjust and irresponsible and uncompassionate forces within and without us; to give us pause, lest we tend to sanitize or sentimentalize or trivialize these forces." If this quote is applied to "Frankenstein," we in our suburban, main line campus should learn to be more accepting of the "different."

"Frankenstein" was a highly enjoyable play that was put together flawlessly. Its emotional theme and dramatic impact will not be soon forgotten.

Frankenstein's Creature (Daniel Richards) escapes from his creator in Villanova's production of "Frankenstein."

Suspicion! Everyone's a murder suspect in "Something's Afoot"

Something's Afoot

By MEGAN GUIDERA

Whodunit? Director The Rev. Peter Donohue, O.S.A. and his cast are doing a fantastic job this week on their presentation of "Something's Afoot," a witty murder mystery musical. What could be more fascinating or funny than one defenseless little old nanny fighting to find the identity of a heartless fiendish murderer?

Nothing intrigues the public more than a good old fashion "whodunit." It is this intrigue that made author Agatha Christie famous. Seemingly sweet little old ladies that turn into master detectives, like Christie's famous character Miss Marple or television's Angela Lansberry on "Murder She Wrote," capture the fantasy and adventure of the public. This fantasy is satirized in "Something's Afoot." Poisonous powders, killer plants and suspicious circumstances take fun at the typical murder mystery in a most amusing way.

"Something's Afoot" continues Vasey's theme of horror just in time for the eerie Halloween season. However, "Something's Afoot" is much lighter in tone than the rest of the shows planned for this season at Vasey. The play is an extremely humorous comedy that mocks the modern murder mystery.

"Something's Afoot" consists of an all undergraduate cast and is part of Villanova Theatre's studio series. Because it is part of the studio series, "Something's Afoot" had a considerably less extravagant budget as opposed to the budget of Vasey's main stage plays like "Frankenstein." Despite the smaller budget, "Something's Afoot" appeared both professional and well put together. The elaborate stairs and platform from the "Frankenstein" set were put to good use in "Something's Afoot." The lighting and live piano music added to the flawless atmosphere.

The play itself, written in 1976, is a fairly new musical by James McDonald, David Vos and Robert Gerlach. "Something's Afoot" is a tale of the murder of 10 dinner guests that were invited separately to Rancour's Retreat, a country estate on an island in the English lake district. The setting is late spring, 1935. The play has a striking similarity to Agatha Christie's And Then Their Were None, a novel later made into the hit play and movie "Ten Little Indians." However, "Something's Afoot" hysterically mimics this type of British mystery.

The undergraduate cast of 10 is excellent, with the guiding hand of their crafty director, Fr. Donohue, the cast put together a masterpiece in less than a month. Meg Donnelly is outstanding as Hope Langdon, the innocent sweet young girl that falls in love. Donnelly's operatic voice took over the stage every time she opened her mouth. David Cregan as Geoffrey, the stuffy stereotypical college student, is fantastic. Chris O'Brien is very humorous as the nosey old nanny, Miss Tweed, that takes justice into her own hands. The entire cast, ranging from pinching gardeners to penniless socialites, is superb.

The choreography and musical harmony is well-paced and timed. Songs like "Suspicious" and "I Don't Know Why But I Trust You (But I Do)" are definitely highlights that no one should miss.

"Something's Afoot" began Tuesday and will run until Nov. 2. So this Halloween weekend, why not do something different, something cultural? See the funny and entertaining "Something's Afoot" at Vasey Theatre. For further information contact David Warner at 645-4763.

Christine O'Brien as the crafty Miss Tweed.

Hurt plays to a lesser...

By MARYJO YANNACONE

"Children of a Lesser God" directed by Randa Haines

Few films have the gift of true expression; the power to evoke a response from so deep in the viewer's soul that the only action capable is silence. "Children of a Lesser God" is just such a film, bringing the viewer to laughter and to tears and, finally, to silent thought. It is truly a masterpiece of emotion, causing not only a change in our perception of the hearing-impaired, but also of the communicative skills of those in the hearing world.

An adaptation of Mark Medoff's Broadway hit, "Children of a Lesser God" is a story about a teacher who comes to work at a school for the deaf, and his subsequent relationship with a former student of the school has since graduated and become the janitor. Sarah Norman, the former student, is portrayed beautifully by Marlee Matlin, who has a severe hearing impairment herself, as do all the actors who portray students at the school. The character of Sarah is deeply tormented by her deafness, and bitterly refuses to enter the world of the hearing by neglecting to speak a word. She has blocked out the hearing world, choosing instead to work in silence as the school's custodian.

Enter James Leeds, a brilliant instructor portrayed by William Hurt, whose unorthodox methods of teaching amuse his students and incite the faculty. Regardless of their unusual quality, Leeds' methods work; his students are speaking more clearly and even singing and dancing by the end of the semester.

The tension arises when Leeds tries to communicate with Sarah, an unwilling pupil who has no desire to speak or to enter the hearing world. The two struggle, while falling slowly in love, to bridge the gap between them and find a place that transcends their worlds, a place where they can be free to communicate without signs or speech. This battle is taken on with consummate grace by both Hurt and Matlin.

As student and lover, Matlin brings the fears and frustrations of the deaf to the screen with great skill. The grace with which she communicates through her delicate hands brings a touch of finesse to complex issues, from humor and [illegible]. Special recognition is due Hurt for carrying off about 90 percent of the film's dialogue, for never sounding mundane, and for consistently taking on the individual personality of the students whose signing he is translating into verbal speech for the audience.

Set in St. John, New Brunswick, "Children" is a cinematic victory as well as an emotional one. Australian cinematographer John Seale deserves an award for his use of lighting alone. Use of shadows, fog-swept scenery and blurred color bring a whole other dimension to the wall built between Sarah and James, and between the hearing and non-hearing worlds. In one scene in particular, James lies down to listen to a treasured piece of classical music while Sarah sits in the background. The screen slowly edges out Sarah, as if to signify her being edged out of the world in which James is now participating, a world that can hear and appreciate the soothing melodies of a piece of classical music, or the patter of rain on a window pane, or the roar of wind through the trees during a storm.

Perhaps the greatest accomplishment of the movie is its ability to arouse in the viewer a sense of what life for the hearing-impaired is really like, and to make us realize the weaknesses each of us has in communicating our feelings. Sarah and James are not the typical couple, and they cannot communicate with audible speech, but what they say in gesture and touch far surpasses the spoken word. "Children of a Lesser God" is a true gift, one that awakens the mind and warms the heart.

By THERESA JONES

Those who were lucky enough to see any of Billy Joel's three concerts at the Spectrum this past month were treated to a terrific compilation of Joel's best and newest songs. Each show was approximately two-and-one-half to three hours, with a number of encores for the enthusiastic audience. As much as the fans enjoyed the performance, the artist and his band seemed to be having as much fun, which made the evening even better.

Fans from all stages of Joel's development had to be pleased by the selection of songs. He opened with his most recent "A Matter of Trust" from the new album The Bridge, and then went back to previous hits including "Pressure," "You're Only Human," and the 13-year-old favorite "Piano Man." Though never as big a hit as some songs, Joel played "Vienna" from the album The Stranger because he "just like(s) to play this song."

Billy Joel plays to a sold-out crowd three nights at the Spectrum.

A particularly moving performance of "Goodnight Saigon" was enhanced by impressive sound effects. The concert continued with oldies but goodies from Turnstiles, Glass Houses, Nylon Curtain, and others as well as some soon-to-be-hits from The Bridge. "Captain Jack" came off well in an encore, as did "Big Shot" and other releases from Innocent Man.

The third performance was part of a live video, merely one more reason to never forget this tour. Perhaps the video taping partially accounts for the number of over zealous female fans who chased Joel around the stage. Despite those few, the crowd was terrific, offering flowers and teddy bears for Joel's new baby, and even a Philly cheese-steak, which Joel force-fed to members of his band.

Despite the greasy fingers from the cheese-steak, a perfect performance followed and was a hit with everyone there. The third show also made a great birthday present for my favorite Billy Joel fan. (Happy Birthday again, MC!) And for those of you who missed all three concerts, rumor has it that tickets are on sale for a final performance in Philadelphia at the end of the tour, some time in January. Get any seat you can — it will be well worth it.

MOODY BLUES

By RUSS CECCOLA

The calm before the storm that was David Lee Roth and Cinderella came on a Friday night a couple of weeks ago with the Moody Blues. They put on an excellent show, ranging from their earliest hists to their latest ventures. Opening with "Gemini Dream" from the highly acclaimed Long Distance Voyager album of 1981, The Moody Blues proved their versatility and talents in this song and the rest of the hits they performed. Their newest album, The Other side of Life, has met with great success for a band which is simply a relic of the '60s and '70s, providing four numbers for the show — "Your Wildest Dreams," "The Other Side of Life," "Rock 'N' Roll Over You" and "It May Be A Fire."

The Moody Blues could be seen, for lack of better tickets, on the giant screens that the Spectrum has facing all directions, called Arenavision. This aided in seeing which members of the band actually have gray hair. Aside from that, Arenavision becomes a distraction. Other classics that were played include "Question," "Tuesday Afternoon," "I'm Just A Singer (In A Rock and Roll Band)," "Nights in White Satin" and "Ride My See-Saw" saved for an encore. All in all, The Moody Blues haven't lost touch with their past and still put on an incredible show.

DAVID LEE ROTH/ CINDERELLA

By CAESAR ETTORE

David Lee Roth returned to Philadelphia recently on his highly publicized Eat 'em And Smile tour. As one might expect, the Spectrum was packed, but one must wonder who the capacity crowd was actually there to see. Opening for Dave and making their first hometown appearance since hooking onto the Roth tour was the always exciting Cinderella. The band were supporting the skyrocketing success of the debut LP, Night Songs, which has landed them in Billboard's top 15.

Coming home and with the crowd solidly behind them, Cinderella was at their very best. Vocalist/guitarist Tom Keifer is a master showman and the rest of the band (Fred Coury, Eric Brittingham and Jeff Le Bar) can crank out the songs live with the best of them. Opening up with "Once Around the Ride," the band played most of the songs from the Night Songs LP. Among the highlights of the set were the two singles "Shake Me" and the awesome "Nobody's Fool" as well as the album's title track and "Somebody Save Me."

If anything, David Lee Roth has that great sense of humor, and on his recent tour, he has some incredible musicians to back him up. While Dave is the obvious star of the show, one cannot overlook the great musicians behind him. Billy Sheehan (bass), Steve Vai (guitar) and Gregg Bissonette (drums) are all top rate and this was shown throughout the show.

Roth, was his usual hilarious self and, to no one's surprise, the show consisted of plenty of old Van Halen favorites alongside Dave's newer material. Among the old Van Halen classics were "Jump," "Panama," "Unchained" and "Everybody Wants Some." These meshed nicely with newer songs such as "Shy Boy" and

Murder in the monastery: Annaud films mystery

By JOE McGOWAN

"The Name of the Rose"
after the novel by Umberto Eco directed by Jean-Jacques Annaud

Director Jean-Jacques Annaud has produced what he calls "a palimpsest of the Umberto Eco novel." So now we have in the film "The Name of the Rose" a manuscript of the chronicle of Adso of Melk rescraped and rewritten in parts.

The Name of the Rose was a surprising bestseller in this country, as it was a bestseller laden with the trappings of the fourteenth century: the philosophy, metaphysics, manuscripts, spices and smells of that theocentric age. Annaud's "The Name of the Rose" concentrates on the more tangible elements of Eco's brilliant novel.

The philosophy of the novel has been pared down for this film; however, the picture may still seem ponderous and slow to some viewers. But the setting for both the film and novel is a medieval monastery in Northern Italy — matters will, of course, not always pertain to the things of this world.

Sean Connery is excellent as the Franciscan sleuth William of Baskerville who, along with his novice Adso of Melk (the narrator of the tale), must discern the nature and culprit of a series of murders at the monastery. The thread that links the murders together is, fittingly, intellectual and religious.

Readers of the novel already know that it is Jorge of Burgos, the blind librarian (a character inspired by late Argentinian author Jorge Luis Borges, the blind librarian of the national library at Buenos Aires), who is behind a plot marked with allusions to the Apocalypse. While certain details of the monastery's library, such as the crytographic cataloguing system and the finis Africae, are left out by the film, Annaud has nonetheless chosen a suitably labyrinthine structure for the precious works of the scriptorium and the wanderings of William and Adso.

The scenes within and without the monastery are all beautifully filmed, and the medieval atmosphere carefully crafted.

Poison is at the root of the evil that lurks in this monastery — not one but many poisons. The most obvious of these poisons are the ones kept by the monastery herbalist Severinus, one of which Jorge uses to dust the pages of a work the blind man deems forbidden — the "lost" second book of Aristotle's Poetics. A more subtle form of poison is brought to the monastery by the Inquisitor Bernardo Gui, played by F. Murray Abraham (who received an Academy Award for his portrayal of Antonio Salieri in "Amadeus").

One of the central conflicts in "The Name of the Rose" is that of the debate over the poverty of Christ, an issue still pursued today. Dissension exists not only within this particular monastery, but within the entire Church. The debate has come to such a point that the Papacy, in exile at Avignon, is at odds with the Franciscans, who propose that the Church abandon its wealth.

Residing in the monastery are brothers Remigio and Salvatore, two brothers in exile from a past in which they followed the movement of Fra Dolcino. Theirs was a fervor for poverty that unfortunately led to violence as the humble and dispossessed struck out against the most visible signs of a Church saturated with wealth.

Violence has now grasped the Italian monastery — one by one the bodies are discovered. Adelmo the illuminator is drive to suicide by a paroxysm of guilt over a homosexual affair, an incident which, though shocking, is but the surface of a darker mystery as Aristotle's second book of Poetics proves to be of deadly interest for several brothers.

Umberto Eco

It is William of Baskerville, an English Franciscan, who with the philosophy of Thomas Aquinas and William of Ockham pierces the mystery at the expense, unfortunately, of the monastery's priceless library.

Many fans of Eco's novel may be disappointed at Annaud's translation from the printed word to the screen. But if "The Name of Rose" is judged apart from, and not in comparison to, the book, it stands out as a film at once dark and beautiful, and one which maintains the sophistication of the source despite the standards of the mainstream entertainment industry.

Accolade Software is one of the quickly rising software companies of the '80s. Centered in Cupertino, Calif., Accolade was formed by Alan Miller and Bob Whitehead, two award-winning designers for Activision who made cartridges for the Atari 2600 Video Computer System. With many hits already on disk and in the market, Accolade just keeps getting better.

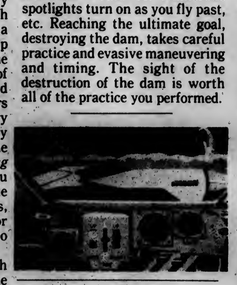
Law Of The West ••••

In Law of the West, you are the sheriff in Gold Gulch, a Western town of many challenges. Utilizing very detailed graphics, Law of the West challenges you to survive to sundown without getting killed by any of the undesirables that pass through the wild west town. The game is entirely joystick-controlled and consist of selecting a choice of four actions for any given response, question or comment from one of the people you meet in the game, from the smooth-talking saloon owner, Miss Rose, to the town doctor. Further actions depend on the selection you make. You can also pull out your gun and shoot any person you may feel is causing trouble.

Whatever you end up doing in the game, you are rated at the end depending on whether you made it to sundown and on several other factors in which you are scored. Examples of these other factors are: how well you did romantically, the number of bad guys you shot and the number of crimes that were committed. These factors are what influence your decisions in the game. Should you or shouldn't you shoot first and ask questions later? Accolade scores another hit with this unusual, moderately difficult game.

PSI 5 Trading Company ••••

Pronounced "sci-five," PSI 5 Trading Company is a highly unique strategical game in which you must ensure the safety of a cargo on your trading ship through the Parvin Frontier. The player acts as the commander of the ship, selecting a crew and giving orders to the crew members that they may or may not carry out, depending on their loyalty and other characteristics. The element that makes PSI 5 Trading Company so unique is that you have a selection of 7,776 possible crews. There are five positions, with six possible candidates for each job, ranging from Al Zott to Grolo.



Play involves contacting each department and asking them the status of affairs there. Then you give your orders and wait to see results. The strategy enters in that you have to carefully select your crew members since one may be very loyal, but a lousy navigator and another may have the worst personality, but the best qualifications and experience. Graphically, PSI 5 is carefully detailed. In the play department, it is a challenging game in that it parallels real life decisions and how to deal with people.

The Dambusters •••••

War games and flight simulators are very popular in the home computer market because of their ease of use as opposed to physical counterparts. Accolade have produced two war game/flight simulator games based on planes and situations from the world wars. The first of these is The Dambusters. As a member of the Royal Air Force, you must pilot your plane into Nazi-occupied Europe and bomb the German dams that are the lifeblood to the Reich.

The startling aspect of The Dambusters is the realism with which you operate. In the bomber, you have eight positions to monitor: pilot, front gunner, tail gunner, bomb specialist, navigator, first engineer, second engineer and status and damage level report. Each of these positions has their own separate screens which you use to perform their functions, from an inventory of ammunition to the windshield with a Nazi warplane staring you down.

The element that makes The Dambusters a hit with me is the excellence of the detail in the graphical representation of the game screens. The night flying that you must do to reach the final target, one of the dams, is as difficult as real night flying in this situation would be. Numerous spotlights turn on as you fly past, etc. Reaching the ultimate goal, destroying the dam, takes careful practice and evasive maneuvering and timing. The sight of the destruction of the dam is worth all of the practice you performed.

Ace of Aces •••••

Ace of Aces is the newest game from Accolade and is based on strategical air combat, just as The Dambusters. Again it is World War II and you are a member of the Royal Air Force. You have a Mosquito bomber and must destroy as many Nazi targets as possible, depending on the mission you select. There are different screens for different functions of the crew and planning out your missions in advance is critical. You can knock out enemy installations, bomb U-boats, etc. you have a map to travel by, thunder storms to fly through, planes to fight in hard combat and ammunition to allocate to your plane. Accolade has designed yet another excellent, graphically pleasing game based on war situations. The possibilities are endless, based on your strategy and whatever the computer throws your way from the Nazis.

Blackstone amazes the Fair

By RUSS CECCOLA

Magic affects different emotions from different people. Some are totally fascinated by a good magic trick or effect while others just find a magician boring and pretentious. There are also different tastes in the type of magic people enjoy. There are simple card and sleight of hand tricks and the monumental illusions in which elephants and airplanes appear or disappear at will. The type of magic depends on the magician.

There are the classic magicians like Harry Houdini and John Scarne and the modern masters of illusion like David Copperfield, Harry Blackstone Jr. and Doug Henning. Copperfield is of the modern bent and performs tricks that play with your mind and thoughts, whereas Blackstone has more of that classic feel. I had the opportunity to see The Blackstone Magic Show before Fall Break and saw the evidence that Harry Blackstone Jr. is at the [illegible] of today's magicians.

Blackstone began the show with his famous birdcage trick in which a small cage with bird included vanishes from his hands, repeating this trick a second time with children of all ages holding onto the cage. Blalckstone inherited this trick from his magician father, The Great Blackstone and it is a classic in his appearances.

It's hard to describe an illusion in words, yet Blackstone's great personality and rapport with his audience almost demand that it must be done. Blackstone uses his audience to perform. Audience response is very important to him as opposed to maybe Copperfield who goes for the larger illusions but is capable of both methods.

Other tricks included making his assistant/wife appear from a seemingly empty cabinet, sawing an unsuspecting man from the audience in half, composing a magic menu from audience suggestions, escaping from multiple knots that audience participants had tied around his arms at the show's finale and performing his famous floating light bulb trick, in which a light bulb floats over after some other person is allowed to examine the bulb. The only problems with the show were that Blackstone wasted too much time on the magic menu and knot escape that he could have been using to perform more illusions. Also, a comedian/juggler from the area broke up the show in the middle to entertain the audience.

Having seen Blackstone about eight years ago at the Irvine Auditorium in the University of Pennsylvania, I can say that his show was a lot better then. There was more of a spectacle to the tricks as opposed to his performance in The Valley Forge Music Fair. No live animals were used at the Fair as in past appearances and television shows.

Still, Harry Blackstone Jr. remains one of the most entertaining musicians for family and friends and is definitely one of the most amazing with his effortless wonders, capable only with practice and dedication. Any interest in magic should be pacified if Blackstone comes to this area again. It is a show worth seeing.

"Goin' Crazy" to give the Spectrum crowd a good show.

TRIUMPH/YNGWIE

By RUSS CECCOLA

Last Friday night, Philadelphia had probably the best show in this entire month of concerts. This could only be the team of Triumph and Yngwie Malmsteen, the guitar genius. Triumph combined all of the industry effects for concerts into one show, which was simply spectacular. Opening was Yngwie Malmsteen who quickly proved why Musician magazine voted him best guitarist in the world.

Yngwie took the stage with "I'll See the Light Tonight" and with an added suprise, vocalist Jeff Scott Soto. Soto had left Malmsteen last year only to return when Marc Boals was kicked out recently on the road. The sound was terrible during Yngwie's set, only sounding better when only one of the band was using the sound system. Still, recognizable "Queen in Love, "Far Beyond the Sun, "Fire," "Icarus' Dream Suite Op. 4," "I Am A Viking," "You Don't, Remember, I'll Never Forget" and "Black Star" brought the crowd to a scream.

Triumph entered stage with the help of the laser image of a man's head speaking to the audience from the center of the Spectrum. From this point, the band launched into 12 incredible numbers, ranging from their first album to their lastest effort, The Sport of Kings. Starting out with two of new songs, "Tears in the Rain" and "Somebody's Out There," the trio which includes Rik Emmett on guitars and vocals, Mike Levine on bass and keyboards and Gil Moore on drums, just played hard while maintaining the quality as it was meant to be.

The crowd responded to the elaborate show and songs that they knew as only a Philadelphia crowd can do, with loud screams and lots of audience participation. Hearing such classics as "Allied Forces," "Follow Your Heart," "Magic Power," "Lay It On the Line," "Spellbound" and "Fight the Good Fight" in an encore, the trio kept the ball rolling through the almost two-hour show.

JOURNEY

By STACEY WILKINS

Despite what the rumor mill has managed to grind out over the past couple years, Journey does indeed remain a group and their performance at the Spectrum October 14 is sound testimony.

Journey opened with a song from the Visionquest soundtrack titled "Only the Young," which proved a powerful opening number to dispel critics who questioned the band's future. Journey remembers where their unprecedented success began so they included many cuts from the Escape alum.

The crowd went wild for favorites such as "Stone in Love," "Who's Crying Now," and an all time favorite Journey love ballad "Open Arms." The show also included songs from lead singer Steve Perry's solo album Street Talk. When Steve donned the trademark Street Talk hat the crowd went wild with the first strains of "Oh Sherrie," later followed by another single from his solo project Strung Out. While the tour was to promote their new album Raised on Radio, only a couple singles were played from the album. They included the current chart hits "Be Good to Yourself," and "Girl Can't Help It."

The band dedicated the tour and album as a tribute to radio. They want the music to be listened to which explains their choice not to make videos for all the singles from Raised on Radio. Special moments in the show included a one-hand guitar solo by lead guitarist Neil Schon and a moving melodic piano piece by keyboardist Jonathan Cain. Both solo efforts did not make up for the obvious absence of a solo from the rhythm section.

Clearly Philadelphia had missed Journey and with good reason, as their performance proved. With the strong core of Steve, Neil and Jonathan and that special sound the Journey will continue.

Kathleen Turner shines in Coppola's hit

By KATIE KRACKELER

"Peggy Sue Got Married"
directed by Francis Ford Coppola

Peggy Sue got married, but now she wants a divorce. This might sound like a typical scenario for a woman in 1986, but wait until you see how director Francis Ford Coppola and producer Paul R. Gurian have turned this typical '80s theme into a rare time-piece, charged with a clever twist that makes Tri-Star Pictures' latest release, "Peggy Sue Got Married," refreshingly entertaining movie that is strikingly thought provoking.

The film opens with Peggy Sue, (Kathleen Turner), a 43-year-old mother of two, attending her 25th high school class reunion. Recently separated from her husband Charlie, (Nicolas Cage), who was also her high school sweetheart, Peggy Sue arrives at her reunion an emotional wreck. As the night progresses, and she sees more of her high school buddies, this feeling of despair heightens, finally culminating in her collapse.

As she regains consciousness, Peggy Sue finds that she is no longer the 43-year-old woman at her reunion, but the 18-year-old Peggy Sue at the 1960 blood drive in her school gymnasium. Turner handles this scene with facility as she struggles to comprehend the fantastic proportions of this situation. Here she is, after 25 years, returning to her hometown as it was in 1960, entering her family home to find her mother a young woman, and her little sister in her girl scout uniform. These images are too much for Peggy Sue to handle all at once, so she takes a few shots of scotch to sooth her nerves. When her father arrives home from work and finds her tipsy and smelling of liquor, he sends her to her room and grounds her.

Although these scenes are a premise for several humorous lines, they portray a surreal, dreamlike quality which inspire feelings of awe and wonderment. One thinks about the aspect of going back and seeing your mother and father and the old home, and feeling and appreciating the love you may have taken for granted at the time.

Yet the focus of the story is not on the development of these emotions, but rather on how, if she wanted to, could Peggy Sue change her destiny. Knowing what she knows now, given the chance to do it all again what choices will she make at 18 to help her to define her self-worth and lead her to a happier, more stable future. The central question that seems to define her destiny is whether she should marry Charlie again.

Charlie is revealed as the unfaithful husband and crazy appliance store salesman in the opening scene of the movie. Yet as an 18-year-old — aspiring musician, Charlie is a likable character. The fun-loving, schoolboy innocence of Charlie's sincere oaths of life-long love contrast sharply with Peggy Sues cynical view of their love after 25 years of marriage. The scenes with these two together are very funny as Charlie tries to woo Peggy Sue with romantic speeches while Peggy Sue tries to psychoanalyze the whole situation.

The quality of the acting in this film can be seen in the ease in which the actors are able to play both ages in Peggy Sue's past and present life. This duality in the characters' roles helps to create the humor behind how they are when they show up at the reunion as opposed to what their dreams and aspirations were as high school seniors.

Kathleen Turner does a remarkable job developing the character of Peggy Sue. She is able to portray so many different emotions, and is able to show feelings in situations that are both touching and humorous. Nicolas Cage, on the other hand, gives a different kind of performance. he seems to branch out in an almost cartoon-type character which remarkably enhances his role and saves him from being a "typical" leading man.

So it seems that after a string of box office flops, Francis Ford Coppola has once again come up with a movie that "works." The characters, the setting, the dialogue, and even the music fit together smoothly to create a pleasing result.

It is a movie of the '80s, based on the graduating class of 1960 as they embarked on their lives after high school, leaving the last of their innocence behind. This links itself with that time in the history of our country when we left the innocence of the 1950s and entered into the social upheaval of the 1960s which matured our country irreversibly. So, rather than simply being a knee-slapper comedy about a woman being thrown back in time, "Peggy Sue Got Married" has substance. This film will make you laugh and leave you with some interesting thoughts about your own destiny.

If you have not seen a really entertaining, substantial movie in a long time, then go see "Peggy Sue Got Married." It really is different and will prove to be a lot of fun.

Here Peggy Sue (Kathleen Turner) is crowned Queen of the 25th reunion along with fellow classmate, Richard Norvik (Barry Miller).

Los Angeles, Calif. — This fall, Lazer Tag™ will be the fastest moving game on college campuses as part of the inaugural Lazer Tag National College Championship Tournament. Introduced by Worlds of Wonder, Inc., maker of last year's Christmas sensation, Teddy Ruxpin®, Lazer Tag is a new game which allows players to "tag" each other and score points using harmless infrared light beams, LED displays and futuristic sounds.

The Lazer Tag National College Championship Tournament, which will be conducted in eight cities, will feature a fast-paced version of Lazer Tag, designed especially for college intramural programs. This version will be easily adaptable for playing at home as well.

Each college has had an overwhelming response by students wanting to register for their school's official Lazer Tag campus [illegible]. The Lazer Tag Games will begin early October as part of each college's intramural sports program. The championship team from each campus will represent their school in the regional playoffs (schedule below). The winning team from each regional playoff will be flown to Los Angeles for the semi-finals in Los Angeles on Dec. 2, with the final championship game on Dec. 3. Players of the final championship winning team will receive an all-expense paid trip to the MTV New Year's Eve Party in New York City.

Lazer Tag National College Tournament teams will consist of two male and two female players. Games are played on a 100-foot-by-50-foot playing field. Each half of the field contains three barriers, which shield players from the oppositions' StarLytes™, as well as a StarBase, located at the center of each end line.

Each 90-second game consists of a 30-second "offensive" period, a 30-second "defensive" period and a 30-second "open" period. The object of each game is to: 1) register a maximum number of tags on opposing players (worth one point each) and on the opposing StarBase (worth two points each), or 2) tag out two players from the opposing team (six tags on each). A team will be declared the winner of a game if they have accumulated more points (players plus StarBase) at the end of the 90-second game.

In the game held in the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse, the Villanova "Vipers" lost to their University of Pennsylvania opponents. The game is under protest and at press time had not been resolved.

Lazer Tag, the latest craze from the creators of Teddy Ruxpin, was played in the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse for the right to go to Los Angeles to participate in the national championships.

Ruggers secure bid

By SHANA LYNCH

While achieving its 397th club victory over Lehigh, the Nova Ruggers also secured themselves a spot in the National Collegiate Rugby Championship tournament in the spring. This strong team concluded divisional play by whomping Lehigh into the pitch.

The A side kicked off the afternoon with a 34-6 demolition over the boys from Bethlehem. The metropolitan Carlo DiNato opened the scoring, with Lands End's own Star Trek following suit shortly thereafter. Chris "McDonald" McStarr, Mike "Snook" Koons, and Denis "Headgear" Graeber also contributed tries. Tim Whelen had an above average day kicking, but yet he pointed out that, "I think the kicks would be a lot easier if they just put it in the middle."

The B side trounced the opposition 44-0. And when game MVP Joe Staib's name is mentioned, determination is the word that comes to mind. Staib is presently overcoming a personal handicap in order to play each week, and as the real Mike Burke noted, "He's been an inspiration to us all."

The scoring of this brilliantly officiated match occurred at random. Buck "Sat" Reitmeyer, Ken "O.J." Justice, Greg "Pesot" LeMond, and Dave "The Dog" Walsh all scored a try. But it was Stripe McMorrow and Brian "Steamtrain" Cogs who each scored two tries while fine performances were turned in by Pete, Cody and someone named Mike.

The next really big game is on Homecoming versus Haverford. It should be a fun time had by all, so be there, or Buck will get angrier.

Volleyball wins three

By JOHN RICCO

The Villanova volleyball team improved its overall record to 16-11 with three impressive road victories last week. The team easily defeated both North Carolina (Wilmington) 15-6, 6-15, 15-9, 15-4 and East Carolina University 6-15, 15-4, 15-6, 15-13 before moving on to Virginia to face the Cavaliers in what Head coach Dennis McGinnis called, "Definitely the toughest came of the three." The Wildcats lost two of the first three games 15-9, 5-15, 11-15, but fought back to win the last two 15-10, 15-13 and gain the victory.

Coach McGinnis was mildly surprised at his squad's three-game sweep. "I thought we could beat East Carolina and North Carolina [Wilmington]," he said, "but I was a bit hesitant about facing Virginia on their home court."

Turning in fine performances for the Wildcats were juniors Lori Reiter and Helen Hnat and senior Mia Grosso. Grosso, the only senior on the team, earned praise from her coach for her play last week. Coach McGinnis said, "Mia has done a great job all year. She's the catalyst of our club, she holds the team together."

Coach McGinnis has high hopes for his team after its superb performance last week. He said, "If we continue the caliber of play we are at now, we have a real good shot at third place in the Big East behind Pittsburgh and Providence."

Women win pair

By TOM HUNTER

The Villanova women's soccer team spent the break playing Monmouth and Scranton. In both instances the Lady Cats were successful and upped their record to a very impressive 11-3-3.

At home against a tough Monmouth squad, the Cats spotted Monmouth a 1-0 first half lead. Villanova come storming back in the second half lead by super sophomore Ann Beirne. Beirne, from Dublin Ireland scored the first Villanova goal just a couple of minutes into the half. This goal sparked the Cats and was followed by another by senior Ann Brennan, to give Villanova a 2-1 advantage. Sophonore Jean Hajjar finished off the scoring with a blast towards the end of the game.

On Saturday, the Cats took to the field once more and again emerged victorious, this time a close 2-1 game over Scranton. The star in this game was Brennan, who scored both goals one in each half of the game. Junior goalie Lynn McHale played another outstanding game in the Villanova nets making numerous difficult saves to preserve the shut-out.

On the season, McHale has allowed an incredible low of only 15 goals while amassing 88 saves. McHale has eight shut-outs so far this season.

Brennan leads Villanova's scorers, as of Monday, with 10 goals and is followed by Hajjar with eight and Beirne who has seven.

Women runners ranked 5th

In this month's release of Track & Field News, the Villanova Men's Track team was ranked fifth in the country according to the magazine's rating system.

Points are awarded on the composite showings of the teams in five categories: NCAA Outdoor Championships, NCAA Cross Country Championships, NCAA Indoor Championships, Track & Field News' Dual Meet and relay rankings. Points range from 10-1 with 10 points being awarded to the champion. Villanova scored 16 points overall, nine for its performance in the Indoor season and seven for its relay showings.

Hoopsters hurt

Villanova's Men's basketball team suffered two setbacks this past weekend because of injuries. Senior Wyatt Maker and freshman Rodney Taylor both went down with injuries which will keep them out of preseason practice for about a month. Maker, a six-foot, 11-inch center, has undergone arthroscopic surgery on his right knee and was expected to be the Cats' starting center.

Taylor suffered a broken metatarsal bone in his left foot and could be out longer than Maker. This is similar to the type suffered by Bill Walton, when he was playing with the Portland Trailblazers, and Bill Cartwright of the New York Knicks.

Men's Hoop 5th in Big East

Street & Smith Basketball Magazine, considered to be one of the best on collegiate basketball, predicted a fifth place finish for the Villanova Wildcats in the Big East Conference this season. Ahead of the Cats were No. 1 Georgetown, Syracuse, St. John's and Pittsburgh.

NFL drug-testing plan struck down

Arbitrator Richard Kasher last Sunday struck down NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle's plan to randomly drug test football players twice during the season. Kasher ruled that the drug-testing conflicted with the league's bargaining agreement reached with the NFL Players Association. Kasher reached his decision after hearings in New York City, Philadelphia and Washington.

Drugs in college athletics

By PETER M. GARAFOLA

(Press release courtesy of Reader's Digest)

Big-time college athletics is mired in scandal. Top high-school athletes are lured by recruiters with under-the-table payments. Players who can barely read or write are admitted to well-known colleges, then kept academically eligible just so they can compete in sports. Coaches, alumni and school boosters regularly bend and break rules, all in the name of victory.

The bottom line is cold, hard cash, reports the October Reader's Digest. Winning guarantees income. Football alone can generate up to $10 million a year in some schools. Last season 18 bowl games disbursed over $40 million.

Schools will often do almost anything to ensure success. The NCAA revealed this year that Texas Christian University boosters handed over cash payments of $49,025 to one student and $37,500 to another. In New Orleans, Tulane University abolished its varsity basketball team following disclosure that players were paid to take part in a point-shaving scheme.

As if all this were not enough, the specter of drugs hangs over American athletic programs. At Clemson University, in South Carolina, three former coaches pleaded guilty to illegally dispensing steroids and phenylbutazone, an anti-inflammatory agent. At the University of Maryland, Len Bias, No. 1 draft choice of the Boston Celtics, died in June of cocaine intoxication.

Hurt most by schools looking the other way are the student athletes themselves. Bias's death was followed by the revelation that he had not passed a single academic course last spring. In 1982, basketball player Kevin Ross confirmed the shocking story that he had played four seasons for Creighton University even though his reading and writing ability was no better than grade-school level. Only a minute fraction of these student athletes ever become professional athletes. Once their college eligibility is used up, most are left to fend for themselves as best they can.

Without a doubt, reform in college sports is sorely needed, and the NCAA is making a start. This year the NCAA began phasing in a significant rule change affecting academic eligibility for athletes. Known as Proposition 48, the measure is scheduled to be fully implemented by 1988. At that time, for athletes to be eligible, they must have achieved a 2.0 (C) high-school grade-point average in a core curriculum of 11 academic subjects, as well as a minimum combined score of 700 out of 1600 in the SAT, or a composite score of 15 out of 35 in the ACT Assessment Program. The NCAA has also approved drug testing at football-bowl games and at selected NCAA championship events.

Reader's Digest suggests the following additional steps:

1. Declare freshmen ineligible for varsity sports. Freshmen need time to adjust to college life.

2. Require satisfactory progress toward a degree. Student athletes must be required to fulfill the same core-curriculum requirements as non-athletes. No student should be allowed to play varsity sports unless he or she is on schedule to graduate within five years.

3. Integrate athletes into campus life. Athletic dorms should be abolished, seasons shortened and practice requirements reduced.

4. Make drug testing mandatory. For those who test positive, one violation should result in suspension from varsity sports, and drug counseling. Two more violations should bar the individual from intercollegiate athletics.

5. Share television revenues equally. TV income should be shared among all schools playing big-time sports — not just the ones that appear on TV.

6. Ban boosters. They should have no place in the recuiting of athletes. Fund-raising should be controlled by the college president and not by partnerships of semi-autonomous athletic departments and boosters clubs.

7. Increase financial aid. Since the NCAA prohibits student athletes from holding jobs during the academic year, they should be given a stipend to cover basic necessities.

Villanova 20, Catholic 7

The second game found the weather about the same and the Villanova Wildcats still purrfect.

Villanova started out a little rocky turning over the ball on their own 40. The Catholic University Cardinals took over, but failed to move the ball and then failed to convert their 51-yard field goal attempt. Villanova then started out again trying to atone for their mistakes ... they did, running the ball down the field and into the endzone. However, they were denied the extra point. The ball was batted back and forth between the Cardinals and the Wildcats until 9:52 in the second quarter when the Wildcats punched the ball over the goal line again from the one.

Villanova was not done. After forcing the Cardinals to punt, Villanova drove from their own 29-yard line, down the field, and into the Catholic University end zone. The first half ended Villanova 20, Catholic 0.

The fourth quarter saw very little action and no further scoring by the Wildcats.

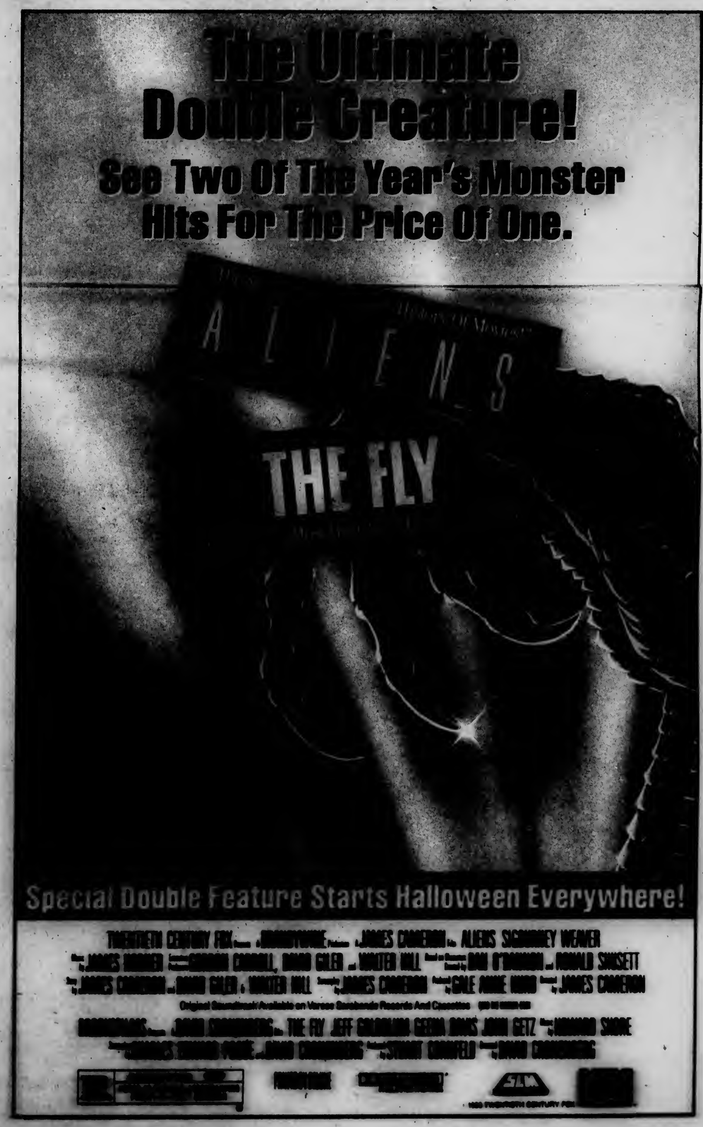
Coach Dr. Robert Langran

The women's tennis team concluded a successful 1986 campaign this week. The Lady Cats dominated their opposition in October, compiling a 7-2 record and outscoring their opponents by a total of 63 to 14. The team finished with an overall record of 13-6, a marked improvement over last year's 10-10 record. Under the winningest coach in Villanova history, Dr. Robert Langran, the Wildcats have not had a losing season in 14 years.

The team collected victories against West Chester, Lafayette, LaSalle, Concordia, Drexel, Glassboro and St. Joseph's while falling to St. John's and Lehigh. Both setbacks came by the score of 5-4.



In the Big East Conference Championships, however, the team did not fare as well. The Wildcats grabbed sixth place behind Boston College, Syracuse, Georgetown, St. Johns and Providence.

The championships, however, were not without bright spots for the host team. Freshman Stacy Hall survived into the third round before falling to Boston College's Baret Hana in No. 5 singles play. Also faring well was Villanova's No. 2 doubles team. Freshman Lynn Slowinski and junior Janet Lowe advanced to the third round before falling to four-time Big East champions Stephanie Rice and Amy Schiff of Syracuse.

Cats beat on a triad of foes

Chip Kron Found that trying to rush against the Villanova defense was not worth the effort. Applying the hit for the Cats is senior John McGowan.

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

After losing to Buffalo University on Parents' Weekend, the Villanova University football team rebounded with three straight wins. The Wildcats ran unscathed through the defenses of Fordham, Catholic and Ursinus.

In their most recent victory, there was a perfect football setting encompassing the Villanova campus. Goodreau field lay under overcast skies, the air was a comfortable 62 degrees and there was a slight wind out of the west. It was here that the Wildcats invited their prey.

Gary Pascoe and Ron Sency combined for 227 of the Wildcat's 372 yards on the ground, while the defense drove Ursinus into the turf allowing only 18 yards rushing. Sency scored two touchdowns in the 34-16 win.

The game started off very sloppy and very slow. Ursinus kicked off and after fumbling the reception, Villanova started at their own 20. It wasn't until three turnovers, four punts and four penalties later that Villanova got on track and drew first blood. The drive started at the Villanova 46. Schulz completed two passes, one for 10 yards and the other for eight.

It was here on second down at the Ursinus 36 that Villanova capped off its drive with a 36-yard dash up the middle by Peter Lombardi for a touchdown. With 2:10 remaining, Villanova kicked off feeling confident in ending the quarter with a lead. Ursinus, however, was not going to play dead. They took the ball and with a 55-yard completion scored with 0:05 left on the clock.

Schulz started off the second quarter with a bobbled snap, and a fine recovery which he ran down to the Ursinus 14-yard line. Sency followed up the 54-yard run with a 14-yard run of his own into the endzone. Again, Ursinus wouldn't let the Wildcats rest. They rolled over the defense until the Villanova 8-yard line where they settled for a field goal bringing the score to 14-10.

The half ended with the Wildcats up by four, and one very upset coach. It was not a happy halftime locker room. In the words of Coach Andy Talley, "At halftime, I had to get at the players which I normally don't do. I had to emotionally challenge them and get in some of the players' faces."

The halftime pep talk obviously worked. Villanova came out on fire, running the ball down the field and into the endzone in one minute and 53 seconds. Talley's halftime harassment didn't wear off for the defense, as 'Nova stopped the Bears in four plays.

The Wildcats then, for the second time in a row, marched down the field and into the endzone.

Ursinus then unleashed a little offensive power of their own. The Bears scored a touchdown, but failed the extra point and the third period ended Villanova 28-16.

To start the fourth period, Villanova took the ball and marched down to the Ursinus 15. Todd Schaeffer then walked on the field to attempt a field goal. The attempt was blocked, but Ursinus made nothing of it. Two turnovers and one punt later Villanova took over again and drove in for a touchdown. The extra point was missed and Villanova had gone up 34-16. There was no further scoring and Villanova had completed their two weeks of perfect football.

Although Wildcats all over were elated that the winning spirit had returned to the Villanova campus, there was one Wildcat that was still displeased, Coach Andrew Talley. Talley had these words to say following the game, "I'm not satisfied with the progress of the team; we have a very long way to go. We just don't have the hardness yet."

Villanova 52, Fordham 14

The Wildcats started their three-week win streak with a crushing victory over the Fordham Rams. The weather was again perfect and the Wildcats weren't too shabby either. 'Nova went out and stopped the Rams in four plays and then took off down the field and right into the endzone.

The second quarter again found the Wildcats in the driver's seat. 'Nova outscored the Rams 14-7 and walked into the locker room ahead 28-7. Villanova then came out in the third quarter to add to their lead with touchdown passes to Downs, Cashman and Brady. The third quarter ended with Villanova up by 42 points. The fourth quarter was more of the

Huber places first

Women win Big East title

By SUSAN GANEM

The women's cross country team won the Philadelphia Big 5 Championships and regained the Big East Championships crowns behind outstanding performances by Vicki Huber and Gina Procaccio, who tied for first place in the Big Five and finished one-two respectively in the Big East.

The two team titles were very important to Coach Marty Stern who commented on the two meets. "Gina and Vicki were just super. I'm very proud that Vicki Huber is the Big East champion — she certainly deserves that honor. Gina, in addition to being a great athlete, is an excellent leader and helped bring our team together as a solid unit."

The harriers won the Big Five meet soundly over second place University of Pennsylvania, who scored 54 points to the Wildcats' 20. St. Joseph's and La Salle finished third and fourth, respectively.

Huber and Procaccio finished the 2.9 mile course in 16:20. Following them across the line were Dolores Carapella (fourth — 16:40), Dina Alborano (sixth — 16:45), Lauren Searby (seventh — 16:49), Ruth Lockbaum (eighth — 16:53), Meg Moisen (12th — 17:22), Jenny Rahn (13th — 17:33), Maureen Breen (14th — 17:34), Tina Mahar (15th — 17:40), and Elaine Duck (19th — 18:01).

At the Big East meet in Boston, Huber finished the 3.1 mile course in a blazing 16:33. Procaccio was next, finishing second in 17:04, followed by Searby (sixth — 17:21), Carapella (10th — 17:29), Alborna (16th — 17:34), Lockbaum (17th — 17:39), Moisen (19th — 17:41), and Rahn (30th — 18:31).

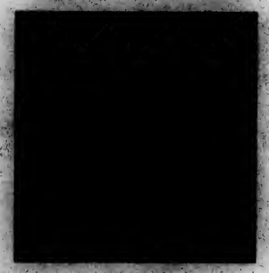
Franklin Park in Boston was the place were Villanova captured its cross country crown. Vicki Huber (arm across number) of Villanova crossed the line first.

The team scored 35 points, to dethrone defending champions Boston College, who finished with 52 points. "All of the women contributed enormously to our win. What wins a meet is the lowest team total, and they certainly accomplished what we set out to do," commented Stern. "We're looking forward to the NCAA Regional meet on Nov. 15, and we are working hard in preparation for that day. We want to go to Arizona [site of national meet] to prove how good we are."

The men's team had a successful outing in Boston, taking third place behind Georgetown and Providence. Leading the way for the 'Cats was senior Gary O'Reilly, who won the 5.1 mile race in a course record 24:35. In all, Villanova placed three runners in the top-ten. Roy Masolino (fourth — 25:23) and Sean O'Neill (fifth — 25:29) rounded out the 'Cats top scorers.



Also running well for Villanova were Ken Fowler (29th — 26:55), Jan Friedli (41st — 27:19), Curt Koehler (46th — 27:30), Gene Mitchell (73rd — 28:31), and Bruce Harris (77th — 28:44).

The team scores for the Big East meet were champion Georgetown — 63, Providence — 75, VILLANOVA — 80, Boston College — 82, Pittsburgh — 128, Connecticut and Syracuse — 145, St. John's — 159, and Seton Hall — 255.

Both teams will take a three-week hiatus to prepare for the NCAA Regional meet at Lehigh University on Nov. 15.

Athlete of the Week

Vicki Huber

This week's Saco East athlete of the week is women's cross country team member Vicki Huber. In the past two weeks, Huber won both the Big Five (tied with Gina Procaccio) and the Big East titles. In all five of this season's meets, Huber has finished either first or second.

The sophomore liberal arts major from Wilmington, Del., has been a standout for the indoor and outdoor track teams besides the cross country team. She competes in the 800 meter and 1500 meter events for the Wildcats.

Huber's personal bests are: 1000 meters — 2:52; 1500 meters — 4:21; and 3000 meters — 9:31. This season, Huber has completed a 5000 meter course in 17:21.

Fall Break week kept

By NOEL E. FALCO

The University Senate passed a motion Oct. 31 to keep intact a full-week Fall Break, even at the cost of starting class before Labor Day. The Senate spent close to one hour and 45 minutes in debate before reaching its decision by a vote of 19 in favor, 11 against and 3 abstentions.

The Senate, which is composed of 41 members (13 students, 13 faculty members, 13 administrators and 2 alumni), debated the issue, which soon broke down into student concerns versus faculty concerns.

The calendar, supported by the students, led in debate by Student Government President Joe Allman, called for starting classes on Sept. 2, before Labor Day, to gain a full-week break, and to end the semester with a week of finals from Dec. 14-19.

The calendar, proposed by Dr. Rodger Van Allen, professor of religious studies, begins classes on the Wednesday after Labor Day (Sept. 9), instituting a five-day break from Saturday to Wednesday and ends the semester with finals from Dec. 18-23. In the years when Labor Day falls early it allows for the full break.

Both parties supported a Fall Break. However, the controversy centered on which way the academic calendar would be adjusted to allow for a break.

The fall semester is one which is locked between two holidays, Labor Day and Christmas.

Neither students nor faculty wished to return for finals after Christmas break in order to create a full-week break, as suggested by Frank Zarilli, an alumni senator. This limited the choice to a pre-Labor Day, early Christmas, full-week break package versus a post-Labor Day, late Christmas, partial break proposal. In order to add two days to the break, a sacrifice of returning seven days earlier would have to be made.

Allman's proposal started the debate and was fortified by his statement that the Student Government "strongly supports a full-week break, even at this cost [returning before Labor Day]."

Allman also advanced the idea that a full-week break eased student stress, reading a letter in support of this theory written by Joan Greenhouse Whitney of the Counseling Center. Whitney favored a break as beneficial for students to escape from the campus setting, and essential to the disturbed (overly-stressed) student.

Van Allen countered this by quoting a letter from Whitney in 1983 on the same issue that stated "If providing a break required starting school in August [i.e. before Labor Day in this context], for example, we would add new stresses to students' lives. If it required having exams after Christmas, again, we'd be introducing a new stress."

College of Commerce and Finance Dean Alvin A. Clay, a faculty senator, opposed a pre-Labor Day start, fearing it would cut short the vacations of faculty, staff and those involved in the summer graduate programs.

Van Allen quoted faculty members surveyed on the issue who were opposed based on the Government wins secession okay

By ELIA DiTADDEO

The secession of Student Government from the department of Student Activities was approved last Tuesday, Student Government President Joe Allman said this week.

Allman stressed that "secession" is not the best word to use in describing Student Government's actions, saying that its connotation carries negative overtones.

"We are redefining what Student Government is this year," explained Allman. "It is not just a club, activity, or organization. Surveys taken by Student Government show that most people are surprised to learn that Student Government is included under Student Activities."

Allman noted, "We are a process . . . a movement participated in by students to better Villanova University. In this respect a uniqueness exists concerning Student Government. It affects the day to day life of the Villanova community."

Democrats gain control of Senate

By ROBERT M. JORDAN

The Democratic Party gained control of the U.S. Senate, now holding 55 seats for the Republicans, and voters in Pennsylvania split their tickets on election day, electing Democrat Bob Casey for governor and Republican Arlen Specter for senator.

Casey, a man who had lost three times before in his bid to become governor, won on his fourth try, narrowly defeating William Scranton III. The margin of victory was small, however, with Casey gaining 51 percent of the vote compared to Scranton's 49 percent.

Incumbent Specter's margin of victory over challenger Bob Edgar was larger, with the Republican senator amassing 56 percent of the vote to the Democratic U.S. representative's 44 percent share of the turnout.

Liability concerns force V.U. to use caution

By JOANNE L. CONRAD

Although liability insurance has become increasingly in short supply nationwide, Villanova has been able to maintain virtually all of its insurance coverage, Gary B. Fenner, vice president for Financial Affairs, said recently.

Despite increases in insurance premiums and concern about potential liability lawsuit risks, Fenner said that no activities have been cut back because of insurance or liability. Moreover, according to Fenner, "[when we do something new, insurance is immediately under some review and] all of the Commonwealth's insurance is a prime consideration."

activities more carefully.

The Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., assistant to the vice president for Student Life, said that when Villanova changed its alcohol policy prior to the 1984-85 school year, it was not really a change because, "Underage students always had to abide by the state law. What happened was that the rules [Villanova's] became more enforced."

Martin said that in Pennsylvania there is a social host liability law which says that persons are prohibited from "furnishing" alcoholic beverages to minors. He stated, "Universities that are aware of this ruling therefore probably won't serve beverages to minors because no policies exist to create a third-party liability."

[illegible]

"Most [intramural participants] are covered under their parents' insurance policies. But this coverage is only to a certain point. After that point [when the money limit of coverage is exceeded], it's unknown who would pick up the tab. Villanova or the students."

[illegible]

when students consume alcoholic beverages in their rooms, without the University dispensing the beverages, the University isn't vulnerable to third-party liability. We must dispense or furnish beverages for the third-party liability to attach."

Martin said that because of the increase in third-party liability suits, most universities will generally do everything they can to comply with state alcohol laws. "It's a sign of the times, something that society wants and that law enforcement agencies will enforce."

Athletics Affected

Along with becoming conscious of lawsuit risks, Fenner said that the University has become more cautious overall when it comes to insurance. Although Villanova has been able to maintain virtually all of its coverage, Fenner indicated that the one area that Villanova has had difficulty in securing insurance coverage for was intramurals.

"Every institution is having problems with intramurals," he said. "Hartford [Insurance Company], up to a year or so ago, provided coverage for intramurals, but they notified us about a year ago that they would no longer."

According to Fenner, a contributing factor to the withdrawal of coverage was "a great fear of athletic injury because it can mushroom into a major lawsuit."

According to Theodore A. Aceto, director of Athletics, the approximately 1,160 students who participate in intramural sports sign a waiver that says they will not hold the University liable in case of injury.

Fenner said that getting insurance coverage for varsity athletics is not a problem because several years ago, the National

Paper service revamped

By SIOBHAN A. RODER

The Philadelphia Inquirer is no longer being delivered to on-campus residents by the Villanova Students News Service, but under a revamped system begun last week, will be delivered by two new carriers, according to Faythe Benson of the circulation marketing department of The Inquirer.

The Villanova Student News Service is also no longer delivering The New York Times, according to Paul Rosenbaum, head of the Villanova Student News Service. However, the news service is still delivering The Wall Street Journal, the Daily News and USA Today.

Benson said that The Inquirer was no longer having the news service deliver the Inquirer because of a "personnel issue with Rosenbaum." She added, "He [Rosenbaum] wasn't able to respond to what we needed."

Benson and Mike Allen, the circulation sales representative of The New York Times, visited Villanova and met with Rosenbaum at the beginning of October to investigate complaints from students that there were delivery problems with their subscriptions. Allen could not be reached for comment.

Benson said that The Inquirer is reimbursing students for all of the papers they have missed this semester. In addition, "The Inquirer will be reimbursing students for all Saturday issues, since they are unable to provide Saturday service.

According to Benson, the two carriers are delivering The Inquirer on campus on weekdays and Sundays only. She said that The Inquirer plans to continue this method of delivery for the time being. In an Oct. 31 letter sent to Villanova student subscribers, Benson stated that, "As a result of this year's experience, all representatives/carriers will be approved by the Dean of Students Office, and all checks will be made out directly to The Inquirer."

The letter also said that Benson hopes "to have all reimbursements issued within two to three weeks." Benson said that anyone whom she had not spoken to about missed papers should contact her at 854-5535 to inform her of the number of papers missed.

Benson said that The Inquirer wants "to serve our customers by giving them more information, such as the names and numbers of carriers and dates for when the subscriptions begin and end. Our main objective is to serve the students."

Rosenbaum said that he does not "know what the problems were" earlier in the semester about delivery of subscriptions. He said he had no problem with the way The New York Times and The Inquirer handled the situation by changing the system of delivery at Villanova. He also stated that it is "a lot easier" for him now with only three papers to deliver.

Union Board leaders quit

By NATALIE McKENNA

Four members of the Villanova Union Executive Board recently resigned from their positions. One resigning member, Mike D'Nato, stated "I was putting in so much time, there was a strain on school work."

D'Nato, recreational coordinator; Colleen Mooney, social Functions coordinator, Evelyn Murphy, major events coordinator, and Erin Farley, visual arts coordinator, left their positions on the Union Executive Board.

Mooney, D'Nato and Farley resigned on Sept. 15. Murphy, who wanted to complete the Union's Parents' Weekend event, resigned her position on Oct. 6.

D'Nato, Murphy and Mooney, all seniors, agreed that their positions were time-consuming. Murphy stated, "It's too much aggravation and stress for a volunteer ... It's almost like a part-time job." Murphy also added that board members give an average of 10 hours a week to the Union.

Mooney, a Union member for four years, and an Executive Board member for three years, stated that "A student is a student first and on the Executive Board second. When it came close to the events, I would often blow off class and studying."

Gary Bonas, assistant director for Student Activities, explained that there often exists a "domino effect" of resignations in student organizations. Bonas stated that "People have time and join the activities at the beginning of the fall and spring semesters ... as the year progresses, people get tied down with school work and have to leave the organizations."

Lucyna Gorski, director of Student Activities, said that Union Executive Board members are a "hard-working group of people ... The pressure every once in a while is too much ... Some of the members are overworked."

Mooney commented, "I'm sure it happens with all activities on campus. Some people expect too much time and effort devoted to the activity. We are really here to study first."

D'Nato added, "We weren't appreciated ... There was so much strain, the fun went out of it for me."

"A lot of changes are going to take place in the Union, a whole new organization could get started," D'Nato said.

Maria Breck, president of the Union, will be the acting social functions coordinator. The new recreational coordinator is John Price, and the new visual arts coordinator is Pete Burke. The new coordinator of concerts, festivals and social functions is Lisa Sheehy.

Breck stated, "All of the new people have adjusted well and the events that have been planned are still being programmed."

Special Olympics hosted

By CAROLYN R. MIRABILE and MARY E. CHAREST

Approximately 500 Villanova students contributed to the success of the eighth annual Special Olympics for handicapped children at Villanova Nov. 2, according to Karen Dunne, vice chairperson for Special Olympics.

Although it rained and several last-minute changes had to be made, Lisa Lestishock, chairperson for Special Olympics, said that she thought it went well. "We thought that the opening ceremonies were much more exciting inside, so something good came out of the rain," she said.

Nearly 140 athletes from counties in the Philadelphia area came to Villanova to participate in the Special Olympics Eastern Pennsylvania State Soccer Tournament. The tournament included team soccer as well as a developmental skills competition for less functional athletes, explained Lestishock.

For the first time, the Mini-Marathon was not held at Villanova. Dunne explained that the marathon schedule conflicted with the interstate marathon schedule.

The athletes also had the opportunity to take part in various special events sponsored by fraternities and sororities. The football and basketball players also offered clinics to the athletes.

The day started off at the John "Jake" Nevin Fieldhouse, where students from various music activity groups performed. The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, then said the opening prayer. Bella Mesimino, head basketball coach, administered the Special Olympics oath and officially declared the games open.

A Special Olympics athlete, along with Marcus O'Sullivan, a 1984 Villanova graduate and an Irish olympian, carried the Special Olympic torch.

Special Olympics at Villanova has the distinction of being one of only two student-run Special Olympics held in Pennsylvania. Approximately 22 students spend a year organizing the games and nearly 300 students participate as huggers, guides for the athletes, during the games.

Investment issue sent to board

The Investments and Endowment Committee decided last week to refer the issue of the University's investments in companies doing business in South Africa to the Board of Trustees' meeting in December, according to Edward J. Caughlin, chairman of the committee.

Any possible changes in the University's position will be considered at the board's meeting in December.

Caughlin stated that the University's position is now based on its accord with the Sullivan Principles. The University currently invests in companies doing business in South Africa only if they follow those principles.

Caughlin said that if the Sullivan Principles are changed by their creator, the Rev. Leon Sullivan, those changes will be considered in regard to the University's position. However, he stated that the University would not simply comply to such changes, but would review them before making a decision.

The board and the committee are concerned with the "moral status of our position," Caughlin said.

A letter was received from the Anti-Apartheid Coalition, according to Caughlin. The letter asked the board to clarify the status of the University's investments.

Flooding closes dining hall

Residents of south campus had to eat lunch in Dougherty Hall on Monday because of flooding in Donahue Hall, the south campus dining hall.

The flooding situation was caused by a clogged drain on south campus. Because the dining hall is the lowest point in that area, all the excess water from St. Monica's, Katharine and Stanford halls ran down into Donahue.

The flood began shortly after 8 a.m. and spread into the kitchen and serving areas and part of the dining area.

The hall was closed for lunch to enable clean-up procedures. It reopened in time for south campus residents to eat dinner there.

Report criticizes higher education

By SUSAN CORCORAN

The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching recently issued an attack on American undergraduate colleges, concluding that the colleges are better qualified at awarding degrees than providing students with a solid education.

The report agrees with many comments made last month by Secretary of Education William J. Bennett in a speech given at Harvard University.

The report, entitled "College: The Undergraduate Experience in America," written by Carnegie President Ernest L. Boyer, summarized the three year, $1 million study done on the quality of the nation's 2,000 four-year colleges, which educate more than 5 million students. The study consisted of surveys and reports from over 1,000 faculty members and students, as well as actual inspections of 29 campuses.

Boyer stated that although America's college education remained "the envy of the world, the undergraduate college — the very heart of higher learning — is a troubled institution."

The report has moved state legislation in all parts of the United States to agree to incorporate steps to improve the higher education system. The steps include merit pay for excellent teachers, as well as stiffer requirements for high school graduation.

The push to improve the college-level education system has received much support from state legislators and corporate leaders, who fear that the quality of American education will not sufficiently enable the nation to compete against Japan and other economically sophisticated countries in later years.

The Carnegie Report challenges colleges to make several major changes in their admissions and teaching processes, including efforts to:

* Simplify the selection process and end the requirement of standardized tests such as the SAT (Scholastic Aptitude Test) for high school seniors unless the college definitely uses the scores for admission decisions. The survey advised students to visit their prospective schools and investigate the school's curiculum.

* Require all college seniors to write a thesis and present it to their peers orally.

* Slow down athletic programs that are overpowering the educational part of a college education. (The report suggests that the major sports powers cut recruiting budgets and encourage faculty and students to "organize a day of protest.")

* Restrict the use of part-time faculty members which has grown to 25 percent of the college teaching staff. (The survey said that part-timers are often insecure and uncomfortable in the college atmosphere and not easily accessible to the students for questions.)

* Upgrade the general education requirements and require students to take courses in all areas of study, including art, nature, language, work and cultural identity

* Reward excellent teaching and end pressure placed on college professors to constantly do research

* Ask students to formally evaluate their teachers and teaching practices.

Full-week break approved

facts that the first three days would be an academic waste when followed by Labor Day weekend and that it was not "natural" to start school before Labor Day.

Van Allen supported this, stating that, "In the 1985-86 [academic year], after experiencing a beginning of classes the Wednesday before Labor Day to achieve the full week Fall Break, the Senate passed Resolution US 8586-2-1 specifying that classes not start before Labor Day."

This resolution, coupled with the one made in 1982-83, which instituted a week-long break, created the conflict for which the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president "requested a clarification of policy in reconciling these two resolutions in years in which Labor Day falls on Sept. 6 or 7," according to Van Allen.

Other faculty and administration Senate members, along with Van Allen, expressed a concern for the deprivation of "essential summer jobs" and Labor Day bonuses for students if they had to return to school early.

Van Allen, in a later interview, said, "No matter how you cut it, the whole student body has lost a whole week's income."

Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life and a supporter of a full-week break, and Allman both cited that classes would only start before Labor Day to maintain the week break in those years when the holiday fell late in September.

Dr. Harry R. Strack, professor of political science, brought up a survey of 32 universities in which 20 universities had no Fall Break and another six had a one or two day break. He said that "a three-day break is more generous and liberal than 26 other universities."

Student senators consistently brought up the factors of stress and finance, stating that a short break is not worth it for those who have extensive travel costs and long trips to make.

Strack replied to this that, "Harvard and MIT don't have a full-week break. Are the students at Villanova more stressed than students at Harvard and MIT?"

Student senators also did not express concern over losing Labor Day weekend work, with Patrick Connell, a student senator, stating, "Honestly, I've never heard before today of another student who had a problem."

A controversy evolved when the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs, introduced his impression of Driscoll's view on the subject.

Driscoll wrote a letter to the Senate in order to "have that body indicate which of the two resolutions is to be given priority in those years when it is not possible to accommodate both. Should the question arise, I would want the Senate to know that a long weekend would not be an acceptable substitute for a week-long break."

Gallen said that he thought this meant a full-week break or nothing. Many in the Senate understood this to be factual.

Van Allen could not believe that Driscoll would so restrict the Senate's choice stating later that, "It would be an insult to the intelligence of the Senate by saying you can only do this or this ... and cannot exercise any intelligence or creativity."

Driscoll, when questioned on the statement, said that although he wished the break to be worthwhile for students, "This is how I stand: I'm just waiting for a proposal from the Senate. I'm not trying to tell them what to do."

Allman's reaction to the victory for a full-week Fall Break was, "I honestly think that's what's best for the Villanova community."

He commented, "We attempted to speak with each senator prior to the meeting in order to get their feelings on the issue and see if we could round out their support in favor of the full-week Fall Break. I think that this was very successful and played a major role," in the approval.

Student Government Vice President Mike McGinnis commented, "A lot of students put a lot of time and energy in this effort ... the students in the back of the room [at the meeting] had an effect too. [They showed that] this wasn't happening in a vacuum."

Joe Allman, Student Government president, introduced the proposal for a week-long Fall Break with classes starting before Labor Day when necessary.

Elections

Despite the rainy weather, voter turnout was exceptionally high in Pennsylvania for an off-presidential year. In some counties as many as 70 percent of those eligible to vote went to the polls and voted.

Observers felt that the G O P lost Senate seats this year because President Ronald Reagan was not at the top of the ticket. They also believe that the farm crisis and the collapse of the petroleum industry also helped produce an anti-Republican mood in key southern and western states such as Louisiana, California and the Dakotas.

Despite President Reagan's energetic campaigning for Republican senatorial hopefuls in the West and Midwest during the two weeks before election day, the Republicans lost seats in California, Nevada, North Dakota, South Dakota, North Carolina and Florida. Maryland's Barbara Mikulski became the first Democratic woman in her own right to win a Senate seat.

Voters split their tickets in many states, such as Florida, where Democrat Bob Graham was elected senator and Republican Bob Martinez was elected governor.

Laundry facilities studied

By DEBBIE GROSS and NATALIE McKENNA

Plans are currently being discussed for the improvement of Villanova's campus laundry facilities, Daniel C. Remley, assistant director of Residence Life, said this week.

Recently fires in both Good Counsel and Corr halls' laundry facilities have drawn much attention. According to Remley, representatives from Solon, the company contracted to maintain the upkeep of campus laundry facilities, investigated these incidents, and with the replacement of machines and the cleaning of clogged vents, both facilities are once again operating.

Villanova's contract with Solon operates on a seven-year cycle, explained Remley, and Villanova "continually reviews the services provided" by the company. Overall, Solon has served Villanova better this year than in the past, with greater efficiency and "prompt response," stated Remley.

However, said Remley, most of the problems with the campus laundry facilities lie not within the machines themselves, but with student tampering. The use of hammers and tape to receive free cleaning harms the machines' timing mechanisms. This tampering results in 68 percent of the damages received by the machines, said Remley.

In order to curb this tampering problem, many campus residents received a letter this week giving new solutions, as well as new ideas for a more efficient way of maintaining the machines. For example, a new coding system has been developed so that the reporting of damaged machines is made easier, stated Remley.

Remley also said that there is a new plan to expand the laundry facility in Delurey Hall to better accommodate both Delurey and Fedigan Hall residents.

Student Reaction

Kristin Switala, a sophomore living in St. Monica's Hall, stated, "It's ridiculous to have three washers and two dryers for all 160 people in the hall ... It causes a lot of tension; people get aggravated. We have three washers and only two dryers; it makes no sense."

Donna Albano, a junior living in St. Rita's Hall, said, "It's inconvenient to go to Corr Hall. Machines should be made more available."

"I know that Residence Life is working on the problem of laundry facilities. Maybe they should expand the facilities they have," stated Sheehan Hall resident Terise Fusco.

Hunger Awareness Week set

By ELIA DiTADDEO

A special liturgy will be held at 6 p.m. Saturday for those who plan on staying during the overnight parking lot. At 8 p.m., the band General Public will perform in the duPont Pavilion. Closing liturgies will also be celebrated that night.

Throughout the week, in Connelly Center and at all masses, a letter-writing campaign will be in progress. Students will be encouraged to write letters to their congressmen to support bills related to hunger awareness.

Homecoming anticipated

By JENNIFER [illegible]

The 1986 Homecoming Weekend festivities are scheduled to begin Friday and continue until late Saturday evening. University officials expect thousands of students, alumni and friends to participate in the events, according to Eugene J. Ruane, director of Public Relations.

Highlights of the weekend will include a Homecoming semi-formal on Friday night. Then the Wildcats will play Central Connecticut State University at 1:30 p.m. The Homecoming Dance Saturday evening, sponsored by the Alumni Association, featuring the Grease-band, will conclude the weekend's events.

Six outstanding Villanova graduates will be honored at the Seventh Annual College of Arts and Sciences Alumni Medallion Awards dinner Friday at 7 p.m., at the Eagle Lodge Conference Center in Lafayette Hill. The graduates will be recognized for distinguished achievements in their respective professional fields at the black-tie affair, according to Robert J. Capone, director of Alumni.

Secession

what effect the secession will have in the future for Student Government, said "The future is now. The secession is just part of the ongoing process."

The subject of secession has always been an issue for Student Government, Allman explained. He said that it was requested two years ago but was not as carefully planned and thought through at that time.

This summer Allman wrote a letter to Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, explaining the issue. Allman also participated in meetings with Neville, Lucyna Gorski, director of Student Activities, and the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students.

Neville said, "The Student Government should be housed where they feel they can be most effective and best representative to the student body." He said that he was more concerned with the goals Student Government accomplishes than to whom they report.

Neville said that he believed that Student Government felt as a governing body that its perception by others was misconstrued. "We tried to facilitate that," he said.

Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, said he is more concerned with the goals that Student Government accomplishes than to whom they report.

Gorski and Stack were not available for comment.

According to Allman, Student Government is now in the process of withdrawing from Student Activities. Their new moderator, in conjunction with the office of the dean of students, will be Stephen McWilliams, Judicial Affairs officer.

Vatican condemns homosexuality

The Vatican released its first major statement on homosexuality in 10 years last week. The statement denounces all homosexual activity as morally evil.

The 15-page letter was approved by Pope John Paul II and sent to the bishops of the Roman Catholic Church.

The letter stresses the immorality of homosexuality and states that bishops should not permit the use of church buildings, including facilities of Catholic schools and colleges, for pro-homosexual movements.

In August, the Vatican removed the Rev. Charles Curran from his teaching post at Catholic University in Washington, D.C. because his views on sexual morality, including homosexuality, were in conflict with Catholic teaching, which condones sexual relations only within marriage.

Tailgating limited at U. of Delaware

The University of Delaware has implemented a new policy that prohibits tailgating while football games are in progress. The policy will be in effect for the remaining home games.

In the past, all-day tailgating was the standard practice. However, many problems arose, such as damage to cars and the field, as well as increased accumulation of garbage.

Advertisements placed in the campus newspaper announcing the new policy acknowledged the important tradition tailgating, but at the same time stress that people should be inside the stadium when games begin.

Student opinions concerning the new policy are mixed. Some claim that the policy is unfair. Others believe that it will be beneficial in helping to prevent drunk driving.

Responsible drinking promoted

The University of Vermont's student chapter of BACCHUS (Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students) will increase the promotion of non-alcoholic events this year and continue to teach students about responsible drinking.

The chapter of BACCHUS was created at the request of University President Lattie Coor in the fall of 1982, after four students were seriously hurt in falls within three weeks, some of which were alcohol-related.

Weapon possession in question

By MAUREEN GARRITY

A major crackdown on the possession of dangerous weapons at the University of Delaware occurred recently. Eighteen students were charged with assault since the beginning of the semester, in three of those cases weapons were used, and in one case a machine gun was confiscated.

Villanova's director of Security, Chief Rowan Kelly said, "Villanova has not had much of a problem with students using or even possessing weapons. There were a few incidents a year ago concerning students using pellet guns. They were used for target practice on fences, but there was the possibility that a potentially dangerous situation could arise." Kelly attributes the use of these guns to a "juvenile attitude" on the part of the students involved.

The University's policy on weapons, described under "Dangerous Practices" in the Blue Book, states:

"No student shall engage in any activity which shall endanger the health, safety, well-being, or property of another student or member of the University community. [This includes] projectiles involving gunpowder or other propellants, or any object or substance thrown with the potential of defacing or damaging personal or University property or causing personal injury or disruption.

Those found guilty of any activity involving projectiles may be subject to a $50 fine and/or loss of campus residency."

Although deadly weapons are not a major concern at Villanova, fireworks, lit gasoline bottles (also known as "molotov cocktails") and slingshots have been encountered, according to sources. One source said that recently a gasoline bomb, made by lighting a beer bottle stuffed with tissues or paper towels soaked in gasoline, was thrown at a security guard. It has also been reported that students have blown up windows using fireworks. The source explained that major sporting events like the World Series have a tendency to incite violence.

Although many students said that they feel safe at Villanova, some students reported that they carry mace for protection when walking around campus at night.

Personal safety is one explanation for some of the weapons on campus. One student said that it is not uncommon for people living in the city to carry mace or a knife with them for protection. When city students come back to campus, they carry these with them, not with the intention of starting trouble, but for their own protection in traveling back to school, explained the student.

The weapon situation at Villanova has been described as "controlled."

Rowan Kelly, director of Security, said that Villanova does not have a problem with students using or possessing weapons.

Liability

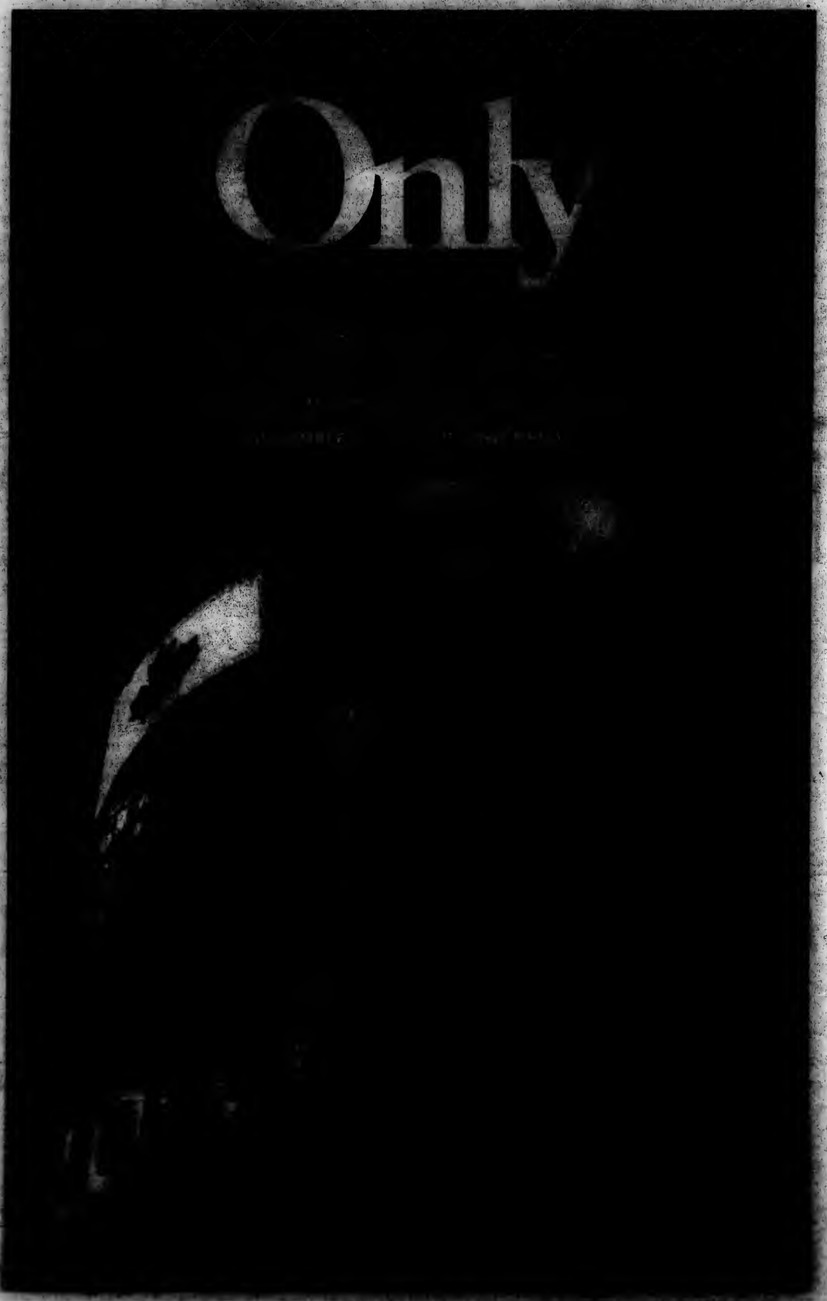
Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) began an insurance program to cover injury to student athletes. The program provides universities like Villanova with insurance coverage for catastrophic events, such as an athlete becoming a quadriplegic.

Aceto commented that, "Not too many people want to give coverage for catastrophic events, so the NCAA offers coverage." Aceto said that all varsity and club sports are covered under the NCAA program or by a private insurance carrier.

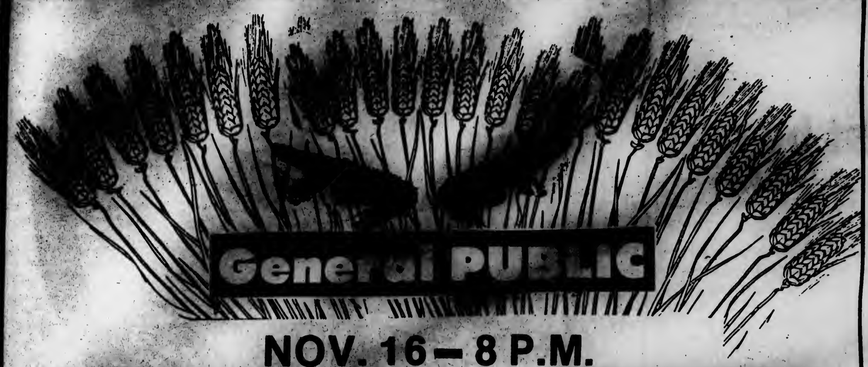
Fenner said that although insurance coverage is not a problem, Villanova cheerleaders eliminated their trampoline routines a few years ago because, "The insurance company said they were no longer covering trampoline stunts. So we told the athletic department to lock up the trampoline.

"The NCAA program covers varsity athletics, but there's a gap there for intramurals," Fenner said. "Since intramurals are 'self-insured' at the present time, if there's an injury, students go to their individual insurers for coverage. Most are covered under their parents' insurance policies. But this coverage is only to a certain point. After that point [when the money limit of coverage is exceeded], it's unknown who would pick up the tab, Villanova or the student."



Effect on Villanova

Will increases in insurance premiums and the risks of liability suits affect universities like Villanova?



"Anything that increases costs to a university is therefore going to have an effect on programs," Martin believes. "In an institution, this translates to increases in tuition dollars or decreases in programs.

"What Villanova can do is support efforts before the state and other legislative bodies to resolve the liability insurance crisis through such things as laws capping recoveries."

Issues must be met with open minds

Current issues in our world and at Villanova have recently demonstrated that there is an alarming amount of closemindedness on our campus. The Curran case at Catholic University, minority enrollment and scholarships and homosexuals' rights have all emerged as major topics at Villanova. And unfortunately, in several cases, they have been met with a discouraging lack of intelligent thought and debate.

The entire Villanova community exists for the purpose of learning. We are all here not only to find out about mathematical formulas or poets or accounting methods. We are here to grow as individuals by listening to and considering other viewpoints.

Interaction with a diverse group of people should be the catalyst which brings new realizations and broader understanding to the individual. This is what happens at most colleges and universities. But this is not happening for many students at Villanova. And the evidence can clearly be seen not only in some of last week's letters to the editor and "On Campus" responses, but also in comments and jokes made on the campus.

Every human being has a right to be respected, even if that person is different from ourselves. Unfortunately, the student population at Villanova is extremely homogenous and most dress, act and think in a similar way; it takes much courage to be a non-conformist. Instead of berating those who may think differently, we should encourage their input.

College is a four-year period when we are given the unique opportunity to learn and consider our direction in life. A major part of this should be exposure to different people and different ideas. If we walk away from here with a diploma and the same prejudices and way of thinking that we arrived with, we have missed the whole point.

Letters to the Editor

Homosexuals aren't sinners

To the Editor:

I was shocked by the letter to the Editor in last week's Villanovan which vehemently opposed the toleration of homosexuals in society. The writer of the letter claimed that it was a violation of Christian principles and that according to the Bible, the sexually deviant have no place with God.

I am a "practicing" heterosexual and am far from a "homophile," however I became very disturbed at the "holier than thou" tone that came across in this letter.

The author of the letter referred to passages in the Bible which forbade sexual immorality. However, the vengeful God of the Old Testament is a more loving and forgiving God as preached by Jesus Christ in the New Testament.

I am not discounting what the Old Testament says but am more influenced by the ideas that "He who has not sinned shall cast the first stone" and to "Judge not and you shall not be judged" that Jesus preached about. The author of the letter in last week's Villanovan seemed to be judging homosexuals as sinners. I do not know what causes homosexuality; whether it is inborn or due to environmental factors; but regardless, it is clearly something that is not chosen. It is something that can't be changed and is something that they must live with; and everyone has a right to seek a lifestyle that will make them most happy.

For those that think that society should make an effort to change homosexuals into heterosexuals, that would be just as ignorant as those nuns in the "olden" days who used to force left-handers to write with their right hand.

I think one has to ask where Villanova is going as a progressive liberal arts University when they are using outdated attitudes to deal with today's problems. The homosexual problem is a problem that needs to be dealt with instead of ignored. Yes, Villanova is a Catholic institution and the Catholic Church does not permit homosexuality; however the Catholic Church also doesn't permit oral sex or masturbation and somehow, I think that there are a few violators of those principles out there in the student body of Villanova.

It is time to deal with today's problems with a more pragmatic means so that the solutions will benefit all of society.

Peace march shows rare dedication

Four-hundred special people have recently arrived in the Philadelphia area. These people are the core of the Great Peace March for Global Nuclear Disarmament, a march across the United States to convince the public and government of the need for a test-ban treaty and eventual nuclear disarmament. Whether one agrees with their cause or not, these people should be applauded for their extreme dedication to a cause.

Fon nine long months these individuals have been on the road. They have left their homes, jobs and families for the sake of their belief. They have given up the material comforts of a house or apartment to camp out in towns, cities and rural districts all over the country. Leaving Los Angeles, California, on March 1, they have literally walked across the United States because they believe in something and will act for that belief.

Mary Beth Boessen, a person who has been with the march since its beginning, came to Villanova Monday to teach a Peace and Justice class. She said that although this march along cannot stop the threat of nuclear arms, it is important because it is another way of showing the government just how seriously Americans take this issue. Moreover, it has helped to show people that their votes and their actions can add up and bring about change.

The people in the Great Peace March have demonstrated a genuine example of dedication to a cause. Such enthusiasm and devotion of individuals is rare in today's society and their efforts are to be praised. More importantly, as Boessen said, "We did this thing that was impossible. We have shown people that they can make a difference."

Students: Enjoy your stay at V.U.

By LARRY GOANOS

As an alumnus who was faced many a night with the inevitable choice between going to Kelly's and doing homework, let me say this: In three years you won't remember doing either so you might as well go to Kelly's and have fun.

Here I am again, back for the third Homecoming since my graduation in May 1984. I marvel at how differently I perceive Homecoming now that I've graduated. As an undergrad, I viewed it as the Grand Keg Weekend of every alumnus' expense. What innocence. What naivete. What stupidity.

Now Homecoming is a weekend of reunion. A chance to see old friends, old professors, old hangouts. I drink in the nostalgia. I feel old at 24. You will too, undergrads. You already have, fellow alums. If nothing else, Homecoming Weekend is a focal point for chronicling change in our lives. Once we played Boston College in our Homecoming Game. Now we battle Central Connecticut. Times have changed.

I guess I'm writing this article mainly for the benefit of undergrads, after all, how many alumni read the Villanovan when they return to campus for Homecoming Weekend? Not many, I'd say.

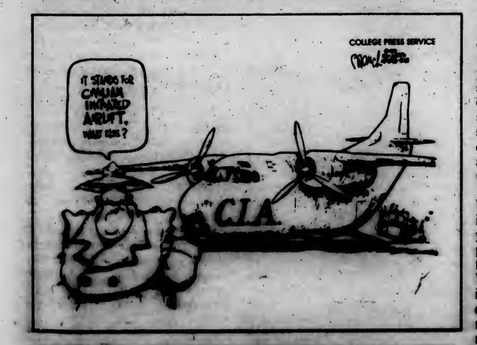
Anyway, what I have to say to undergrads is twofold. First of all, enjoy your remaining days on campus. As an alumnus who was faced many a night with the inevitable choice between going to Kelly's and doing homework, let me say this: in three years you won't remember doing either so you might as well go to Kelly's and have some fun.

Secondly, my message to you is that the most important things you'll take away from campus on graduation day won't be the facts concerning marginal utility, vectors (M.E.'s, are you listening?) or histology charts, but rather friendships. That's right folks. The geek living next door to you now in the dorm may someday turn out to be your roommate in Chicago, so don't write him off yet. You can never tell what will happen.

I was talking on the phone the other day to one of my former Villanova roommates who, all of a sudden, stated this keen observation about our beloved alma mater: "You know, the worst thing about Villanova is also the best, everybody is so alike." That's probably true but I really don't mind. The similarities are welcome: kindness, concern for fellow men, supportiveness and honesty. It's corny but true. And the chances are, if you're reading this, you'll agree with me.

This past summer I lived in New York, thanks to an inexpensive apartment I was able to share with a fellow V.U. alumnus. One night when I was on the town with some other Villanovans, one of the guys summed up what's so special about Villanova in a rather oblique way. This alumus, a guy who I knew not in college but have come to know and like since graduation, said: "You know what I really liked about Villanova? The people. For instance, even though I now live in New York, I'd let a guy from V.U. stay with me overnight and not think twice about leaving my wallet out in front of him while I sleep. If he went to Villanova I'd know I could trust him."

Maybe that statement from a guy who I didn't even know when we were both spending our four undergraduate years contemporaneously here on the Main Line sums up my attitude towards Villanova, perhaps more than any other words could. We don't have the biggest football stadium, the most voluminous library or the highest SAT's, but what we do have makes the most difference: the people.



Everybody may be accused of being alike at Villanova but that's O.K., you can never have too much of a good thing. I'd rather have a campus full of good people than a diversity consisting of jerks, liars and good people mixed together.

Well anyway, enough of this maudlin philosophizing. It's probably time to fill our cups one more time before the football game starts. It looks like we really have to go to the stadium this year, but that's all right, maybe the next Howie Long is waiting inside. And if he is, we can be sure we won't have to hide our wallets when he comes to visit.

Minority student responds to 'blatantly racist' op-ed

By CYNTHIA C. GLOVER

I trust that I speak for a number of minority students when I say that being accepted to this university was just as difficult or perhaps more difficult for me as any other student.

This letter is in response to the comments (Oct. 31, Villanovan) of Christine Wnuk regarding minority admissions and recruitment. Wnuk seems to indicate very strongly that minority students have not been admitted to Villanova University based on the same academic criteria as she was judged on. She goes even further to imply that we "qualified students" should feel cheated and discriminated against by being excluded from "normal" admissions procedures and given "special" treatment and consideration.

I, like Wnuk, am not the product of a "financial sound" environment. I am the youngest of six children raised in the urban confines of an inner city, lower-middle class neighborhood. My father was not the head of a successful law firm, nor is my mother a prominent physician or engineer. I, too, have known "difficult times." After all, my people have known struggle, hardship, oppression and violence for over 400 years. We minority students, blacks in particular, should be able to recognize "discrimination" more so than anyone. I do not feel I was treated unfairly.

I will admit that the staff at Villanova took a special interest in our recruitment. But wouldn't you also agree that a minority presence on the campus of this fine institution is long overdue? Villanova, or "Vanillanova" as it is still viewed by many, has an obligation to open its doors to all races. We, the student body, have no obligation to openly accept them.

I trust that I speak for a number of minority students when I say that being accepted to this university was just as difficult or perhaps more difficult for me as any other student. We struggle not only to succeed for ourselves but to also succeed as positive, progressive and prepared representatives of our respective races.

I personally do not feel I was treated condescendingly at all. My position is just the opposite. I feel I was admitted to Villanova University on a challenge or what might be considered a dare to achieve. I fight daily to prove worthy of the challenge and capable of facing the dare.

I sympathize with Wnuk's plight. She seems to have recently had her world touched somewhat by the way of life I have always known — struggle and uncertainty. I am fortunate, however, in knowing that by whatever means necessary I will graduate from Villanova University four years from now as did my sister, Anita White, in 1981. This will occur without the security of a Presidential Scholarship, although I graduated cum laude from the Philadelphia High School for Girls, maintained an A-minus average while participating in varsity sports, and served as a student goverment officer.

Competition is fierce. Scholarships are too few everywhere and for everyone. Survival of the fittest and self preservation are the tools needed to succeed and realize dreams.

Lastly, in response to Wnuk's remark about the "possibilities" existing to those born black I am afraid she is extremely naive and grossly misled in her views. Had she been born black, there's a 65 percent or greater chance that she would not be attending any university, college or institution of higher learning. If she had been a black male, she would probably be dead now — aged 19 or 20 years. Had she put some thought into both her choices of subject and phrasing she would not have submitted such an unrealistic, self-pitying and blatantly racist opinion.

Cynthia C. Glover is a freshman in the College of Commerce and Finance.

We should tolerate homosexual people

To the Editor:

This letter is in direct response to the Oct. 31 letter of Christian Hunt who, in his myopic insanity, condemns homosexuals.

He writes, "We must not tolerate the confused, misguided ideas that the sexually immoral portray. Rather, we should confront and try to help those who are acting in such an inadequate manner." I guess the first question to Hunt should be, to whom is this "inadequate?" The answer is that it's inadequate to a certain socio-economic group, namely the upper-middle class. Hey, Hunt, isn't it so satisfying to smooth out aberrants? Doesn't it just give you such a wonderful sense of moral noblesse oblige?

Let me guess the socio-economic background of Hunt. He was born to white, upper-middle class parents who sent him to a prep school where he was unconsciously taught to stay away from "undesirables," probably because they might get dirt on the preppies' oxfords. It's hard for me to read an article like Hunt's because it reminds me of the insanity that happened to Jews, Catholics and Gypsies during WWII.

Let me reveal two sentences, one verbatim, the other loosely paraphrased:

Hunt said, "Prostitution, crime, and homosexuality still epitomize the underworld of loose morals and blatant unethical ideals."

Loosely paraphrased: "Jews, Catholics and Gypsies still epitomize the underworld of loose morals and blatant unethical ideals."

If you could pick up both statements and place one on top of the other you'd see that there's not much difference in the level of sadistic intolerance. The first sentence was written by Hunt; the second was paraphrased from Hitler's philosophy.

It is clear to me that this intolerance is arbitrary, designed to vindicate the propriety of white, land-owning males. In the hands of people like Hunt, the Bible becomes a prostitute, subject to the repressed whims of close-minded people. One of the very things that Hunt is striking down, namely prostitution, is inherent in his use of the bible. It seems pretty obvious that Hunt, and people who think like he does, must first search for himself before he condemns someone else's choice of philosophy or lifestyle.

In the Woody Allen film, "Hannah and Her Sisters," one character, after watching a documentary on Hitler's extermination camps, says, loosely paraphrased, "All of these narrators sit around, shake their heads and wonder how this atrocity could ever happen. The question should really be, Why doesn't it happen more often, given human nature? It does happen, of course ... in subtler ways."

Respect the liberty of all, including the homosexuals

To the Editor:

After reading Christian Hunt's letter, "Homosexuals must not be tolerated," I felt compelled to dispute the mistaken ideas that "our country was founded on God" and that "God and the church serve as our foundation of morals," and the reppressive implications which those ideas convey.

First of all, if one asked any political science professor what our country was founded on, rest assured, the answer would not be as simple as "God." One of the things our country is founded on is freedom. One of the foremost freedoms American citizens possess is the freedom of religion. Our founding fathers guaranteed this freedom by separating the government from any particular church or religion, thus allowing Americans to worship any god, or not worship at all.

Another guaranteed freedom is the right of every citizen to make his own moral judgments and live his life anyway he wants, as long as he does not infringe on the rights of others. This freedom also means that no one has the right to enforce one's own moral standards on another person.

However, there are some people who would have us believe that every American should behave according to one set of moral standards. People such as Jerry Falwell of the infamous "Moral Majority," who would like to see everyone conform to his way of thinking, and would be only too happy to deny people their basic freedoms in order to "help them see the Way" — that is, his way.

In Hunt's letter, he states that "we must not tolerate the confused, misguided ideals that the sexually immoral portray." Actually, it is the confused, misguided ideals that he portrays that we must always be on guard against, because those repressive ideas threaten to undermine our right to decide how we want to live our lives.

So, before we all go out and "confront and try to help" homosexuals and the "sexually immoral," as Hunt suggests, let us remember the civil rights and liberties of all Americans — not just the ones that we agree with. Let us also remeber that the same laws which protect homosexuals today also protected Catholics not so long ago when they were discriminated against. Or is it easier to forget all of that when we're discriminating against someone else?

Gays need freedom

To the Editor:

We are stunned after reading "Homosexuals must not be tolerated" (Oct. 31 issue of the Villanovan). Christian Hunt's letter makes it impossible to close our eyes any longer to the ugly fact that prejudice is alive and well on the Villanova campus. We fear to ask ourselves how many others feel as Mr. Hunt does.

Hunt presupposes that " ... apathy ... allows immorality to flourish." Is it inconceivable that some "allow" homosexuality to exist because they believe in the Constitution of the United States, which emphasizes freedom of choice for all? Hunt asserts that our country was founded on God. On the contrary, the United States was founded on a desperate need for freedom to live according to one's own code, and toleration of those whose beliefs differ from one's own.

Also questionable is Hunt's perception of moral and immoral behavior. The word is used loosely, without ever defining what he means by it.

He obviously considers himself to be moral and doesn't hesitate to judge others to be immoral. For example, " ... the Church, and other moral members of society ... suppress immorality that threatens our society's well-being."

According to Aristotle, morals are dictated by each individual's code of ethics, making it impossible to dictate one's own morals to another. The sole way to be immoral is to deny oneself.

To be a practicing homosexual means having the courage to act according to a lifestyle that differs from the norm. Open homosexuals must be certain of what they believe in order to accept the hostility and ridicule with which they are barraged by a large percentage of the heterosexual world.

What is most ironic in Hunt's letter is his confidence in his own Christianity. Consider Jesus Christ; what would He do about homosexuality today? Would He make homosexuals outcasts? Would He condemn them for practicing an alternate lifestyle? Would He love them and accept them because they too are human beings with human qualities and potentials?

No one is asking people like Hunt to get on a soap-box and crusade for the rights of the homosexual community. We do ask that you recognize that people of all beliefs and practices have the right to live their lives privately without the intolerant condemnation of others. We ask that you open your mind and reassess what it means to practice a truly Christian philosophy.

Students are insensitive

To the Editor:

Paul Schmid's feature, "On Campus," is a welcome addition to the Villanovan. In the Oct. 31 edition of your newspaper, Schmid asked the question, "If Villanova's homosexual community were to establish a forum what format should it take?

I cannot tell you my surprise and disappointment to read the immature, insensitive, homophobic, and unChristian responses of the five young ladies (and I use the term advisedly) interviewed. If their responses were indicative of the type of airhead ladies of the '80s, it's time for Villanova to rethink its status as a coeducational institution of higher learning.

I was particularly offended by Melissa Long's comments. Long should give serious consideration to changing her major from nursing. Nursing requires dedication, maturity and compassion for all people. Pity the poor AIDS patients who will be subject to this "angel of mercy." As an alternative to nursing perhaps she could become a concentration camp guard at Mary Ellen O'Donnell's version of the Warsaw Ghetto. Perhaps Hall; while Fran D'Angelo would pay "them" in Sullivan.

Tell Ani Benitez the Klan is recruiting some fresh [illegible] Dismissal is a severe and drastic case of [illegible].

As a [illegible] Villanova [illegible] collective consciences of Jones, Bonino, Long, D'Angelo and O'Donnell would be raised.

I suggest someone clue these ladies in on the fact that homosexuals also come in the female variety. One can only wonder the clever remarks which would have issued forth from this frivolous fivesome had the topic been equal rights for women or civil rights for blacks.

Bigotry, hatred, and ignorance have no place at an educational institution. In protest, I intend to withhold my annual contribution to the university and along with it my employer's matching contribution.

In addition I will pray for these young ladies to realize their insensitivity and uncharitable behavior and to find the proper forum in which to apologize to every person, straight and gay, who is concerned with the welfare, dignity and respect for all of God's creations.

End feminist stereotypes

To the Editor:

I feel that, unfortunately, many have an erroneous idea of the meaning of feminism. Feminism does not mean mandatory agreement with such issues as a pro-choice stance regarding abortion or homosexuality, nor does it mean a hatred of men. Feminism basically means, (from Webster's Dictionary) "organized activity on the behalf of women's rights and interests," whatever you personally feel those to be.

Pro-choice advocates find the feminist stance is advantageous for expressing their beliefs, because by allowing both women and [illegible] head (a feminist goal), men won't want to be able to manipulate women anymore and a choice involving both parents can be more easily made.

Homosexuals find the feminist cause advantageous for expressing their beliefs because the feminist goal involves erasing the stereotypes that narrowly bind people to disadvantageous characteristics.

These groups comprise just a portion of the feminist movement. It's time to acknowledge exactly what feminism is. Many agree with the basic principles and there are many common goals, such as pay equity, that we can all work on together.

But please don't let the common goals that will benefit all be shunned and left to whither because you don't agree with certain factions that use feminism as a vehicle to accomplish their specific goals.

Student displays a prejudiced opinion

To the Editor:

After having read the article "Treat minorities like the rest of us" by Christine Wnuk (Oct. 31 issue of the Villanovan) I feel not only the desire but the need to respond to a most definite sense of negativity aimed at minorities and, in particular, blacks which I find permeates Wnuk's letter.

My main argument against Wnuk is that she is attempting to defend a position which might easily be termed "prejudiced" with insufficient and, in some cases, even inaccurate proof to support it.

As a fellow pastoral musician of Wnuk, I cannot help but wonder how she is able in good conscience to stand before a congregation as a leader of song and prayer professing how we are all children of God and equal before Him, while at the same time avowing that she is "sickened to think that had [she] been born black ..." her life would have been much more easy.

As the recipient of a presidential scholarship, I must admit that I am truly glad that a person sharing the views of Wnuk was not chosen to be presidential scholar for I believe that such a person, despite extraordinary academic and extra-curricular merits, does not best represent the quality and character expected not only of a presidential scholar but even, more generally, of a true student of Villanova University whose motto is "Veritas, Unitas, Caritas" — "truth, unity, charity."

I do sympathize with Wnuk and I do concede that her situation is most unfortunate. However, I firmly believe that she could have responded to that situation in a more adult and Christian manner.

Church has right to revoke licenses

To the Editor:

Permit me to respond to Edwin L. Goff's letter to the Editor last week, "Academic Freedom is needed." Goff notes that "Fr. Curran's research has conformed scrupulously to the guidelines of dissent established by the Vatican II Council." However, he neglects to mention what those guidelines are. However, I don't believe he could since, as far as I can determine, there are no guidelines for dissent mentioned in the documents of Vatican II.

Moreover, it would be impossible that such guidelines allow for moral positions that contradict the traditional and Scripturally based teachings of the Catholic Church.

Goff's letter is basically a defense of Dr. Van Allen's position (as reported in an earlier issue of the Villanovan) that Rome's revocation of Curran's license was "a clear violation of the principles of academic freedom."

If I may disagree with Van Allen, I do not see the Curran case as a clear violation of the principles of academic freedom. I do not see it as such because I believe the Catholic Church does have the right to revoke the license of one who has a special obligation to loyalty where it concerns established Catholic doctrine and the Church's mission and who therefore presumably ought not to teach as true positions at variance with traditional, well-known Catholic Church teaching and also with Sacred Scripture (I assume here that there can be no real conflict of rights).

Goff, in criticizing Miriam McCue's letter, ventures a definition of "intellectual honesty." While I do not wish to quarrel here with his definition, I wish that he would have considered that intellectual honesty must also entail a care for the truth.

Minority recruitment is needed

To the Editor:

The message I received from Christine A. Wnuk's op-ed on presidential minority scholarships only served to verify the existence of an attitude I fear may be prevalent among white students at Villanova University. I believe Wnuk's letter is misleading to the general public in several respects.

Upon reading the eligibility requirements for the presidential scholarship and the presidential minority scholarship (of which I am a recipient) I fail to see where the differences lie, except in actual wording.

According to the admissions department, the total number of paid admissions to Wnuk's class numbered closer to 1,500 than 1,900. In addition, by virtue of the SAT requirements and essay composition, the actual pool of qualified applicants to the presidential scholarship numbered between 150 to 200 students (figures obtained from the appropriate administrators).

Since approximately 20 presidential scholarships were awarded to this population, simple statistics reveal that 10 to 13 percent of the competitors received scholarships. The presidential minority scholarship began its competition from an application pool of about 50 qualified students. Since 5 presidential minority scholarships were awarded last year, approximately 10 percent of the competition received scholarships. In actuality, the presidential minority scholarship is as challenging and competitive to win as the Presidential Scholarship.

Wnuk seems to imply that minorities are judged by different criteria. Scrutinization of her quotations from the University Bulletin 1985-86 shows she is wrong. The presidential minority scholarship serves to attract highly talented minorities to an institution in which such a population is practically nonexistent.

The presidential minority scholarship is developed to interest those minorities who would normally be recruited by such institutions as Harvard and Princeton. Indeed, I know of some minority scholarship winners who have declined in order to attend Princeton or Harvard. Villanova fails to be a desirable climate for minorities even when making an outstanding offer.

Wnuk's letter also reveals some underlying prejudice against black students. "I am sickened to think that had I been born black I would have been encouraged to come here...," she says. I remind everyone that the minority scholarship is open to Asians, blacks, Hispanics, and Native Americans.

Though Villanova recruitment policy has become more aggressive, I certainly was not wined and dined by representatives of the University when I was an applicant. And since I have been here, minorities have been the brunt of various oversights in common etiquette.

In no way is attending Villanova a "free ride" for a minority. In addition to the rigorous academic program, which we can handle, we are under added pressure and scrutiny of our performance by people like Wnuk, who either resent our presence here or who want to deny our academic capabilities.

If Wnuk is suggesting to have just one scholarship program open to all students, I will gladly stack my academic, extracurricular, leadership and communication abilities along with those of any other presidential minority scholarship recipient's up against any other student's.

I see nothing wrong with setting up a program that awards approximately four full scholarships to qualified minorities. With the conservative air and close-minded nature of this campus population, extra effort must be made to attract minority students, otherwise the familiar variation on the Villanova name, "Vanillanova," will become more applicable than ever.

Anti-homosexual letter is appalling

To the Editor:

As a graduate of Villanova, and a former staff columnist for your newspaper, I was appalled at your publishing Christian Hunt's hate-mongering letter, as well as being appalled with the destructive content of the letter itself.

It's not chic to support unpopular causes, such as gay rights, but no one has freedom unless all have freedom — in the long run.

Hunt's advanced Christian mentality has not allowed him any independent thoughts, evidently, as the content of his brain seems to be programmed by the Bible — that awe-inspiring document that needs no facts to back it up.

Hunt foolishly confuses many issues. Firstly, he pretends that, "homosexuality is morally wrong," then asserts that it is also, "religiously wrong." And pretends these are two separate issues.

The essence of any religion is its set of values (which, although always imposed upon the flock of sheep, remains only relative and not absolute; for, if values were absolute, then they would be able to be proven to hold absolutely and we know this is not accurate.

But as a humanist, I am offended with the undisguised poison belching from the mind of Hunt when he says, "We must not tolerate the confused, misguided ideals that the sexually immoral portray. Rather we should confront ... those who are acting in such an inadequate manner."

What, aside from Hunt's unfounded arrogance, is inadequate?

If Hunt is facing a sexual crisis, he should seek professional help (not in the arena of religion — but in the science of psychology). If he's not having a crisis, then he should take some logic courses before pontificating upon subjects he is confused about by his ignorance (i.e., sexuality, morality, ethics, god, etc.).

Too many people pretend their religion and the Bible are some how less dangerous an addiction that cigarettes or alcohol or other drugs.

What a truly wonderful world this would be if everyone had the intolerance suggested, by his religion, to Christian Hunt.

In such a world I'd be the first to throw a Christian to the lions!

Student displays arrogance by questioning recruitment policy

To the Editor:

This letter is being written in response to the article written by Christine A. Wnuk in the Oct. 31 issue of the Villanovan. Upon reading the letter, I was appalled at the fact that she is blaming minorities for the possibility of her having to leave the University and thus discontinuing her education. By attempting to voice such an opinion that is both asinine and insulting to others shows her arrogance and its need to be reviewed.

It sickens me to realizing that there are some students who also feel as she does and who probably believe they are correct and the University is wrong.

I am a minority student, in fact I am black, and I too did extremely well in high school by graduating cum laude from The Philadelphia High School for Girls, a very prestigious school.

I was not considered for a presidential scholarship, but was the recipient of a Villanova grant. In addition, I sought out other resources such as the Guaranteed Student Loan, Pell Grants, private sources, etc. I am aware that my family's resource will continue to dwindle, but I will never sit back and criticize the University's attempts to recruit and keep minorities here. It is obvious that Wnuk fails to notice the recruitment of more. A university cannot survive on "ordinary, stereotypical white students" like Wnuk, but on the diversity of having intelligent, capable, able-minded students of all races. When you realize this, you will be able to begin your ascent into the continuation of your education.

It is unfortunate that your parents are unable to continue to fund your education here after two years, but consider this Wnuk: you could have always chosen an institution that best fit your financial needs. My advice to Wnuk is to stop harping on what seems to be a personal problem and make your way to the financial aid office located in Kennedy Hall. I am sure if you explain your situation, someone would be more than willing to help you.

As Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. said: "We must all learn to live together as brothers or we will perish as fools."

Student seeks correction

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter concerning the unprofessionalism which was shown in the Villanovan last week. The problem was in the On Campus section. I was asked my opinion on the subject of homosexuals, a community which I am very strongly against, especially here at Villanova.

I was asked what my opinion is concerning Villanova's homosexual community and, if they were to receive permission to establish a forum, what format they should follow. I was very surprised to see that my answer was taken entirely out of context, with the last statement I made being totally omitted.

The answer which was printed was, "I think they should have a building and a newsletter"; whereas the refutation I submitted stated, "I think they should have a building, a newsletter, and a club ... upside their heads." As you can see, there is a significant difference.

I can understand the fact that due to the liberal viewpoint of the Villanovan, maybe you thought that my reply either was not in accordance with your "professional" standards, or that it did not give Villanova's homosexual community a "fair shake." Nonetheless, if you are going to omit the brunt of someone's answer, then consequently, don't print anything at all.

I feel that a retraction should be printed in this week's issue of the newspaper, along with this letter because your foul-up has subsequently caused me more problems than it is worth. Also, something which may have began as harmless fun, could end up as a case of slander for your paper.

Editor's Note: According to federal law, it is illegal for any publication to print comments which advocate violence. It is the right and responsibility of all editors to edit such comments, and this was done in the case of Mr. O'Keeffe. Beyond the legal limitations, the editor had a moral and ethical duty to remove such an offensive comment. The Villanovan does not apologize and will continue to follow these legal, moral and ethical guidelines in the future.

Minorities earn their money

To the Editor:

The letter to the Editor in the Oct. 31 issue written by Christine A. Wnuk concerning the presidential scholarships was quite disturbing. She should have limited her generalizations and written only of those situations with which she is personally familiar.

Informing us of her circumstances was perfectly all right. She made her mistake, however, in implying that all minority presidential scholarship recipients had to accomplish very little in order to have been chosen.

I am a minority and I have been fortunate enough to have received one of the scholarships for minorities. I, like she, took the initiative to begin a college search. I had considered Villanova quite a while before I knew of the possibility of receiving a scholarship.

After my SAT scores were circulated to various universities, I received correspondence from Villanova notifying me that I was eligible to apply for the scholarship.

Villanova did not just "hand" me the scholarship. I worked to achieve such a blessing.

I was ranked third in a class of just below 200 students, I received straight A grades, and I, too, was involved in a myriad of extra-curricular activities. I was vice-president of my class, captain of the cheerleading squad, president of the Spanish club and a student government representative. The list goes on.

And if anyone is wondering if my high school consisted of a majority of minorities, the answer is no. I competed against the white students for grades, as well as for positions. It may help to know that I was accepted at an Ivy League school, as well as at Georgetown University.

I do not know all of the reasons that the University has for the modification of standards. Perhaps some of the faculty will explain the matter. I do know, however, that I had to accomplish a lot in order to be chosen as a recipient. Villanova did not just "hand" me the scholarship. I worked to achieve such a blessing. I feel sorry for those of us who cannot accept their losses, count their blessings and continue to try for the next goal.

Students are insensitive

To the Editor:

A loud "boo" and several hisses to the students who crudely played upon the stereotypical image of homosexuals in the "On Campus" segment of last week's Villanovan. Such insensitive views were all women who [illegible] should be sensitive to seeing others as "objects."

Jesus made it rather clear, I think, in his ministry that the outcasts of society, the lepers, beggars, tax collectors, etc. were to be treated with special kindness.

Business booms at Wayne bar

By MONICA J. PICA

Many Villanovans are unaware of the best kept secret in Delaware County — the reopening of Wayne Beef and Ale. On May 23 Michael Milano 22, and Joe Milano 30, of Conshohocken welcomed their first customers into the renovated tavern. The establishment's new vitality is apparent not only in the decor, but also in the cuisine and clientele.

Once heavily patronized by underage drinkers, Wayne Beef and Ale now caters to an older, more sophisticated crowd. "We're tough about carding the drinkers," adds Michael. This shift in the target market from the 18-to-20 to the 25-to-35 age bracket contributes to a more relaxed drinking and dining experience. Homemade comestibles served in a friendly atmosphere characterize Milano's Wayne Beef and Ale's new image.

Tucked away on the corner of West Wayne Avenue and Conestoga Road, the restaurant does not occupy a "prime" Main Line location. "Unlike any other place on the Main Line, we're off the beaten path." Yet, this fact is a merit and not a detriment to the owners in terms of their marketing ploy. Michael reflects, "Once our customers try us, they always come back."

These optimistic entrepreneurs possess confidence in their endeavors primarily because they are backed by the moral support of their cooperative family. "Everyone chips in. Mom does most of the cooking, and my sister comes by if Joe and I cannot be here."

Benefiting from such input, the family holds corporate meetings every month where they discuss problems, solutions and new ideas. New ideas taking shape this month are the additions of live entertainment on Friday and Sunday nights, Saturday import nights, "all the crab legs you can eat for $10.95" on Friday nights — and various homemade specials throughout the week.

To implement the innovative ideas, the Milano brothers utilize much of their education and previous experience. Michael and Joe received degrees in business management from Montgomery County Community College and The Art Institute of Pittsburgh, respectively, and have developed leadership ability and management skills through various employment experiences.

Through a private financing company, the Milanos were able to purchase Wayne Beef and Ale in February and, obtain a liquor license. In three months they had the establishment ready for business. "There was a lot of work to do. The previous owners left a pig sty." With unmatched efforts, and round-the-clock-work, Milano's Wayne Beef and Ale finally pulled together as a successful eating and drinking establishment.

Unstable Tuition Futures program deceives parents

By TAMI PETER

Many parents today in mostly middle-class families are tempted by the offer of advanced payment of college tuition — 18 years in advance. Although Villanova University is not currently considering such an option, this new plan is suggested by many colleges who think paying now would save families money in the long run.

Gary B. Fenner, vice president of Financial Affairs, sees no need for a tuition-futures plan at Villanova.

But the "tuition-futures" plan has a problem. If the child does not attend that school, the parents only get back their initial investment — with no interest. Richard Anderson, a financing specialist at Columbia University's Teachers College told The Wall Street Journal recently, "To lock yourself into a single institution years in advance doesn't make sense" since parents cannot predict where their child's interests will lie.

However, many parents feel the advantages outweigh the disadvantages. Even in the event that the child is not accepted to that institution, some schools will put a portion of their futures toward preparatory work at a community college or toward entrance as a transfer.

Still, this fact does not secure that the college will maintain its quality or prestige. During an 18-year period, a school's reputation changes, sometimes for the worse.

Not only is the tuition-futures plan uncertain about schools' reputations, but also about inflation and tax levels. For example, many schools, including some of the Ivy League, recently introduced plans allowing entering students to pay a four-year lump sum tuition, at freshman-year prices. Some of these schools will lend families the total cost at interest rates of about 9-10 percent.

Anderson points out, however, that the amounts to be saved are modest at best. Parents could probably do better investing the same amount in a 7-10 percent yield provided inflation does not increase more rapidly than in recent years.

Gary Fenner, vice president of Financial Affairs, says Villanova will not be offering a similar tuition-futures plan at this time. He explains that the major reason for this type of program is necessity. In other words, the program is designed to attract more students from a shrinking applicant pool. Fenner simply does not see a need to enact such a program because Villanova's applicant pool has quite the contrary problem and ever-increasing number. It has only the best students to choose from and therefore has no worry of lack of selection.

Besides the fact that Villanova has no need for the tuition-futures plan, Fenner feels, "The program benefits higher income families." In order to be enrolled in this tuition futures plan, a person must pay the full amount upfront. And the only people who can afford to do this are the higher income families.

This fact might explain why Ivy League and other prestigious schools offer a prepaid tuition at freshman-year prices. One reason for this plan may be to enable the institutions to use the four-years' tuition money to make their schools more appealing because they are in competition to attract the best high school students. With better facilities and improvements, students are more apt to choose that school over an equally qualified school with less of a spending budget.

In the case of Villanova, there is no need to convince students to attend. This fact explains why Sheryl Rillo, bursar, says Villanova is at "a wait and see mode, looking at all options."

Tax Reform Act threatens schools

By KRISTIN A. SWITALA

The 1986 Tax Reform Act could cost education 16.5 percent, seriously impacting educational fund raising, according to Mike McNamee, a Washington economics correspondent for the Dallas Morning News.

This means that out of every $6 an institution hopes to receive in 1988, $1 will be consumed by federal taxation. On a larger scale, if a school such as Villanova were to collect $500,000 in a "Covenant III" campaign, $82,500 of the contributions would be lost to the government.

Besides this initial loss, the act will harm education in four other areas, according to Lawrence B. Lindsay, a Harvard University economist, in an Aug. 25 Wall Street Journal interview:

1. Scholarship money not used for tuition would be taxed, even if students needed it for food.

2. The interest paid on student loans would no longer be deductible.

3. The ability to issue tax-free bonds would be curbed, forcing some colleges to drop building plans or else borrow more costly money.

4. The proposed law would lower tax rates, thus raising the net cost to donors of their charitable outlays.

Lindsay specifies this last effect as the biggest threat to education, because charitable donations would no longer be deductible for filers who fail to itemize. In other words, big donators would no longer have the tax-break incentive that they previously enjoyed.

Universities like Villanova would either have to curb building projects or program expansions, or raise students' tuition to cover these expenditures.

For students receiving financial aid, the proposed tax on scholarships and grants hangs over them like an ominous cloud. According to Janice Simpson of the Wall Street Journal, however, undergraduates would be impacted less severely than graduate students:

"These students [undergraduates] could avoid paying taxes on grant aid, by using such money solely for tuition while relying on loans and earnings to cover living expenses."

Graduate students usually use their aid to defer both tuition and living costs. By taxing these expenses, the government could actually dissuade students from pursuing masters, doctorate and professional degrees.

First Card arrives

By SUSAN TOLVE

Non-working undergraduate students can obtain a credit card through a new program of First Card (formerly Visa). The program is the first of its kind and operates by having parent's guarantee to pay any debts of their children.

Since the First Card undergraduates receive is in their name, students are able to establish a credit history. This credit can be helpful in obtaining other charge cards and loans.

Three credit lines are available: $500, $750 and $1,000. According to Robert Stock, a marketing officer for First Card, "The application is testing what credit line most people choose. Generally the credit line checked is the credit line received."

Undergraduates receive the same First Card as people under the original program, and can use their charge card in any of the 4.4 billion places First Card is accepted worldwide.

Twenty-four hour-a-day emergency cash is available through 9,800 Visa Automatic Teller Machines. In addition, 160,000 financial service offices provide cash advances to First Card holders.

Although it is not stated on the application, an annual fee of $20 is required to keep a First Card. Amoco Motor Club offers a First Driver Protection Plan for an additional $34. Upon graduation, students can convert their First Card and remove the parental guarantee as long as there were no previous payment problems.

Ideas for designing a credit card for undergraduates developed last spring. This fall, promotion began nation-wide on more than 300 campuses, including Villanova.

Stock said that it was too early to compile data on the program, but "it looks like it is going to be successful."

Villanovans play at Vasey Theatre

By STACEY WILKINS

A night out at Villanova has become synonymous with import night at Kelly's or mug night at Friendly's. For the Villanovan looking for a fresh alternative to the predictable "V.U." social scene, the answer is right under your nose.

Vasey Theatre is one of the best kept secrets on campus. An affordable change of pace, at Vasey Theatre, a "real date" can cost less than a night of pounding.

The student discount rate of $5 per ticket does not reflect the quality of the show. Despite cramped quarters, a tight budget and small staff, the Theatre continues to generate first-rate theatrical productions, according to Lon Winston, associate theater professor.

Winston attributes the Theatre's renewable source of strength to the actors trained by Villanova's theatre department. Since 1980 Villanova has offered an undergraduate degree in theatre, in addition to its reknowned master's program.

Any student can volunteer his or her services by lending a hand to the production. Help is always needed on scenery, sets and costumes, Winston indicated.

One misconception is that you have to be a theatre major to act in the plays. Anyone can audition for the campus productions; no prerequisite is required.

Academically, the theatre department offers an interesting choice of course material to get the student involved. Non-theatre majors are eligible to take courses such as The Theatrical Experience, which explores acting, production, design and dramatic ideas. The course is geared towards exposing students to different aspects of theatre, allowing them to pinpoint where their interests lie.

Many directors from the theatre department have valuable experience and recognition in the theatrical field. Winston said, "Jim Christy and Irene Baird are personally responsible for much of the reputation of Villanova's theatre department." He continued, "People have come to expect thoughtful, intelligent, creative and artistic productions. One always experiences a good level of theatre that has an excellent reputation on par with any in the Philadelphia metropolitan area."

This season, Vasey Theatre's theme is "A Season of Horrors." The first mainstage production was the critically acclaimed "Frankenstein." Winston, who directed the production, chose to omit the traditional Hollywood garb that audiences have come to expect.

The forthcoming production, "The Bacchae," directed by James Christy, runs Nov. 19 through 22 and Dec. 3 through 7. The play is a chilling Greek tragedy by the ancient Greek playwright Euripides.

Tickets go quickly so make reservations in advance by calling the Vasey box office at 645-7474 or stopping by between 1 to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

Fr. Greeley

Sparking reaction

By SUSAN TOLVE

The anticipation of a speaker at Villanova does not always spark gossip or lead to an anonymous note left for Rich Domenico, lectures coordinator of the Villanova Union. But not every speaker is Andrew Greeley — novelist, sociologist, professor, historian, journalist — and priest.

According to Domenico, the anonymous letter, which was sent through inter-office mail, said that he was "insulting the Villanova Community and feeding his [Greeley's] ego."

Out of the 520 tickets being sold to Greeley's Nov. 12 lecture, "Catholicism Revisited," only 300 remained as of Wednesday. Eighty of these were reserved even before tickets went on sale.

"I'm glad it is causing some reaction. It will be big. It will be talked about," said Domenico.

Greeley has had a lot of public exposure. He has appeared on Phil Donahue and The Tonight Show, in addition to contributing articles to Harper's, The New York Times Magazine and Success.

Greeley's long list of published writings include over 100 scholarly works and more than 50 non-fiction books, which have been translated into Spanish, German, Dutch, French, Italian, Swedish, Polish and Portuguese.

Controversy over Greeley does not stem from his scholarly pieces, but from his fictional work. The Cardinal Sins, his first novel, shocked some readers by depicting archbishops as men who "have hormones and fantasies like all other healthy members of the human race."

In a 1986 Newsweek article, Greeley explained his conversion to writing novels. "I've found that [ideas] I've expressed through fiction, I've expressed and the stories which present that same [doctrines]," he said.

Fr. Andrew Greeley will speak on Nov. 12, at 8 p.m. in the Villanova Room.

Greeley sees no conflict between his novels and his vocation. "People love stories, and one way of dealing with scriptures are love stories," he stated.

People do love stories — especially his. His first five stories, The Cardinal Sins, Thy Brother's Wife, Ascent Into Hell, Lord of the Dance, and Virgin and Martyr were all best sellers and have made Greeley a very wealthy man.

Greeley said, however, that he did not want to be a millionaire when he donated $850,000 to endow a chair in Catholic studies at his alma mater, the University of Chicago.

Greeley's lecture will begin at 8 p.m. in the Villanova Room. Tickets are $2 for students and staff and $3 for the general public at the Connelly Center ticket office and at the door (if they are not sold out).

Domenico urged all to attend — both supporters and critics of Greeley, pointing out that a question and answer session will follow his lecture. At this point, people can exchange their ideas because "that is how you learn," said Domenico.

Greeley realized that many people disagree with his controversial ideas. "Most priests hate my guts," he said.

"I am dismayed every time someone says 'I don't always agree with you.' Who the hell wants agreement? I mean, they have a right to be wrong," Greeley said.

Spring Break '87 hits Miami

By NATALIE McKENNA

It's a Villanovan's dream. A lot of fun, a lot of sun, and a week long break from classes at V.U. Yes, it's Spring Break in Miami Beach with a new twist.

Penrod's Party Tours will be sponsoring the First National Intercollegiate Beach Games in Miami Beach, Florida during Spring Break 1987. From March 1 to April 4, coed teams of eight to 12 people will participate in eight different sports.

All events will take place on the beach and will range from volleyball to weightlifting to ultimate frisbee. Other events include softball, flag football, water polo, an obstable course and a five-kilometer run.

The teams may register up to the time of the event. Winners will be chosen by a point system, and will receive a free return trip to Miami Beach to compete in the finals.

Mike Schoor, national promotional tour director for Penrod's, believes that the idea of intercollegiate beach games will be a "wholesome alternative" to Fort Lauderdale and other traditional Spring Break resorts. Schoor thinks that the focus of Spring Break in Miami Beach will not be on drinking but on athletics, concerts and beach parties.

College students will "have a chance to have fun in a way that's never been offered before," Schoor said.

Penrod's is also sponsoring a large scale career fair during Spring Break '87. There will be representatives from the surrounding areas presenting various job opportunities in Florida.

Another service offered to students is a shuttle between Daytona Beach and Miami Beach. The shuttle will run every night on the hour.

Penrod's is confident that a Miami-style Spring Break will be a trendsetting destination, including live bands on the beach and new clubs and cafes. The stretch of beach from First to Fifteenth Streets in Miami Beach will have a Miami Vice setting during Spring Break.

College suicides: the facts

(CPS) — College students' suicides usually can be traced to students' inability to cope with academic and family problems. These problems often are exacerbated by drug use, a five-year study of collegiate suicides has found.

Further, a study published two weeks ago in the New England Journal of Medicine asserted that TV movies about suicide can themselves lead other teenagers to commit suicide.

"Suicide," said Dr. Evelyn Gauthier, a psychologist at the University of Michigan and a part of the five-year study of suicides at Southern Illinois, Chicago and all the Big 10 schools, "is all too often seen as a problem-solver. Some students in the midst of an intolerable situation can see no other way."

College juniors and graduate students are at the highest risk of suicide, the study found.

The juniors — especially men — face the stress of achievement tests and career decisions, Gauthier said.

Grad students, in turn, are under intense academic pressure to succeed, but don't have the advantages of "social anchors" like marriage, children and secure jobs to help them cope with it, she added.

Louisiana State University medical school Professor Frank Wolf, found in 1984 that first year medical students seem to have the highest level of stress among all levels of collegians.

The study, which was formally presented at the recent American Psychological Association convention found that of the 77 students who committed suicides at the 12 midwestern campuses through the five years of the study, 32

Soviets follow dual program

By JOE McGOWAN

Villanova's Social Science Forum, a group designed to promote the interchange of ideas and research, presented the second annual Fritz Nova Memorial Lecture Wednesday evening at the Connelly Cinema.

This lecture, named after the respected Villanova political scientist, was given by Dr. Jerry Hough, an expert on Soviet politics. Hough is a professor at Duke University and a senior analyst at the Brookings Institute "think tank."

Hough's address "Gorbachev and the Future of Soviet-American Relations" was of particular temporal significance in view of the recent Soviet-American summit at Rekjavik, Iceland.

In explaining Mikhail Gorbachev's ideas and plans for Soviet domestic and foreign politics, Hough devoted considerable time to the expectations and views this Soviet leader had toward the summit.

Hough stressed that "Gorbachev did not act like he needed an agreement" at Rekjavik, but tempered that assertion by adding that "it's very likely that there'll be a summit in the winter in Japan." Hough then proceeded to answer a question he himself posed: "Why has he [Gorbachev] not seemed to have needed an argument as much as we thought he did?"

This issue involves both the Strategic Defense Initiative (or "Star Wars") policy and the Soviet need to improve their high technology. Hough was of the opinion that Gorbachev is not in awe of the "Star Wars" plan, but that he needs the tangible, or at least perceived threat of S.D.I., to call for economic reform at home. Thus Hough asserted that Gorbachev "went back from Iceland on a high, that he'd had a great success."

To illustrate the type of premier that Gorbachev is, Hough contrasted him with former premier Leonid Bresznev. Hough argued that Americans expected Gorbachev to cave in on the S.D.I. lure at the bargaining table since Bresznev would have done so. But as part of his plan to upgrade Soviet high technology, Gorbachev needs to appear firm to overcome internal opposition.

Hough believes that while Gorbachev may now and in the future be "soft" on issues such as refuseniks, troops in Western Europe, and relations with the Far East, he has chosen the U.S. and S.D.I. as his targets for a hard-line stance.

With regard to the American role in the future of Soviet-American relations, Hough faulted the Reagan administration for failing to be adequately prepared for the recent Rekjavik summit. He also charged the Democrats with negligence in their role as the opposition party.

Hough stresses the increasing importance of the "Vietnam generation" in politics, so much so that he believes their influence will be felt either in 1988 or certainly in 1992.

Hough believes that Gorbachev will continue his dual program of "soft" reforms at home and a hard-line approach towards the United States. He sees a shift from an emphasis on military power to economic power as the key to success in future Soviet-American relations, and to the two nations themselves. He cited the small nation of Japan, ironically an economic giant, as an example for the superpowers to follow.

In 1139, an Irish priest by the name of Malachy O'Morgain accurately forecast the identity of every Roman Catholic Pope from 1143 to John Paul II. He predicted that there would be only two more popes after John Paul II.

Malachy saw and committed to paper a series of Latin phrases describing the popes to come. These are brief lines of no more than four words, referring to a pope's family name, birthplace, or coat-of-arms.

For example, Pius III, who reigned for only 26 days in 1503, was described as "De Parvo Homine," or "from a little man." Pius's family name was Piccolomini, Italian for "little man."

Our present pope was labeled, "De Labore Solis," or "from the toil of the sun." John Paul II is a native of Krakow, Poland. Krakow is the city where Copernicus "toiled" for years to prove his heretical theory that the earth revolved around the sun.

To think of what hunger really means is a hard task. If asked who the hungry are, one might picture a bag lady on the streets of Philadelphia or a third world child with big eyes and a distended belly. Both of these pictures of hunger are true.

In our world today, there are one billion people who are hungry. This year alone, 15 to 20 million people will die as a result of hunger. These people are just like us, except that they do not have enough of a basic human need — food.

Knowing that hungry people exist does not make the task of understanding what it means to be hungry clearer. It is hard to imagine never having enough to eat or to imagine the feelings of frustration and hurt when a child gets sick or dies. But that is the reality of hunger.

Every November, for the past 13 years, Villanova has held Hunger Awareness Week. This year, Hunger Awareness Week will be held from Nov. 9 through Nov. 16. The week is designed to raise the consciousness of our Villanova community and to offer a concrete way of alleviating hunger.

For the second consecutive year, the proceeds will go to Haiti, which is the poorest country in the western hemisphere.

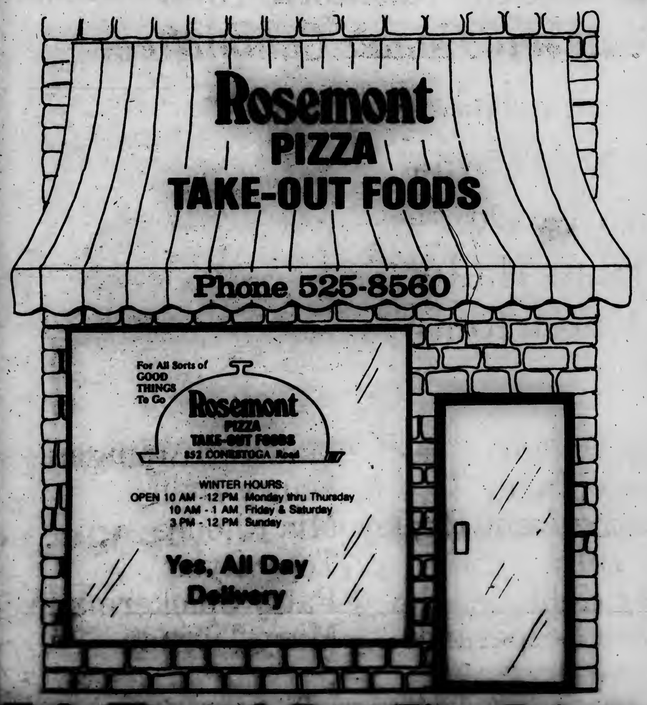
The slums of Haiti consist of open sewers and row upon row of tin shacks. As many as 12 people may live in these shacks, which are smaller than a dorm room.

Many children living here are so malnourished that their physical and mental growth has slowed down.

Yet, amidst this scene of poverty, there are people making a difference. One such man is Father Bohnen, known as "Father Bean," who has set up a system of feeding and teaching 15,000 children.

In order to receive a meal of beans, corn, bread and milk, the children must attend school. Thus, Bohnen is not giving a handout, but he is helping people to better their own lives. This year the proceeds from Hunger Awareness Week will aid Bohnen in building a school in the name of the students of Villanova.

The events of next week will allow the entire campus to participate in helping to end hunger. There will be a run for hunger, a mini-marathon, special liturgies and a fast day, where students in the campus dining halls can give up their lunch and donate the proceeds.



In addition, there will be lectures, movies, games and an ongoing letter writing campaign to lobby congressional representatives on a specific hunger issue. Finally, on Nov. 16, the internationally acclaimed British rock group "General Public" will end the week with a concert.

As college students, it is very easy to feel powerless in the face of such an immense problem as hunger. However, we are not powerless.

Hunger Awareness Week provides an opportunity to learn about hunger and make a real difference in Haiti. Perhaps, if for a moment, we can all imagine what it really means to be hungry, we will be challenged to take a stand and try to end hunger in our world.

Meg Lynch is the co-chairperson of Hunger Awareness Week.

Day Hop haunted

By FRANK DUNNE

A multitude of Main Line youngsters descended incognito, upon the Day Hop in Dougherty Hall, the night of Oct. 30.

Why, you ask, were the rug rats here rather than out terrorizing the neighborhood on what is traditionally known as Mischief Night or Devil's Night?

These young, upstanding members of the community opted to take their parents to the Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils' annual Halloween bash for local kids.

Who can blame them? They get an additional night to obtain a bag full of free candy.

The party went something like this. Each fraternity and sorority set up a candy booth. The little monsters, dressed in proper Halloween attire, were compelled to visit each booth where they received a Halloween treat. This sounds like a great warm-up exercise for Halloween night.

Also, prizes were awarded for the best costumes. Each fraternity and sorority gave a prize for their respective favorites.

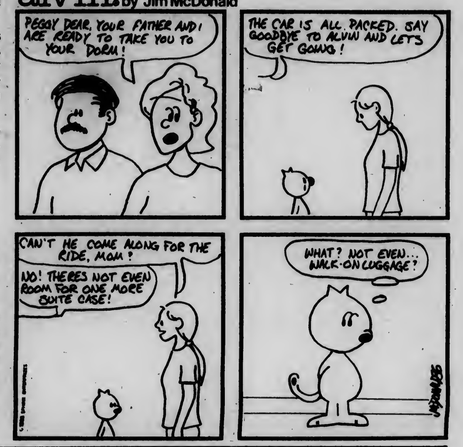
This six-year-old felt at home with the Wildcat at last week's Halloween party.

What do you think these Greek organizations had to offer the little linoleum lizards as prizes? A cap or shirt with the appropriate logo, of course.

According to Betsy Stanfield, president of the Panhellenic Council, the whole party was a runaway success, as it usually is. "The parents love it," said Stanfield. Stanfield went on to say that the parents get into it more than the children.

I asked Stanfield what makes the whole operation worthwhile. After a brief loss for words, she beamed and said, "When you see the smile on those youngsters' faces, you forget all your personal problems for a moment and life is wonderful."

Well folks, if that does not leave you with a lump in your throat, I do not know what else to tell you.



Seriously, though, the reactions of Stanfield and Main Line parents indicate that the Halloween party was a great way to get part of the outside community to mix with the University community.

Apparently, the outsiders were left with a good impression. Perhaps there should be more such events.

Facts on suicides revealed

percent were graduate students and 13 percent were freshmen.

September and March seem to be the peak suicide seasons on campus, the researchers said. None of the researchers involved in the study, described as the first extensive scientific look at suicide on the college level, was sure why.

Drugs seemed to be involved in many of the recorded instances of suicide.

Even bad publicity, added David Phillips and Lundie Carstensen of the University of California at San Diego, who published their look at teen suicide in last week's edition of the New England Journal of Medicine, can push some suicide-prone students over the edge.

There was, they say, a 7 percent increase in the numbers of teen suicides nationwide after national broadcast showings of movies such as "Hear Me Cry" on CBS, "Surviving" on ABC and NBC's "A Reason To Live." However, broadcast executives disagree.

Gauthier nevertheless thinks "high school and college suicides are different. At what age do kids have a concept that death is final? My sense is that 15-to-17 year olds have a heightened emotional sensitivity, but their concept of death is not mature."

Don't waste 'Money' on Newman

Paul Newman, pictured here in "The Verdict," stars as a hustler along with Tom Cruise in "The Color of Money."

By THERESA JONES

Despite the potential of two great names in the lead roles, "The Color of Money" comes up in the red as far as entertainment value is concerned. The combination of Paul Newman and Tom Cruise surely allures the female audience, only to be disappointed by what results as a flat film, adapted from the novel by Walter Tevis.

The plot is quite simple, with nothing too dramatic or surprising. An ex-pool hustler Eddie Felson (played by Newman) has retired to running a pool-hall/bar and acting as "agent" for a younger hustler. Then he discovers Vincent Lauria (Cruise), and sees his talent and potential as a money maker, and persuades him to go on the road as his protege. The goal is to clean up at the 9-Ball Tournament in Atlantic City, where all the greats will come to play.

Vincent's girlfriend comes along, making the trio complete in business and love affairs. Newman, of course, has his girl too, but she does not fit into the Atlantic City plan, and stays behind, causing some grief for Newman.

Anyway, Eddie sets out to show Vincent the ropes, make him a "student of human moves," and in the meantime take 60 percent of his winnings. Teaching Vincent anything is not an easy task because Vincent is an immature flake, who wants to play the game to win and show off, not necessarily to play Eddie's game of hustle. Eddie has to treat Vincent on the same childish level at which he behaves to get anywhere with him, threatening more than once to drop the whole affair.

He also gets Carmen (played by Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio), to use her feminine influence, for she understands the financial aspects of the situation better than Vincent does. The pattern of childish behavior and slap-on-the-wrist reprimands becomes tiresome quickly.

The message of "The Color of Money," which is basically how to cheat people out of it, is expressed throughout in various lines given by Newman: "The best is the guy with the most"; "Mercy ain't professional"; "Money won is twice as sweet as money earned." Not a lot of profundity there.

Eddie does have another motive besides money, though, in taking Vincent under his wing. Vincent revives the old thrill of the hustle for him, and he goes out alone one night to try his luck. He holds his own for a while until Vincent and Carmen show up to find him outmatched by a young black hustler. Eddie is shattered, and after too many drinks he breaks down in a pathetic display of humiliation and self-contempt for being taken in. At that point he abandons Vincent and Carmen, sending them off to make it to Atlantic City on their own.

Which they do — no great surprise — and whom do they come to find entered in the tournament but Fast Eddie Felson. Imagine that. And was the audience surprised when the former partners came up against each other in the quarterfinals? Doubtfully. I won't reveal the final outcome, for although it lacked all true drama, it was not quite as predictable as the rest of the film.

At any rate, in the final scene there is of course a rematch, which avails Eddie the opportunity for the final line, "I'm back!" If that was supposed to be climactic, it falls short by about a mile, as do most of the attempts at drama and humor.

Overall, "The Color of Money" fails to take advantage of its casting, its sole asset aside from a few good songs on the soundtrack. Cruise plays such an immature ham that he is never truly likable, and the pathetic display by Newman's character creates a poor image as well. There were no special effects to speak of, except for some fancy shots at the pool table, but how special and effective can that be?

As I said, even the final scene fails to be dramatic, and I would have liked to have avoided it altogether because Cruise strutted into it looking all too much like John Travolta in "Saturday Night Fever." Not a particularly good final image to leave his fans with.

McCartney reveals he hasn't lost his touch

BY KEVIN HECHT

Press To Play
Paul McCartney

Paul McCartney has had one of the greatest impacts on modern music with compositions that will forever reveal him to be a supremely talented artist. Regardless of this fact, he has never been able to shake his critics who have consistently labeled his work shallow, unimaginative and colorless. Many recent albums seem to be fuel for this criticism, exposing a listless and complacent artist wallowing in a sea of stagnant music and tedious lyrics that left even his staunchest fans longing for the McCartney of old.

This longing may be over because Press To Play, his latest release, shows signs that Paul McCartney is emerging from his musical hibernation with a more creative diverse and colorful collection of songs which reveal that he hasn't yet lost his touch.

Press To Play, produced by McCartney along with Hugh Padgham on Capitol Records, is a tight, upbeat collection of songs that seem to show a deliberate attempt by McCartney to get back to his musical roots with simple rock laden rhythms that showcase an intensity which has been conspicuously absent as of late.

Linda is mercifully shoved more into the background, and Paul is joined by a strong and impressive group of musicians that include Eric Stewart (formerly of 10 CC), Pete Townsend and yes, no album would be complete without "Mr. Everywhere" Phil Collins making an appearance. This group gives the music an extra push that helps McCartney revive a steady and healthy pulse in his compositions.

Two of the best songs on the album, "Stranglehold" and "Angry," were written with Stewart, marking the first time Paul has successfully teamed up with someone since John Lennon, and these two make a great combination. "Stranglehold" opens with a bluesy riff on Paul's guitar that cuts loose into a catchy opening song.

"Angry" is a refreshingly intense song with an unusually emotional McCartney, possibly responding to his critics, screaming, "What the hell gives you the right to tell me what to do with my life?/ Especially when you made a mess of every chance you had of success./ Look at you./ I said I'm angry just looking at you. "This song's fiery down to earth rock style accents perfectly the feeling he is trying to convey.

"Footprints," a Beatlesque song reminiscent old classics such as "Blackbird" and "Norwegian Wood," succeeds with its unique acoustic rhythm, and showcases McCartney's mastery of using subtle nuance to add color to his music. Slight inflectons in his voice and guitar make the songs more interesting, and one can hear something different each time the song is listened to.

"Only Love Remains," the album's most beautiful composition, is a soothing love song exemplifying why McCartney has been one of the best ballad writers in music. It's a moving, but not corny, song backed by clear and lucid orchestration that never overpowers the simple lyrics.

Although experimentation can be a good thing, McCartney goes overboard with "Pretty Little Head" and "However Absurd." These songs really don't fit into the context of the album, and show an over eagerness that tips the scales from being too complacent, to being too abstract and aggressive. "However Absurd" is more reminiscent of John Lennon's far out lyrics than Paul's more conservative style. ("It's a funny thing, half serious/ With our hands on our ears,/ Living dreams with mouths ajar,/ awake, we go to sleep.")

One of the most appealing things about Paul McCartney is that in his music, one can sense a good-natured and content human being coming through. "Good Times Coming/Feel The Sun," "Talk More Talk" and "Move Over Busker" don't deal with any earth shattering truths or deep moral issues, but they are positive and appealing in the tongue-in-cheek way that McCartney presents them. There is definitely the feeling present that he is having fun, which makes the album more fun to listen to in response.

Press To Play is a positive turn around for Paul McCartney that may very well silence some of his critics. It is by no means a classic, but it is a good album that will be thoroughly enjoyed by his fans. If he continues on this present musical direction, and further solidifies his partnership with Eric Stewart, McCartney could very well produce strong and innovative music for some time to come, and that's a comforting thought because the world of music wouldn't be the same without Paul McCartney.

Paul and Linda McCartney recently released his latest album, Press to Play, on Capitol Records and it is destined to be a hit.

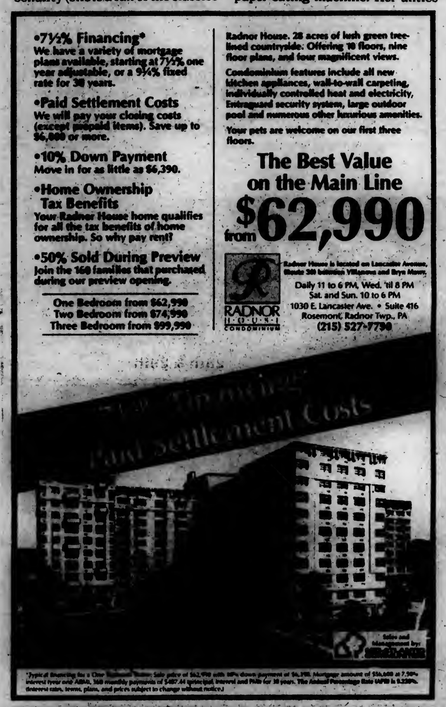
Penny Marshall makes Whoopi Goldberg a star

By MARYANNE ELLIOTT

"Jumpin' Jack Flash" is a movie which is definitely a gas. A complete antithesis from her heart-rending role in the "Color Purple," Whoopie Goldberg's performance is again outstanding in her zany portrayal of a bank employee who suddenly becomes entangled in espionage via her computer terminal. Whoopi plays the part of an eccentric data processor who is in charge of the transfer of international funds. She is a non-conformist electronic whiz who is misunderstood and generally oppressed by her uptight, conservative boss. Whoopi 's somewhat outrageous personality (she is a fan of the classics — Gumby, Pokey, Humphrey Bogart and Mick Jagger) is the only element which alleviates the tedium of her life. Unexpectedly, however, the drudgery of her 9-to-5 rut is relived when a message from an English spy, who is trapped behind the Iron Curtain, appears on her monitor.



Whoopi finds herself entangled in a web of secret codes, double agents and deadly thugs. However, she bravely battles to obtain a passport out of danger for the ensnared spy whom she knows only as Jack. Whoopi 's combative efforts include attacking intruders with a giant toothbrush, climbing the British Embassy in a sequined evening gown and fending off a paper-eating machine. Her antics keep the audience in stitches. What is truly amazing about this comedy, however, is that it actually has a rather intricate plot. The sequence of events keeps the viewer in suspense.

If you are in the mood for a movie which is highly amusing, as well as exciting, "Jumpin' Jack Flash" is alright!

Friendly Floppies. . .

By RUSS CECCOLA

Activision Software, the largest software conglomerate in America, has released many new games in the past month or so. The company went through the software fallout in the late '70s to emerge as the leading voice in the home computer game and utility program field.

TRANSFORMERS: BATTLE TO SAVE THE EARTH  ACTIVISION, INC.

The popular children's toy has finally made it to the home computer market in the form of a mission for the Transformers creatures. They must save Earth from the evil Decepticons by deploying to different strategical locations and battling them. It seems that the Decepticons need different objects in their quest for destruction of the Earth, including nuclear power, a giant model dinasour and other strange things. Despite the obvious ploy to bring children into the master plan in the home computer market, Transformers is incredibly difficult. Little children will probably get a bit distressed.

You have to monitor all of the different locations and deploy Transformers accordingly. The difficulty lies in that while you are fighting Decepticons in one location, there are more stealing things somewhere else. The graphics are excellent, enabling you to see each of the Transformers changing into a vehicle to go fight the Decepticons. I would bill Transformers as a challenging adult game, while keeping the children away from it. They can still watch the animated story on the flip side of the disk. David Crane designed Transformers, still known for his work on the Atari Video Computer System, with such titles as Pitfall I and II. Good job, but try it with Smurfs next time.

LABYRINTH: THE COMPUTER GAME  ACTIVISION, INC.

This adventure, based on the superbly made movie by George Lucas and Jim Henson, is definitely the best adventure game of any kind to come out for a long time, since the days of Zork. It combines excellent graphics and the humor and plot of the movie. One escapes from the maze of the title by saving your little battle and battling the evil Jareth at the center of the maze. After choosing your favorite color, name and whether you are a male or female, you journey in your home town to reach the movie theater where "Labyrinth," the movie, is playing while gathering all you need for your adventure. As you sit down to watch the film, Jareth greets you with your challenge as the face of Jareth/David Bowie appears on the screen. You are then put at the entrance of the maze, with a 13-hour time limit in which to finish your mission.

Along the way, you meet all of the creatures that were in the film and journey through all of the different parts of the huge maze. I still haven't made it to the end of the game, requiring a couple of phone calls to Activision to get as far as I am now, yet it is still a challenge. The graphics are clear, very recognizable and definitely one of the strong points of the game. The music of the movie is intertwined into the game also. Despite unfamiliarity with the movie in the summer, which you shouldn't have missed anyway, I command every true adventure lover and even the slightest interested to go buy Labyrinth. This one is an award-winner easily.

THE ROCKY HORROR SHOW  ELECTRIC DREAMS

First there was the movie, now the video game. This seems to be the theme of this week's column. The great thing is that all of the games are excellent. "Rocky Horror" has been a cult movie for over ten years now, and it is an appropriate time to release the game. The goal of Rocky Horror is to find the pieces of the DeMedusa machine that will release your boyfriend or girlfriend depending on whether you choose to be Janet or Brad from the film. You accomplish this by wandering through the ancient mansion that houses Dr. Frankenfurter, Riff Raff, Columbia and all of the other characters in the movie. The background theme music is the popular "Let's Do the Time Warp Again" from the movie soundtrack.

Although the atmosphere and play of Rocky Horror are pretty good, the graphics aren't that stunning. The characterization of the people in the game are fairly vague. However, the background illustrations are well-drawn. Electric Dreams is a British company distributing through Activision in America, and as a first entry in the home video game market, has produced a good approximation of the feel of "Rocky Horror." Worth the price for all you "Rocky Horror" fans.

HOWARD THE DUCK: ADVENTURE ON VOLCANO ISLAND  ACTIVISION, INC.

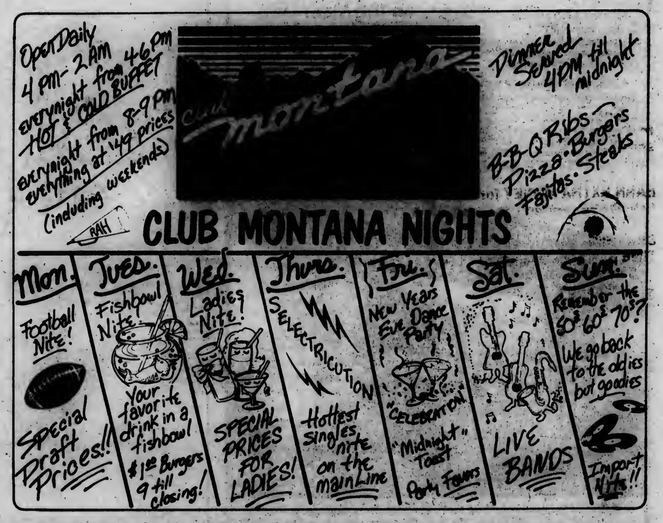
The movie "Howard the Duck" was a flop in all senses of the word. It has already been voted as the worst movie of 1986. Still, the comic strip that Howard originally came from is an excellent satirical work. The object of the video game has nothing to do with the comic strip. The story is that you are Howard the Duck and have to save your friends by making it to the other side of the island. The graphics are excellent and the game play fantastic, but the game can be incredibly hard at the higher levels. Still, the player has the option of choosing which level to start on. The plot is relatively simple, the animation is very creative, with Howard wiggling his tail when he leaves the water, yet I wonder whether as a video game it will hit or flop. Still, in all ways, Howard the Duck is a fun adventure with an interesting animated introduction and well deserves the name Activision.

ABC wins ratings with innovative program

By MARYJO YANNACONE

Television has made tremendous strides in the past 10 or 15 years, and these strides have produced highly favorable responses from the American viewing public. We have gone from black-oriented shows like "Sanford and Son" and "Good Times," which portrayed minority families in a negative way, to upbeat sitcoms that depict the modern black family as successful and happy.

Without a doubt, the most popular and well-received of these sitcoms has been the phenomenally successful "Cosby Show," which has consistently ranked No. 1 in the Nielsen's ratings for the past three seasons. With NBC sweeping up in the Thursday night ratings, rival networks ABC and CBS have been scrambling to gain some footage in viewer support. Their attempts have so far been unsuccessful.



"Magnum P.I., once a consistent top 10 in the Nielsen's and a CBS winner, dropped sharply in the ratings when "Cosby was aired, and has since been moved to another time slot. ABC has made numerous attempts at breaking NBC down, but to no avail. They may be gaining ground, however, with their latest project: a thought-provoking journey into the past program entitled "Our World."

Produced by Rolfe Tessem and Vincent Stafford, "Our World" is a scrapbook, and in watching, we gain insight into a slice of the past. The program presents Linda Ellerbee and Ray Gandolf as hosts, narrators, and reporters. They perch on stools in front of what is supposed to be an old newsstand, then segue into glimpses of the past. "Think of this not as a television studio," Mr. Gandolf says, "but as a combination of your grandmother's attic and the old neighborhood." The magazine show, Ellerbee continues, will be "the stuff of yesterday."

Examining the historic and cultural dimensions of a major moment in recent history, Ellerbee and Gandolf, who also co-write the program, have a quiet sense of humor about the past, and, much to their credit, they have the events in perspective. In the opening segment, we were taken back to 1969 and the wildly radical concert at Woodstock. Ellerbee and Gandolf conveyed the atmosphere of the times — the turmoil surrounding the marches on Washington, and the tragedy of Martin Luther King's death. In this week's episode, Sid Caesar, Dr. Jonas Salk and Helen Hayes remembered 1954, the year of the polio vaccine, the creation of Sports Illustrated and the McCarthy hearings.

"Our World" is the first really fresh concept in TV News since "60 Minutes," and it promises to be a successful one, if viewers just give it a chance. The program is not only informative, but also interesting; not only full of meaning, but also fun. When interviewed in late July of this year, Ellerbee commented that her hopes for the show were for it to be literate and fine and win the awards and praise that she feels

Iggy's latest album is a flop

By KATHLEEN FINLEY

Blah Blah Blah
Iggy Pop
A&M Records

Iggy crawls out onto the darkened stage with a mysterious look about him and he begins to work the crowd into a frenzy. Thrusting his tortured (self-inflicted) body upon the audience, wild-eyed Iggy always gives a fierce performance.

Now he is standing on a junkyard heap, dancing in jerky movements, and wriggling around on MTV — Hey! That's Iggy Pop! The king of the musical artists' underground, Iggy (Jim Osterberg), has been resurrected after years of wallowing in depths of his environment of drugs. He has emerged out of his period of physical ruin, a healthier and richer, consequently happier man.

Iggy owes much of his success to his long-time contemporary and buddy, David Bowie, who has basically done everything except vocalize on Pop's latest release, Blah Blah Blah. Iggy has previously accepted the talented services of Bowie on two of his older albums, The Idiot and Lust for Life. Iggy sounds so much like Bowie on this album that it really could have been "the man" himself.

Side One is basically Bowie's baby with three out of the five tracks produced by Bowie. "Baby, It Can't Fall," "Shades," and "Isolation" are classical pieces stemming from Bowie's genius. The overall sound of these songs are uncharacteristic of Iggy, although the lyrics are right down his alley.

Iggy has never had the knack for words: "Johnny can't read/ Blah blah blah/I can't read/ Blah blah blah/ Tuna on white, guns all night/ Blah blah blah." "Blah Blah Blah" is the album's weakest track since it sounds like the techno-pop trash that is so common today. Iggy uses the digital delay for his voice and Bowie has fun with his new found toy, the four-track. The deep voice technique of Morrison is used on "Cry For Love," Iggy's claim to top 40 fame. With Steve Jones (former Sex Pistols guitarist) jamming on some solos, how could Iggy miss? The rock-n-roll energy of Jones creates a powerful song for MTV.

Blah Blah Blah is Iggy's major breakthrough since his last big dent in the music scene, the album Party. Iggy has progressed from the adolescent anger of the Stooges, the first authentic thrash band, to the electronicized-tracked sound of the new Iggy. His cry for love has been answered with a lot of money and the more-than-anxious public, after waiting a seemingly hopeless long time for a new album.

Granted, Iggy is an intriguing person and a talented artist, but he took the artist's path of temptation and sold out.

Howell in college

By KATIE KRACKELER

When I sat down in the Eric Twin in Wayne to see Steven Tiche's new production "Soul Man," I must admit, I had some doubts. The concept of a white college student making himself black and actually getting away with it struck me as absurd, and I prepared myself for the worst. As it turns out, I was premature in my critisim, and despite its far-fetched plot, "Soul Man" actually has many redeeming qualities that make it a comedy well worth seeing.

The story opens when Mark Watson, played by C. Thomas Howell, a beguiling frat-boy from UCLA, gets accepted to Harvard Law School. The ecstasy of this life-long dream comes crashing down when Mark's father informs him that he refuses to give one-cent towards tuition, leaving Mark at a complete loss.

But of course, all is not lost. Through the help of some rather potent tanning pills, Mark quickly "changes" his race — making himself the most qualified black applicant for a full scholarship. He arrives at Harvard a new man (literally), and begins to play his role to the hilt; successfully fooling everyone he meets. Yet when he attempts to adopt the "cool" attitude of a brother, he comes across looking and sounding ridiculous, and not at all convincing. Fortunately, no one in the movie seems to notice and he evades suspicion.

A romance develops between Mark and his fellow law student named Sarah, played by Rae Dawn Chong, a beautiful black girl who helps Mark see the prejudices endured by black people because of the closed-minded attitudes present in white society. The romantic quality of these scenes offers an appropriate break from the slap-stick comedy scenes — in this way the film is nicely balanced.

Finally, and quite predictably, Mark's soul man charade is discovered and his days as a brother come to an end. But in the true fashion of a Harvard Law student, Mark appeals to the discipline board and convinces them that his desperate position pushed him to these drastic measures. They buy his story and Mark stays.

Without question, the best performance in the film is given by James Earl Jones who plays the impressive criminal law instructor, Professor Banks. His presence is felt when he is on the screen and he is capable of intimidating his students as well as the audience. Jones adds quality to this picture and brings life to an otherwise mediocre cast.

There is one problem in this film that should be pointed out: the Soul Man doesn't look black. In fact, in some scenes, it just appears that he has a good tan, and combined with the fact that his hair looks precisely like a poorly made wig, you are forced to stretch your imagination to believe that he actually looks authentic.

But I can't be too hard on this film because it really is clever. Most of the comic sequences are hilarious and it succeeds in delivering a message about the stereotypical impressions whites hold about black people.

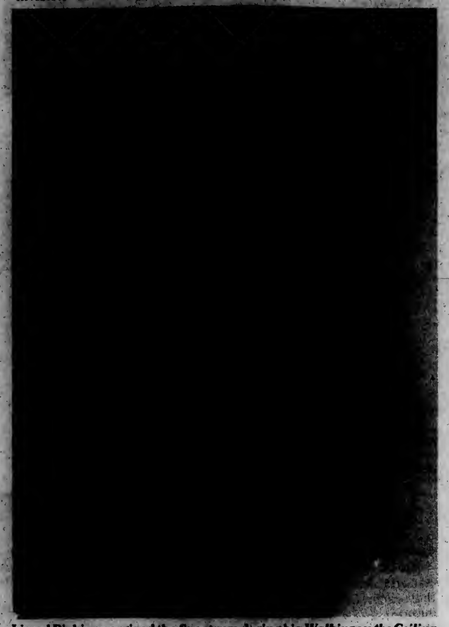
So if you like to go to movies simply for the sake of being entertained, then "Soul Man" is for you. It is a nice break from the realistic drama, and it's nice to see a movie with a happy ending again.

Lionel Richie plays Spectrum

By ANTHONY MEDORI

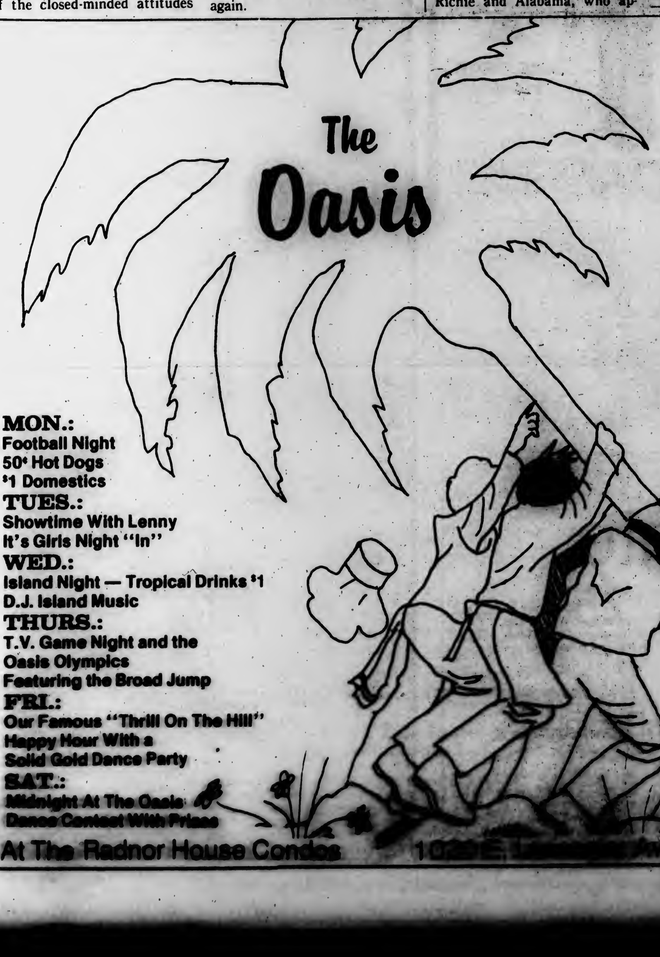
The audience could see only a dim stage with keyboards and a set of percussions. It didn't take long for this state of affairs to be altered as the snow-white stage separated itself, and light shined on the baby grand Yamaha emerging from the center. The unaided keys started playing "Hello" to a roaring crowd as Lionel Richie walked out and made his first appearance of the 1986 Dancin' On the Ceiling tour.

Richie didn't give the house a second of rest, singing "All Night Long" to captive listeners who haven't heard the concert version since his Can't Slow Down tour in 1984. the tone then mellowed as Richie and his "outrageous" band, performed a soft medley of his former hits including "Endless Love," "Truly," "You Are," "Penny Lover" and "Three Times a Lady" (a song written by Richie and performed by the Commodores in 1978).



The concert, like its namesake album, combined soft, heart feeling music with dancing-in-the-aisle tunes. The album is probably his most diverse yet, combining music from a variety of backgrounds. The Grammy Award winning "Say You, Say Me" was written by Richie on the request of the producer of the film "White Nights."

Richie strives to touch all aspects of his experiences. Reaching back to his Jamacian roots he created "Se La," a light upbeat tune which he performed on stage with Sheila E. that reminds everyone to drop their worries and enjoy life.



Richie even entered the country music scene with "Deep River Woman." It was performed by Richie and Alabama, who appeared through the magic of video to sing background.

The encore performance of Dancin' On the Ceiling was undoubtly the climax of the concert. Richie took center stage, while the band literally danced in the air as invisible cables supported each musician in his respective orbit during the song.

Lionel's sound is unique. He achieves what most performers do not, which is music that touches personal experience along with a beat that keeps the audience moving.

Commodores: 'United' to produce failure

By MEGAN GUIDERA

United
The Commodores
Polygram Records

When someone says Commodores, what do you think of? If the answer is not "nothing" perhaps it's: "They are Lionel Richie's old band." The Commodores, recently released a new album, United. Although The Commodores may feel "united," their album is an unorganized compilation of songs.

After choosing "United" as their title and central theme the band simply threw the idea of unification out the window and sang monotonously about the problems of a relationship with a woman, or a babe, as they so frequently call females. The only visible sign of unification was a corny picture of the four band members (Wak, J.D., Milan, and Clyde) linking arms on the back of the album.

The album's title track "United In Love" started with a soft beat and pretty lyrics that displayed potential. However, the song was destroyed by its constant repetition and dragging beat. The Commodores seem to have success with their title tracks. Their last album Night Shift, which was released in March of 1985, had a very popular title track, the song "Night Shift." "Night Shift" was a tribute to the deceased Marvin Gaye.

From the halfway decent title track the album went steadily downhill. The first side began with the nonsensical song "Goin' to the Bank" even included an actual bank teller scenario. This ridiculous attempt at a rap is simply a bank teller reminding J.D. that there's a substantial penalty for early withdrawal. The lyrics are repetitive, stupid and chauvinistic. The song makes the typical female appear to have the intelligence quotient of Lucy Ricardo.

In the song "I want to Rock You" the percussion is so loud that the voice of J.D. Nicholas can scarcely be heard. The song tells of a man that wants "to rock" or rather make love to a woman. Periodically thoroughout the song "rock . . . rock. . . rock . . . rock . . . I want to rock you," is chanted; however, it sounds like some sort of jungle chant that makes absolutely no sense whatsoever.

The song "Let's Apologize" started off with fair potential. Sung by Walter Orange and J.D. Nicholas, the song had a great deal of keyboard and guitar music. It took on a reggae beat. However, as they did in most of the other songs, The Commodores destroyed the song with a horrible ending consisting of the constant repetition of the title "Let's Apologize."

The album was unprofessional and sloppy. The majority of the lyrics just did not fit the music. "Land of the Dreamer" had a strong percussion and synthesizer beat; however, the lyrics were nursery school rhythms like: "The spirit is high we reach for the sky." It must have taken a lyrical genius to write the verse that said: "Anytime of the day or night/ We rock in the U.S.A./ Sundown to the morning light/ U ey ey."

The album cover itself consisted of the four individual band members smiling in an extremely posed position. The album jacket contained statements by each of the band members where they thanked everyone from God to their children for moral support. Perhaps they needed this support after listening to what they had created; either way it appeared as highly informal and unprofessional.

Many things in life have peaks and valleys. The Commodore's album United was their lowest valley. It was boring, long and repetitive. Save the $8 for a real album.

'Our World'

were denied her during her eleven years at NBC.

Regardless of any personal vendetta, Ellerbee, Gandolf, and the creators, directors, and producers of "Our World" deserve special recognition for their attempts to elevate the minds of the American people. Few shows today challenge the intellect because we choose instead to be entertained, and, consequently, the networks are flooded with light sitcoms and adventure series. This is not to say that those shows have no merit, for entertainment is certainly an acceptable way to spend valued leisure time.

But if you are one of the lucky ones who have access to a VCR, then follow the request of the ABC executives that is being broadcast nationwide and tape "Cosby," watch "Our world." You won't be disappointed.

Glass and friends lead the avant-garde

By RICH ABRAHAM

AVANT—GARDE: Those who create, produce or apply new, original or experimental ideas.
SAVIORS: The Festival's that present avant-garde entertainment.

Philadelphia's American Music Theater (three years old) and the Brooklyn Academy of Music's Next Wave Festival (five years old) have become leaders in this field in a relatively short period of time.

You may ask "What three artists could be considered to be currently working at the apex of avant-garde?" My answer would be "I would be forced to pick composer Phillip Glass and theater artist Robert Wilson for the elder generation and Mark Morris, dancer/choreographer, as an influence for the new generation of avant-garde."

Approximately one month ago, I viewed Phillip Glass' new opera as a part of the American Music Theater Festival. Co-composed with Robert Moran, The Juniper Tree was a surprisingly pleasant and attention-grabbing experience. The surprise came because my previous experience of operas consisted of: (a) a feeling of confined movement, (b) static visual staging during an act, and (c) a lack of comprehension in dialogue that is not always because of a foreign language.

Coming out of the theater, I realized that the characters on the stage could, with a freedom of their own, fill the eyes with movement. If The Juniper Tree is looked at closely, it is readily noticeable the Glass and Moran's music is really the key for it holds the fairy tale and everything around it together as one.

Janet Brown as The Stepdaughter (left) and Jayne West as The First Wife in "The Juniper Tree."

A man who Glass has worked with closely at times (Example: The creation of Einstein On The Beach almost a decade ago), Wilson has had successes of his own. His most recent achievement, Alcestis, which has opened earlier this past winter in America, was chosen to open the Festival d'Automne in Paris during September 1986. This marked the first time an American company had been invited to the Parisian festival, which is one of the most highly regarded metropolitan performing arts festivals in Europe.

Wilson's stage decorations tend to be minimalistic with his use of stream-of-consciousness pictures and geometric shapes. With this technique he can seem to add both obvious simplicity and underlying complexity to a play at the same time. If it has not been said already, it can and probably will be said Wilson is painting on a stage.

Also receiving recent raves for his part in avant-garde performances is Morris, America's version of best of the young choreographers. At 30 years old, he has been called "the pre-eminent craftsman of his generation "by Vanity Fair. In reviewing a new production of his earlier this year, Time magazine called Soap Powders and Detergents "a brimming piece of choreography, filled with wit and invention and certain brash confidence." Also an excellent dancer, some feel his talent is without end.

To withdraw from my digression, I now return to the festivals or, more specifically to the Brooklyn Academy of Music's Next Wave Festival. Starting on Oct. 7, it will continue to present avant-garde entertainment until Dec. 30. Included in the schedule are Glass, Wilson and Morris.

Glass and Wilson will be presenting the American premiere of Act V — Rome Section of "Civil Wars" in a operatic performance that will close the festival and run from Dec. 12

If you can't wait until Dec. 12 for some avant-garde entertainment, Mark Morris has been scheduled to perform his premiere this Wednesday through Friday.

Naturally these aren't the only options available, so if you would like any information on Next Wave Festival you can call (718) 636-4100.

WKVU fundraiser

By MICHELE O'NEIL

WKVU, the voice of Villanova, has been back on the air now for one month and in that one month, the staff of WKVU has already planned many fun and exciting things for all of the Villanova community to enjoy.

First off, Congratulations go out to Daniel Loughran, the station's newly appointed general manager. Dan, as his staff address him, is currently a junior history major at Villanova University. Dan sees the position of general manager as an opportunity to get Villanovans more involved in the Villanova community.

"As of now WKVU focuses more on resident students because the station is heard in the dorms and that is it. WKVU and Villanova are trying to change the focus to both resident students as well as off campus resident," said Loughran.

How, you might ask, is WKVU going to be able to reach the amount of people they hope to reach? The easiest and most logical answer is to have the radio station convert over to FM. The process is underway, but there are no promises being made that the conversion will take place this year, but it will happen in the near future.

Today, WKVU is having a fundraiser in the North Lounge of Dougherty from 11:30 to 4:30 p.m. The name, "Albums BUY the Pound," sums up the jist of what this fundraiser is about. Because the station had over 1,000 albums Dr. Richard Welch, faculty advisor, and several staff members thought it would be a neat idea to sell them by the pound to Villanova students. Can you beat five albums for $1.50? If you have not come yet, go and check it out.

Also this week WKVU would like to congratulate Ceasor Ettore for being elected the first "DJ of the Week" by the staff of WKVU. Every week WKVU will choose a DJ to be awarded this title. Winners will be judged on performance, originality, tact and accomplishment. Caesar was able to bring the heavy metal band "Krank" to Villanova for an interview. This is a great accomplishment and the staff felt it should be rewarded. Thanks Caesar!

That about wraps up the events WKVU has planned so far, but you, the Villanova community, will be informed when other activities develop. There are other events that have not made it passed the proposal stage, but once the plans are confirmed, you will be the first to know.

WKVU is always open for suggestions by its listeners. If you have any ideas that you think may be fun, stop by 210 Dougherty and tell them.

Women's wrap up

By MIKE SMITH

The Villanova field hockey team ended their season on a down note by losing their last two games. The Wildcats lost 1-0 against West Chester last Thursday, and followed that with a 2-0 loss to Ursinus.

The Cats finished the year at 8-12-1. Their leading scorers were Anita D'Ancenza with nine goals and three assists, and Sharon Seiz with eight goals and one assist. Goalie Sue Ruff allowed 37 goals and had 206 total saves.

VILLANOVA HOSTS NEIFC-NEPC EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA WORKSHOP

By KATIE VAN ALLEN

The Northeastern Interfraternity Council-Northeastern Panhellenic Council Eastern Pennsylvania Fall Workshop was held Nov. 1 in the Connelly Center. 217 Greeks from 25 schools in the area attended the leadership workshop which was hosted by Villanova Greeks for the first time.

Lee Losciale, president of Pi Kappa Alpha and NEIFC Regional vice president, and Katie VanAllen, Delta Gamma and vice president Villanova Panhellenic, served as the workshop co-chairpersons, and invited Father Martin to present a general session on Legal Liability and Mike Green to make a presentation on alcohol concerns. Topics were presented which helped to develop leadership and responsibility among Greeks.

Betty Wallick, National Panhellenic area advisor, presented the Villanova Panhellenic with a Recognition Award for hosting the workshop. Joe Zaller, NEIFC executive vice president, and Pat Farley, NEIFC executive director complimented the success of the workshop, and promtoed the NEIFC NEPC Conference to be held Feb. 26 to March 1 in Philadelphia. Many thanks are extended to Gary Bonas, and the IFC and Panhel Executive Boards for their assistance in hosting the Workshop.

NATIONALS VISIT ALPHA OMICRON PI

The Villanova Beta Delta Chapter of Alpha Omicron Pi hosted two Chapter Consultants, one from Sept. 20-Oct. 2 the other from Oct. 9-16.

Patty Compton, from Overland Park, Ks., and Diane Wakeley, from Piedmont, Calif., are just two of seven recent college graduates serving Alpha Omicron Pi in this position. Villanova University is just one of the stops in a year-long tour of AOII chapters throughout the U.S. and Canada.

The consultants worked with the Villanova chapters emphasizing community and campus involvement, leadership and scholastic achievement. Both consultants have been trained in communication and Chapter Operations, and shared other new ideas with Alpha Omicron Pi members here.

Founded in 1897 at Barnard College of Columbia University in New York, Alpha Omicron Pi has installed 136 collegiate chapters and over 200 Alumnae Chapters. The fraternity has consistently encouraged community leadership and academic excellence of its more than 70,000 members. Philanthropy is also a priority. One of the several charitable funds of the Alpha Omicron Pi Philanthropic Foundation is for Arthritis Research. The Foundation has donated more than $250,000 in grants to researchers.

GREEK IN A WEEKEND LAMBDA KAPPA DELTA

MISTAKES! We all make them, but their true value is to learn from them. Due to an outrageous scavenger hunt several years ago, Lambda Kappa Delta Fraternity had its charter revoked by the school. The school's oldest fraternity is now back with 15 brothers still remaining and seeking rapid regrowth. This semester Lambda Kappa Delta features "Greek in a Weekend," one gigantic rush to increase our quanity of quality people in one weekend. The true values of brotherhood will be scouted for and brought out in the new brothers. Selection process begins now. More information is available on the LKD board next to the entrance of "The Pit" in Dougherty or call one of our houses: Club House at 525-0320 and the LKD House at 527-7529.

IFC-PANHELL HOLD ANNUAL HALLOWEEN PARTY

By KIMBERLY BROGUE

Last Thursday the Annual IFC/Panhel Halloween Party was held in the Day Hop in Dougherty Hall. Children of all ages came in to enjoy the festivities. After registration, the children were allowed to participate in games set up by and manned by the brothers of Sigma Phi Epsilon. The children were then allowed to wander aimlessly through the sea of candy and costumes and fill their bags to the limits of their sugar-filled desire.

Alpha Chi Omega's C.J. O'Sullivan and Alpha Phi Delta's Stephen J. Schlager then presented awards for costumes. Two overall awards were given out for the two age groups.

In the words of alumnus Richard Roth, Sr., "It is certainly a pleasure to see such an enthusiastic group of young people participating in this community activity. As an alumnus and as a neighbor, I was proud." All involved in this fine event should be proud of their work.

Sports Shorts

Correction

Last week's Sports Shorts a headline incorrectly read "Women runners ranked 5th." The headline should have read "Men runners place fifth!" Also, the men's cross country team placed first in the Big Five, which was not mentioned in the article "Women win Big East title."

Tickets available

There are plenty of tickets still available for the football team's finale against Widener on Nov. 15.

Field hockey all-stars

Kelly Hart, Sue Ruff and Ann Rosato of the women's field hockey team were all named to the PAIAW (Philadelphia Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) all-team. Ruff had seven shutouts along with 206 saves and only 37 goals allowed.

Villanova's boxing club will host the second annual night of boxing on Nov. 13 at the John "Jake" Nevin Fieldhouse. Joining the Wildcat pugilists that night will be boxers from Penn State, West Chester, Dickinson, Shippensburg, Lock Haven and VMI. The evening's card of matches begins at 7:30 p.m.

Women's soccer ends season

By MICHAEL IRONS

The women's soccer team concluded a highly successful season on a down note, losing to the third-ranked Patriots of George Mason, 2-1. The women finished the season with a very impressive 12-4-3 record, playing many hard matches with nationally ranked foes.

The lone Wildcat goal was scored by senior Ann Brennan in the second half. Brennan was a stand-out all season long and finished up the season by tying Villanova's record for assists in a season with 10, set by Cathy Ford.

Goalie junior Lynn McHale also tied a record. McHale tied Sue Onmembo's record set in 1981 for most shut-outs in a season with eight. McHale allowed only 16 goals during the whole season, made 94 saves with a 8.54 save percentage.

The Wildcats beat Franklin and Marshall 5-1 in the game preceding the George Mason finale. Brennan added the two assists which put her in the tie with Ford. Sophomore Jean Hajjar scored twice in the match which gave her 10 goals for the season to go with seven assists.

Another sophomore, Anne Beirne, also played consistent excellent ball throughout the season. Beirne, from Dublin, Ireland, was an integral part of the Wildcat defense and her solid play was a reason for the success of McHale.

With so many underclassmen returning for next season, the future centered around McHale, Hajjar and Beirne is extremely bright.

Ice Cats start season slowly

By TOM HUNTER

Villanova's ice hockey team has started another season and is off to a slow start. The team has a 1-3 record and is looking to turn the season around next weekend against Scranton.

The skaters opened with an 8-0 loss against Cortland but were able to rebound the next day against Ocean County by blowing them away 16-0.

This past weekend was extremely painful for the Cats, as they were swept in both of the games they played. In the first game against West Chester, the Cats were dropped by a 7-3 score.

Freshman Mike Julian was the Villanova offensive star, as he scored two goals. Junior Brian Fitzgerald scored the other. Mike Cacciatore, a junior from St. Louis, Mo., accounted for all three assists.

The next day against the Delaware Hens, the Wildcats suffered another setback, this time by a 5-3 loss. Julian added another goal. The other Villanova tallies were socred by Gary Gjertsen and sophomore Mike Drainville, a native from Bellingham, Mass. Drainville is the Cats' leading scorer at this point, scoring four goals and three assists.

Cats rally to tame winless Lions

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

On the banks of the Hudson River, 4,750 people gathered together to watch the Villanova Wildcats take on their first Division I-AA opponent since they brought back football to the Wildcat campus in 1984. The Wildcats were confident as they strode on to Baker Field at the University of Columbia, but that confidence was shattered less than 5 minutes into the game.

Columbia University took the opening kickoff and drove from their own 37 into the Villanova end zone in 10 plays. Villanova got their hands on the ball at their 35-yard line and, as a foreshadowing of what was to come, on the first play from scrimmage the Wildcats threw the ball away.

The Lions reared their heads, as if to sneer at their 27-game losing streak, and three plays later they put the ball in the Wildcat end zone for the second time.

After a Columbia interception followed by a Columbia fumble and a Wildcat recovery, Villanova took the ball and started to lay the ground-work for their first scoring drive. With 4 minutes left in the first quarter Villanova began their drive for the end zone from their own 11-yard line. With passes to Jim Cashman and Pete Lombardi, quarterback Kirk Schulz drove the ball down to the columbia 1-yard line where he proceeded to take it himself into the end zone.

In less time than it takes to run the Kentucky Derby, the Lions had curbed the celebration on the Wildcat sideline. It took Columbia six plays to eclipse 61 yards and an end zone stripe for another six points.

With fury in their eyes, the Wildcat offense came back on to the field, determined not to let the defensive failure stand in the way of a win. Bolstered by a 39-yard pass to Cashman, the Wildcats punched the ball in with a six-yard effort by Ron Sency.

The Wildcat offense barely had time to get to the sidelines before the Lions had run back the kickoff for a touchdown. The Todd Schaeffer kickoff carried to the columbia 19 yard line where John Pennywell sprinted straight down the field to the 30 yard line, veered left toward the sideline and blew past the entire Villanova squad enroute to his 81-yard touchdown return.

Columbia intercepted Schulz for the third time, and then as a measure of courtesy, handed the ball right back to Villanova on the Columbia nine yard line. Following this pattern of politeness, Villanova refused to put points on the board and handed the ball back to the Lions on their own one. Columbia ran the ball up to their 34 before the drive stalled, and the half ended Columbia — 28, Villanova — 14.

Villanova took the second half kickoff at their own 25-yard line, but failed to move the ball and was forced to kick it. George Winslow placed his foot on the ball and let loose a shabby, low, line-drive, 27-yard punt which bounced off the hands of the Lion receiver enabling Villanova to recover the ball at the Columbia 44 yard line.

The Wildcats took no time at all to capitalize on the Lion mistake. Two passes after the recovery Villanova was in the end zone: Schulz to Sency for 21 yards, and Schulz to Brady for 23 yards. Following a penalty on the ensuing kickoff Columbia tried to put it back on tract, starting from their own 8. Five plays later Columbia found themselves at their own 31 ... on defense, following a Brian Reed interception. Two plays later Brady, again, found himself alone in the Columbia end zone and on the receiving end of a touchdown pass.

Villanova's quest to take advantage of the impotent Lions did not stop here, as the Villanova defense again pounced on the opportunities at hand. Columbia, lost the ball again and Villanova recovered at the Columbia 33 yard line. With the ball in the not-so-firm hands of the Villanova offense, the Wildcats stumbled and tripped to a third down and 18 yards to go at the Columbia 29. However, out of this thick mire of uncertainty came a beautifully executed 29-yard slant pass for a touchdown. Villanova had finally taken the lead, 35-28.

The fun for the Wildcats did not subside as Columbia, being almost over-polite by now, refused to hold on to the ball for over four downs and punted the ball away allowing Villanova to start up the offense yet again, this time at their own 24 yard line. With very little trouble the Wildcats marched down to the Columbia 13 yard line where Gary Pascoe plunged up the middle for the score.

Columbia took the kick-off following the touchdown and drove to the Villanova 27 where they seemed to run out of gas and downs. Villanova conservatively ran the ball to the 48 and then Winslow let fly a towering 51-yard punt which penned the Lions at their own one yard line. After an inconsequential four plays by the Lions the Wildcats again got their hands on the ball and drove deep into Lion territory. The Colonna field goal attempt, however, was botched and Columbia took over at their own 30.

Lion reserve quarterback Dave Putelo organized a last-chance drive, behind two long-distance passes of 22 yards and 20 yards, Putelo pushed the ball to the Villanova goal line before throwing a short pass across the middle for the final score of the game.

In the final Villanova series, Schulz took the air out of the ball and as time ran out the scoreboard read ... Villanova 42, Columbia 34.

Volleyball whips rival Hoyas

By NED THOMPSON

The Villanova volleyball team took to the road this past weekend, playing three games in the span of two days. The Wildcats dropped their first two matches against Massachusetts and George Washington University on Saturday but rebounded to defeat Georgetown just 24 hours later.

Against Massachusetts the Cats started slowly, dropping the first two games, 10-15 and 13-15. But the Wildcats heated up and nearly pulled off a miraculous comeback. They won the next two games, 15-13 and 16-14 to even the contest before finally succumbing in the fifth game, 10-15.

Only hours later the Cats were asked to take the floor once again, this time against the home team.

(File Photo)

Coach Dennis McGinnis

The Cats were obviously physically fatigued and emotionally drained and could never get things going against George Washington. They fell in straight games, 12-15, 9-15 and 1-15.

On Sunday, as they have so many times this season on their way to a 17-12 record, the Cats showed what they were made of with their [illegible] the [illegible] and played a game much closer to their true ability against [illegible] Big East rival Georgetown. The match went [illegible] five games, 8-15, 15-6, 15-7, 11-15 and 15-6.

Athlete of the Week

This week's Saco East Athlete of the Week is the entire men's varsity waterpolo team who won the Mid-Atlantic Conference for the first time in Villanova history. The victory sends the Wildcats into the Eastern Intercollegiate Championships, in which the Cats are seeded first.

The starting seven consisted of Jim Riley, Farshard Charmforoosh, Ted Morris, Ed Rae, Ed Uy, Matt Jayne and Matt Morris with key substitutes of Greg Shrader and George Kummeth.

Rebounding from a 4-16 record last season, the Cats presently own a 16-6 record and will add to it this weekend in the Easterns.

Villanova beat Queens 9-8, RPI 14-7, Colgate 7 and St. Francis 14-9. Riley was Villanova's leading scorer with 16 goals and was named to second team all-tournament, while Charmforoosh scored nine goals. Ted Morris was the only Wildcat named to the first all-tournament team.

Out of the starting seven, junior Rae is the only upperclassman, the rest of the team consisting of four freshmen and two sophomores.

Greeley discusses modern Catholicism

By MARY E. CHAREST

Over 500 people filled the Villanova Room Wednesday to hear the controversial novelist, sociologist and priest Andrew Greeley speak.

Although Greeley said that "Sex is a sacrament," and "the body of a woman is as much an analogy to God as the body of a man," most of his speech centered on religion as experience, image and story.

He explained later that he liked to teach religion through stories, and so he began with a story.

Greeley described a dismal, gray Chicago day in December when, walking down Michigan Avenue, he saw a woman having trouble getting on a bus. She had an assortment of packages, including a boy of 18 months. He helped her and played with the boy, when she finally got on the bus and was about to leave, she smiled.

"After that I was in technicolor world. I felt that in a world where a smile is possible, anything is possible." He called that occurrence a low-level religious experience. "You can call it a sacrament with a small 's,' he said.

The sacramental experience, he explained, is specifically Catholic, because for Catholics, "everything is a sacrament."

"I came here to argue that what is unique and special about the Catholic religion is that its people see the world as a metaphor for God," he said. Catholicism, he explained, has gone the opposite way of Judaism, Islam and Protestantism in that it "emphasizes the radical presence of God.

"We [Catholics] took over the nature religions and baptized everything in sight," he said.

"It's good, it's true, it's beautiful, it's loving, [so] it's Catholic and we want it," he said, paraphrasing St. Ignatius of Antioch.

He further said that analogical imagination is a special aspect of Catholicism. "God is like the world. For us [Catholics], God is alive in the world," he said.

According to Greeley, Catholicism is "the most fun of all the religions of Yahweh" because everything is a celebration of God.

Greeley described the Catholic story as comic. "Christmas is the Catholic story par excellence. St. Francis of Assisi — or maybe here we give credit to St. Augustine — was ingenious for starting the Christmas crib." He explained that the Christmas story had everything and it ended happily.

Christmas, he said, tells us something about the meaning of life. "Life is about life, not about death."

Using these three aspects of Catholicism, he then spoke on current Catholic issues. "Sex is a sacrament," Greeley said. "It tells us something about God's love." He said that in the love of man and woman is mirrored God's love for us.

Furthermore, he explained that "If we truly believe in sex as a sacrament, you can't enjoy it too much. The Catholic religion still has yet to acknowledge this idea," but, Greeley said, "Pope John Paul has finally turned the corner in that direction."

Greeley also spoke about the Catholic teachings in the seminaries of the past. They taught that "the woman is a swamp waiting to drag down the unsuspecting

Radnor discusses closing Smoke's

By DENISE M. TYSON

Townspeople, commissioners and the owners of Smokey Joe's Bar and Restaurant in Wayne debated for 30 minutes at the bi-monthly Radnor Township meeting Monday on the possible shut-down of the bar.

Fourteen official complaints have been filed with the township, although 11 were made by the same resident and some have reportedly been unfounded. The complaints concern incidents of urination on private property, excessive late night noise, parking violations and lack of traffic control with the bar's patrons.

These situations occur primarily between 11:30 p.m. and 2:30 a.m., a time which the residents feel is disturbing to their private lives.

"You would get angry too if you had to put up with this [disturbance] every weekend," one townsperson said.

Eugene Evans, the attorney who is representing the owners of the bar, said that Radnor Township does not have the authority to restrain Smokey Joe's from operating. He stated, "Only the Pennsylvania State Liquor Control Board possesses such power."

Evans said he has spoken to the Delaware County District Attorney's office and presented signed affidavits stating specific disturbances. As yet, no evidence has

Former V.U. dean sues St. Thomas University

By SIOBHAN A. RODER

The Rev. John P. O'Malley, O.S.A., and James A. Nesbitt, who were both fired by St. Thomas University of Miami, Fla., last month, have recently filed lawsuit against that school, according to The Miami Herald. O'Malley was the dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences at Villanova University from 1978 until his resignation in 1984.

The 16-page lawsuit was filed Oct. 28 in U.S. District Court against St. Thomas University — an institution also run by the Augustinian order — by O'Malley, who became provost at St. Thomas after leaving Villanova, and Nesbitt, St. Thomas' former dean of Admissions.

According to The Miami Herald, the suit claims that O'Malley and Nesbitt began to discover in late 1985 that the Rev. Patrick H. O'Neill, O.S.A., St. Thomas University president, "was knowingly and deliberately misstating the financial condition of St. Thomas University."

The Miami Herald reported that the suit further claimed O'Neill "was using his position as president of St. Thomas University to inflate his own sense of self-importance, to obtain personal financial gain and to support his own personal pleasures."

Police disperse students

By SUSAN E. CORCORAN

Over 100 students dressed in Halloween costumes waiting for the 9:20 p.m. Paoli local train into Philadelphia at Villanova station were dispersed by Radnor Police Oct. 31.

Two students were arrested and received citations for underage drinking and consumption of alcohol in a public place.

According to Gayle D'Abate, a student at the station, the train slowed down but never came to a complete stop. "It [the train] slowed down to almost a stop, but it never did. There were people on the train who wanted to get off at Villanova but they couldn't," D'Abate said.

Many students were reportedly drinking at the scene. The SEPTA police report stated that a train crew notified them of some "disorderly conduct" at the station. Members of the crowd were apparently knocking down wooden panels, the report indicated.

A Radnor plainclothes policeman and two uniformed policemen began breaking up the crowd. Many students headed back to campus while others tried to catch the train at Rosemont.

D'Abate also said that the station was crowded but not any more than it is the day before a school break. "The crowd may have seemed to be a problem because it was night, people were drinking and dressed in Halloween costumes," commented D'Abate.

One student said that when she was arrested she was informed that she must attend a 16-hour alcohol awareness seminar and would receive no fine. However, when she signed into the seminar she was charged $50 for the class.

According to the student, "He [the policeman] never told me I had to pay anything. All I would have to do was call for the class. Now, I have to go down there, sign up, and pay $50."

The arrested student said that she was not the only underage person consuming alcohol in public, but that she was at the outside of the crowd and was confronted by the police first.

Villanova Security was advised of the situation. No charges have been filed against Villanova for the damage to the train platform.

Notice

Student Government is in the process of documenting the incidents where students have been cited, detained or arrested by local law enforcement authorities. In an effort to report any cases where the rights of students were violated, complaint forms have been obtained from the ACLU (American Civil Liberties Union). Any student who feels that he or she was cited, detained or arrested unjustly should go to the Student Government Office (first floor Dougherty) to complete a complaint form.

13,000 attend Homecoming

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN and KATE WAGENMANN

Over 13,000 people celebrated last week's Homecoming Weekend festivities. The football team played to a sold-out stadium and over 5,000 people, the largest crowd yet, participated in 132 tailgates, according to Gary H. Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities.

"The entire weekend was extremely successful," said Bonas.

The weekend's events began with a semi-formal on Friday night, attended by approximately 300 to 400 students.

On Friday, there was also a golf outing attended by 120 alumni and an Arts and Sciences Alumni Medallion Awards Dinner at which six alumni were honored for outstanding achievements in their respective fields.

Later that evening an alumni homecoming dance featuring the Chatterband was held in the Jake Nevin Field House. An estimated 1,000 to 1,500 alumni attended the dance.

Approximately 3,000 people attended a basketball scrimmage on Saturday morning for a preview of this year's team before that afternoon's football game, in which Villanova defeated Central Connecticut State University, 28-0.

Prior to the game, there was a Homecoming parade of the Villanova marching band. During halftime, the Homecoming Queen Karen Magosin and King Sean Gildea, were presented along with their court, which consisted of four couples.

Following the game, an alumni reception was held in the Butler Annex. Later, a second alumni dance with '50s and '60s music provided by the Greaseband took place in the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse. Approximately 3,000 people were in attendance.

According to the Rev. George F. Riley, O.S.A., vice president for University Relations, there are 53,000 alumni, of whom 65 percent are male and 35 percent are female. The average age of the alumni is 34. The number of alumni has doubled in the last 20 years and quadrupled in the last 10 years, Riley said.

The alumni have 56 national city clubs and 565 alumni live in 67 foreign nations.

Cafeteria policy revamped

By NOEL E. FALCO

This year, the resident dining halls offer a luncheon deli bar everyday; however, they have restricted the takeout of sandwiches to the weekend and are monitoring the amount of food removed per person.

Les Geis, director of Food Services, recently said that this is the first year the deli line has been open on weekdays. Last year, it was only available on weekends, primarily to provide students with a quick take-out sandwich so they would not skip a meal in order to continue studying or "to watch the big game on TV," said Geis.

Geis thought that students would respect the same take-out policy as last year's solely week end takeout even though the deli line is available on weekdays.

According to Geis, this policy is made to protect resident students. He said that during the week resident students may be tempted to make sandwiches for off-campus students to take home.

Geis said that it is not fair to make resident students pay for food not eaten by residents.

He explained that one or two incidents of taking extra food would not make a difference, but with the 3,200 residents using the meal plan, even if only one-fourth of the students took out extra food, it would still make a cost difference.

Geis stressed that with so many people involved "an awful lot of food could be taken out of there."

Some meal checkers agreed that there has to be a limit set because if each student was to take out two specialty sandwiches, "the amount of food leaving the cafeteria would be incredible ... an enormous amount and the cafeteria can't support it."

Bill Ryan, a meal checker at the Dougherty dining hall, described another problem concerning the disposal of these take-out sandwiches saying that students take the sandwiches out and then throw them on the ground instead of in a trash can. "The litter is bothersome," he said.

Christina Esposito, Ryan's co-worker, said that the removal of paper goods from the cafeteria is a problem as well. According to Esposito, stricter monitoring would "cut down on the taking out of cups and napkins. There is no reason the cafeteria has to provide those [paper goods] for students.

Students who eat in the dining halls are having the types and amounts of food limited that they can remove from the cafeteria.

Mealcheckers also resented the abuse they have received from students for refusing to be lenient.

Esposito said, "We're not going to put our job on the line so they can get what they want. We're going to follow the rules."

Leslie Killeen, a mealchecker for two and one-half years, explained, "Basically, it's the same policy, but we're really empha sizing it this year. Students are abusing their privilege to take things out. It's become really limited this year. Eventually they won't be able to take anything out if they keep it up."

Killeen added that no one really got stopped last year but that more pressure has been put on mealcheckers this year to enforce the policy, with some mealcheckers being fired for negligence.

Some other mealcheckers interviewed, who did not wish to be named, said that they do not agree with the policy.

The feelings of students on the enforced policy is split.

Freshman Pete Ruggiero said, "I think it's good because you can eat as much as you want in the cafeteria and there's no need to take anything out after that."

Bill McManus agreed, saying that "Since it's all-you-can-eat in the cafeteria, [the policy] is fair."

However, another student commented, "I think you should be able to take deli sandwiches out whenever. I mean, what's the difference if it's Saturday or Sunday, you still have to eat."

Another student agreed with this and added, "Nobody's going to come in and get a whole bunch

Band practice room constructed

By MAUREEN GARRITY

A new band room in St. Mary's Hall is currently nearing completion. According to John P. Dunphy, director of Music Activities, the new facility should be ready for use in a few weeks.

Currently, all music activities are conducted in an auditorium on the ground floor of St. Mary's Hall. The problem, according to Dunphy, is that the auditorium is centered around classrooms. When the band practices, it is disturbing to the nursing offices above the auditorium and the surrounding classrooms.

The department decided that it would be in everyone's best interest for them to relocate. The new location will still be on the ground floor of St. Mary's, but will be further down the hall.

Dunphy says the new facility will be "super soundproof." Measures have been taken to prevent the leakage of sound from the room. Double doors have been installed, carpet has been laid and the double walls have been soundtreated.

The new location will ensure that no one is disturbed by band practice. The room is on the gym complex side of the building and the cafeteria is above it.

Dunphy believes that the new room is a step in the right direction and offers the possibility of growth for the music program.

One band member said that she is looking forward to practicing in the new band room and is glad that the band would not be disturbing classes anymore.

Another student added that it would be more convenient because all music activities would be in one place.

Bloodmobile collects 520 pints

Donors contributed 520 pints of blood at the campus-wide blood drive held at Connelly Center from Nov. 5-7. The number of pints contributed was 43 pints more than the amount collected in the April campus drive, according to Joseph Falcone, director of Blood Services from the Greater Main Line Branch of the Red Cross.

Last week's drive attained a 73 percent "efficiency rate," based on the goal of 775 pints. Last year's goal was 575 pints.

Approximately 560 people participated in last week's drive, which was a 15 percent increase from April's drive. First-time donors numbered 100.

Falcone stated that the students' response was "fantastic. You just have to ask them [the students] and they come out." He said that approximately 2,000 pints of the Main Line Red Cross' goal of 31,000 pints are collected at Villanova blood drives.

Falcone said that any fraternities or sororities interested in sponsoring blood drives next year should call him or Cheryl Fouluharty at 525-3090.

Department to mark anniversary

Alumni of Villanova's department of astronomy and astrophysics will return to the University Nov. 29 for the 25th anniversary of the founding of the department.

Among the returning alumni are representatives of such institutions as the Smithsonian Institute and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, as well as businesses and educational institutions.

According to Eugene J. Ruane, director of Public Relations, the department was founded Nov. 20, 1961, by the Rev. Edward F. Jenkins, O.S.A.

Correction

The article, "Political activism scarce" in the Oct. 31 issue, incorrectly reported that 2 percent of eligible voters voted in Student Government's run-off presidential elections in April. In fact, approximately 19.4 percent of those eligible voted. Student Government President Joe Allman estimates that about 33 percent of full-time day undergraduate students voted in April's election. He said that most University College and Law School students probably did not vote in the election.

Student leaders meet with Radnor

By LYNN PERDEK

Relations between Radnor Township and Villanova students were discussed on Tuesday during an informal meeting between Student Government and Radnor Township Commissioner Jim Marks, the official in charge of Ward 7, which includes Villanova's south campus.

According to Phil Brach, Student Government's secretary for external affairs, the meeting was set up in order to discuss the problems that the Township has had with students and the possible solutions to alleviate the perceived stress.

The problem with housing ordinances was one of the main issues discussed. Current zoning laws limit the number of unrelated persons living at the same residence to no more than two people.

There are cases, however, in which Villanova students have more than two students living together, yet cause no problems for the township. Student Government brought up the idea of making exceptions for these students to live legally, according to Brach.

Marks told the students that the problems that Radnor had with the students included noisy parties lasting until late at night, too many cars parked in front of residences, and students showing a lack of respect for their neighbors.

Brach said that those students creating the problems make up less than 4 percent of the student population, and that these students are ruining the situation for all the other students.

According to Brach, Student Government hopes that this meeting will prove to Radnor Township that Villanova students are "making an effort to be good neighbors."

John Sweeney, Student Government secretary for public relations, said that Student Government is planning a campaign to change the students' attitudes toward Radnor Township and to make off-campus students aware that they must respect their neighbors. Sweeney said that 99 percent of Villanova students are respectful of their neighbors and "only 1 percent give Villanova a bad reputation."

"Radnor Township is our great est ally," Brach said. "They are very cooperative ... Lower and Upper Merion townships are much worse." He said Student Government sees this as the first step among many.

Brach reported that Student Government was referred to Col. Daniel W. McElwee of the township's zoning board. "Eventually there will be an official meeting with the township," Brach said, "but this was just to get insight on how the commissioners stand and how to go about making changes."

Divestments' legality probed

By ROSE JACKSON

(CPS) In a case that could inhibit other campuses from selling their shares in firms that do business in South Africa, New Mexico's chief investment officer said he could not sell the stocks without violating the law.

Governor Toney Anaya in July said he may order all state agencies — including Eastern New Mexico, New Mexico Highlands, Western New Mexico and the University of New Mexico — to sell interests in firms with operations in segregationist South Africa.

But recently, state investment chief S. Peter Hidalgo II said he could not comply with such an order without violating the state's "prudent man rule," which requires him to manage the portfolio as profitably as possible.

Selling off all the offending stock, explained Ted Apodaca of the state attorney general's office, would rob the state's portfolio of some of its most profitable investments.

Apodaca said a citizen — or anyone who stood to benefit from the state investment portfolio's financial performance — could sue to hold state officials personally liable for any financial losses that would result from the divestment.

Asked if he thought such a citizen lawsuit was likely, Apodaca said, "I doubt it."

But California legislators were worried enough by such a prospect that they passed a bill last week to protect administrators from being held liable for investment losses stemming from divestment.

University of California spokeswoman Valerie Sullivan said the regents, who voted to divest during the summer, feared that if, for example, divestment depressed the value of the university's pension fund, a disgruntled faculty member might sue them.

Divestiture opponents in many states have long argued that selling shares for political, as opposed to financial, reasons would break the law.

But regents' vulnerability to such lawsuits depends on each state's laws, said Alison Cooper of the Investor Responsibility Resource Center in Washington, D.C.

Cooper noted that some state constitutions do not have "prudent man" clauses, or have clauses that are full of loopholes.

In states like New Mexico and California — which do have constitutional rules requiring officials to manage their portfolios for a profit — regents would probably need a special law to protect them from lawsuits of angered "investors."

The reason, Apodaca said, is that "prudent" investors would not buy or sell shares solely on ethical or moral grounds.

"[Unless] the investor is concerned about the safety of the investment — for instance, revolution is brewing or the factory may burn down — a prudent man would not divest," he contended.

"[If so], pretty soon all investments could be affected by political and moral obligations or human rights violations."

Obscenity law causes changes

By SUSAN SKORUPA

(CPS) A tough new anti-obscenity law has caused changes in some classes at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro (UNC-G) this fall.

At least two professors changed their course content to avoid risking arrest.

As a result, film history students no longer can study Federico Fellini movies, while art students cannot see slides of certain artworks.

Some human sexuality books were removed from the library and some artists' visions of nude figures were removed from campus display until student and faculty protest forced administrators to return them to public use last week.

Though the new law can be applied statewide, no other North Carolina colleges beside UNC-G are enduring any of its effects.

Some think it is because UNC-G's liberal reputation seems to have attracted the attention of a group of Christian fundamentalists who lobbied vigorously for the new anti-obscenity law in the state legislature last year.

"UNC-G is really no more liberal than any other UNC campus, but it does share a rather liberal reputation with UNC-Chapel Hill," said North Carolina State University spokeswoman Rosalind Reid.

But North Carolina State has not "had any kind of reaction to the law as yet," she added.

"The only controversy, so far, has been at UNC-G," agreed George Gardner of the American Civil Liberties Union's (ACLU) Raleigh office. "But it's hard to say what other professors aren't doing any longer at other campuses."

At UNC-G, however, the controversy has been continuous since film history Professor Tony Fragola decided the new law was "ambigous" enough to drop the works of Federico Fellini and a few other filmmakers from his syllabus.

Some films Fragola has shown in class "deal with sexual activity involving minors, and showing them could make me susceptible to prosecution under the law.

Communications Professor Thomas Tedford's lawyer advised him to stop showing a slide show about erotic art and obscenity court cases from his class on First Amendment law, because he could be arrested for it.

In addition, an art class using nude models for life drawing probably will disappear after this semester.

School administrators, moreover, told Fragola they would take no responsibility for what professors taught in their classes "leaving it up to the individual to defend himself" if obscenity charges arise, Fragola said.

No UNC-G official would respond officially to questions about the course changes.

One campus official, who asked to remain anonymous, dismissed the controvery as overblown. "As far as I know, it's affected only two professors [Tedford and Fragola]. I'm not aware of any other changes, and I don't anticipate any others," the official said.

The new law makes it a felony for adults to possess pornography in their homes, lets local communities — not state courts — define what is obscene, and lets police arrest anyone suspected of disseminating pornography before a judge determines whether the material is in fact obscene.

The well-publicized course changes and the prospect of professors being carted off to jail "have raised interest in the issue on the part of students," ACLU's Gardner reported.

Although Gardner said private citizens are at just as much risk of arrest as professors, "There's not that much awareness [of the risk] on the part of the average person because most feel they aren't inconvenienced by the statute."

Several UNC-G students, however, have started a Citizens Against Censorship (CAC) group to raise money to try to repeal the new law.

While students seem to feel aggrieved by the law, CAC's Phil McCaul said, "This is a conservative environment and the law is vaguely written, so we're holding seminars and writing letters to publicize its potential danger."

The National Order of Omega

Nancy Tobin

Order of Omega congratulates Nancy Tobin as this week's Greek of the Week. Nancy is a senior economics major from Valley Stream, N.Y. Since pledging Tri-Delta her freshman year, Nancy has been very involved in Greek and campus activities.

Being the Greek Page Editor for two years and a Panhellenic Rush Counselor her junior year, Nancy was the perfect candidate to become the Panhellenic Executive Board secretary. She also serves as Tri-Delta's Fraternity Education chairman and on the Officer's Training Committee. Nancy was elected to the Order of Omega last Spring.

Besides being Greek Page Editor, Nancy has worked hard to put the Villanovan together. Last semester she was the assistant lay out editor and this semester she works as the advertising editor. Nancy has been a member of Blue Key since her sophomore year and is now on the Executive Board of the Wildcat Investment Club in charge of public relations. Nancy was also part of the senior week committee last year. Along with all her activities, Nancy finds time to study. She is a member of Gamma Phi business honor society and also Omicron Delta Epsilon Economics honor society.

Congratulations again Nancy — you've done a fantastic job!

The Villanovan Editorial Board: Managing Editor Hank Halter, Editor-in-Chief Diana K. Sugg and Associate Editor, Brian D. Webb.

Thanks Diana

Members of the Villanovan editorial staff traditionally write a tribute to the retiring editor-in-chief. This year, however, Diana K. Sugg requested that we not write one about her. In typical modesty, she said a couple of weeks ago, "Besides, who would write it?"

But Diana's incredible dedication to this newspaper cannot go unrecognized.

When Diana took over as editor, she made it clear to everyone on the staff that she would be willing to bear any burden in order to make the Villanovan as great as it could be. While past editors-in-chief asked the staff to work as quickly as possible so that they could make last call at Kelly's, Diana never made such a request. She trusted the other editors to do a thorough and accurate job. And she never even once complained about being up until 4 or 5 a.m. on Tuesdays [which is the deadline for the publication].

Diana has succeeded in making many improvements to the Villanovan. The paper has expanded from an average of 24 pages last year to 36 pages this past semester; and several sections have doubled in coverage as well as in quality.

But probably the most significant improvement Diana has made is the positive attitude she created from Day 1 as editor. Anyone who has met her can tell right away that she is a friendly, sincere and enthusiastic person. She showed the staff that she was emotionally involved with the paper and that she really wanted it to be great. This was certainly an inspiration for all of us.

Diana also cares very much about the people at Villanova. In her editorials she continually spoke out for students' rights and made several proposals that would enhance the quality life at Villanova. She organized a Fall Bash, tried to save Smokey Joe's and proposed some ways to relieve the tensions between local residents and Villanova students.

So the next time you see Diana, tell her you appreciate all she has done.

Theatre annex proposed

By ELIA DiTADDEO

The theatre department of Villanova has proposed the construction of an annex onto Vasey Hall, the existing theatre, Dr. Joanna Rotte, chairperson of the theatre department, said this week.

Rotte said, the annex, which would be built on the Sheehan side of Vasey Hall, would be beneficial for a number of reasons. It would increase the safety of the audience and the theatre personnel by meeting fire and safety codes. Also, it would allow room for a larger audience.

According to Rotte, the proposed structure would also provide space for prop and costume construction as well as dressing rooms. Presently, the theatre department must either construct props outside or use a small room in the basement of the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse.

According to national estimates, in terms of square footage space, Villanova's theatre is smaller and lower than most U.S. theatres. Rotte said that the theatre would have to more than triple its square footage to even near the average theatre size.

Rotte said, "Imagine a chemistry department without laboratories. That is what the theatre department is working with presently."

An annex to increase the existing theatre space in Vasey Hall has been proposed by the theatre department.

Rotte added, "The size of the theatre does not at all reflect the reputation of Villanova theatre. The department has an outstanding reputation in the metropolitan Philadelphia area and the region for the quality of programs it produces.

She said Villanova's theatre productions are among the few college productions reviewed in this area by a major American newspaper, The Philadelphia Inquirer.

If the proposal is approved, Rotte believes that it would be better to construct the annex during the summer months so as to provide the least interruption for classes. A projected estimate for the construction of the annex would be the summer of 1988.

Rotte reported that there is much support for a theatre annex among other faculty members in the University. However, she said the decision lies with the Board of Trustees.

Former V.U. dean sues St. Thomas U.

According to The Miami Herald, four counts of racketeering, conspiracy, misrepresentation and slander were brought against the suit's defendants, who are listed as O'Neill, St. Thomas University and 23 members of the university's Board of Trustees. O'Malley and Nesbitt are asking for damages and an order reinstating them to their former positions.

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., Villanova University president, a member of the St. Thomas University Board of Trustees and a defendant in the suit, declined to comment on the matter.

Tom Murphy, vice president for University Relations at St. Thomas University, said Monday, "I can make no comment on the matter. It is in litigation and to comment on it would be inappropriate."

Murphy quoted the statement made by the St. Thomas Board of Trustees in The Miami Herald, which said in reference to the lawsuit, "The allegations are serious and we deny them emphatically. We have great faith in Fr. O'Neill and confidence in his spirited leadership. This highly emotional action is without basis."

The comment quoted by Murphy from The Miami Herald was taken from an article concerning merger discussions going on between St. Thomas University and nearby Barry University. These discussions have been going on for seven years and no decision has yet been reached.

The Miami Herald spoke with O'Malley on Oct. 29, at which time his only comment on the case was, "It is true that I have indeed filed a lawsuit."

The Miami Herald also reported that O'Malley and Nesbitt claim that O'Neill tried to blame them "for an alleged budget deficit" and that the Board of Trustees wanted to "punish Fr. O'Malley and Nesbitt for their opposition to Fr. O'Neill's continued concealment of his own misfeasance."

Other charges made against O'Neill in the suit include "mail fraud" and the sending of false financial reports to creditors and trustees of St. Thomas University.

The Miami Herald quoted Murphy as saying, "I can assure you there has been no mail fraud or racketeering; that's preposterous. I do know these people were very disgruntled, especially after they were let go."

The Miami Herald also said that O'Malley claims in the lawsuit to have seen "a budget report showing that the university had operated at a $2.2 million deficit in 1985-86 and was undergoing a financial crisis." Murphy responded to this charge by pointing to the growth of the school's assets under O'Neill.

St. Thomas University was originally called Biscayne College. In February 1984, it changed its name to St. Thomas of Villanova, which caused protests from Villanova University in Pennsylvania.

In May 1984, Biscayne changed its name a second time to St. Thomas University. Driscoll was quoted at that time as saying that the second name change came about "through discussion with the Board of Trustees at St. Thomas University. It became clear that this duplication of names led to unnecessary confusion."

of food together."

Mary Tierney, a freshman, commented, "I really don't agree with it [the policy] because a lot of times during the meal hours you aren't really very hungry, and so if you could take food out to keep in your room, you could eat it later when you're really hungry."

Natalie Zovodnick, a graduate student and resident assistant, said, "I have night classes and sometimes it would be nice to be able to take a sandwich out. You're paying a lot of money for your meals and a lot of people don't eat breakfast so you kind of make up for it by taking out a midnight snack."

One student commented that, "If it got any stricter, they'd be frisking us."

man. Crazy, crazy, crazy," he commented.

"God is both man and woman and is neither man nor woman," he said.

Greeley expressed his belief that the Catholic religion needs more emphasis on "the sacramentality of sex, the analogy of women and many, many stories."

Greeley has published more than 100 scholarly works and over 50 novels. His first five stories, including Cardinal Sins and Ascent Into Hell, were best-sellers. As a result, he is a millionaire.

He tried to donate $1 million to help Catholic schools in Chicago, but the Cardinal of Chicago would not accept the money. When asked why, Greeley said he is probably the only one in the world from whom the Catholic Church has refused money and that he does not know why the money was not accepted.

Princeton seeks female recruits

Princeton University officials are concerned by the difficulties they are experiencing in attracting female undergraduates. Presently, only 37 percent, the lowest percentage in the Ivy League, of their undergraduates are women.

Princeton's freshman class enrollment of women dropped five percentage points since last year to 35 percent. Because of these statistics, administrators are investigating why the problem exists and what can be done to correct it.

Some of the efforts being made to attract more women include developing a brochure on the humanities programs at Princeton, sending female undergraduate recruiters to high schools and improving admissions literature. Despite these efforts, most officials doubt that it will be possible to achieve an even ratio of men and women at Princeton. C.A.

Stanford band barred from games

The Stanford University marching band was banned from playing at the Nov. 8 and Nov. 22 university football games because at earlier games some band members dropped their pants and presented a "lewd" performance.

Athletic Director Andy Geiger reported that several band members had dropped their pants and six other band members had urinated on the field at the end of a game last month. The following week, some band members were involved in a performance which included the formation of symbolic male genitalia.

According to Band Director Arthur Barnes, some of the offending routines were not sanctioned, but instead were "independent gestures of a couple of individuals."

Students in N.Y. prefer dorms

Growing numbers of undergraduates who traditionally commuted to New York University (N.Y.U.), Fordham University, Columbia University and Barnard College are now reportedly electing to live on campus rather than at home, even if home is just a subway ride away.

"Dorming," said one undergraduate, "is what separates high school from college. You miss out on so much if you don't live in a dorm."

In the 1960s, students avoided dormitory life because to some it represented another institutional symbol. However, the 1980s have sparked "a tremendous resurgence of interest in campus life," New York University Vice President for Student Affairs Ann Marcus said.

been filed in order for any legal action to be taken by the district attorney.

When asked how he would defend Smokey Joe's, Evans explained that he did not "care to give his case away to the press."

"All we want is for the urination, noise and parking problems to stop and if this place has to be shut down in order for them to stop, then shut it down," said Sam Candelora, a resident of Louella Court, a street near the bar.

Joseph Ryan, one of the four Ryan brothers present as representative owners of Smokey Joe's, said, "We've done almost everything we can to control or put an end to these problems. We would like to work more closely with the township in order to resolve these specific issues."

Graham Andrews, president of the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners, said, "We have yet to hear any proposals or solutions to clean up the problems, but we are willing to listen."

Presently, Smokey Joe's has doormen at every exit to stop patrons from exiting with bottles or glasses, which the residents claim are turning up in their front yards. An off-duty officer is also employed to patrol the parking lots and prevent any problems.

During the discussion, one resident said, "This place shouldn't be here in Radnor Township, the kids only go there to get drunk. Get them out!"

All four Ryan brothers agreed that while their patrons are on the premises they are in full control of themselves. The brothers are optimistic that the restaurant will not be shut down.

If Smokey Joe's were to be closed by the state Liquor Control Board, the maximum time that the bar could be shut down is one year.

Student Government deserves credit

Villanova will definitely have a Fall Break next year. And we owe it to the hard work and effort of our Student Government. At the Oct. 31 University Senate meeting, our student representatives fought for what the students wanted and won.

Student senators have not made such effective use of the University Senate in a long time. The representatives have done an excellent job: they sought student opinion and then fought and lobbied for it. They showed the administration and faculty that students do count in the Senate and that we are an important group on this campus whose ideas matter.

Student Government has become a viable force on this campus; a means whereby students can channel their ideas and complaints and know that someone will consider this opinion and try to do something about it. Obviously, many aspects of this campus cannot be changed overnight. But our Student Government is tackling all the issues from the housing situation to the meal plan to bookstore prices. They have committees of enthusiastic and interested students working actively on these and other issues.

The recent victory in the Senate for next year's Fall Break is only one of the many ways in which the 1987 Student Government has worked for the students. A well-deserved thanks goes to President Joe Allman and the rest of the representatives for their efforts. They have made the student voice loud and clear and given it a renewed strength on this campus.

Bishops and Pope need to talk

The president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops has demonstrated much insight by calling for an audience with the Pope to discuss the "growing and dangerous disaffection" between some American Roman Catholics and the Vatican. In the opening address at the annual meeting of the nation's Catholic bishops on Monday, Bishop James W. Malone named three areas which have caused some tension: the limits of dissent from Church teaching among theologians, the shortage of priests and the role of women in the Church.

Pope John Paul II should make every effort to meet with Malone. These issues are major ones which the Church has been grappling with and need to be discussed. One of the participants of the conference, Archbishop Raymond C. Hunthausen of Seattle, was recently stripped of his authority in certain pastoral areas because the Vatican said he was failing to enforce strict doctrinal traditions. The Rev. Charles C. Curran at the Catholic University of America was recently told he is no longer "suitable or eligible" to teach theology for similar reasons.

Beyond these problems of dissenting viewpoints, the Church in America faces an alarming shortage of priests. Figures indicate that by the year 2000 the number of priests will decline by 50 percent. Also, movements to ordain women, such as the Women's Ordination Conference, are gaining strength. Such issues cannot be dismissed or ignored if the Church is to remain a vital part of our American society.

The Pope will be visiting the United States next September. Malone would like to meet with him this winter or in the spring before his visit.

But Malone understands exactly why these problems must be discussed. "If we attempt to short-circuit the questions we have because the inquiry we have is too threatening or too painful, in the long run, the church suffers," he said.

Indeed, it may be unusual to have such a meeting, and the issues may be difficult to deal with, but they nonetheless must be confronted by the contemporary Catholic Church.

Letters to the Editor

Student group seeks justice

To the Editor:

Nov. 19 is Villanova University's Human Rights Day. The chapter of Amnesty International here at Villanova hopes that everyone on campus will help in the effort to free prisoners of conscience throughout the world.

Prisoners of conscience are those in prison solely for the non-violent expression of their political or religious briefs. Amnesty International is always petitioning governments to be more humane to their people, but Nov. 19 is set aside to let everyone help. Tables will be in Connelly Center and Dougherty Hall, so it will be easy for anyone to stop for a few minutes to write a letter. Amnesty members will be at these tables all day writing letters.

The finale for this letter writing event will be in the Center for Peace and Justice Education in the basement of Sullivan Hall at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday. There will be free hoagies and soda available for everyone who is willing to write a letter, and our own Fr. Ray Jackson will speak on Liberation Theology in Chile.

The Villanova community has a great potential for helping others. This potential is seen in events such as the Special Olympics and Hunger Awareness Week. This spirit can be extended easily into Amnesty International's letter writing. It only takes 10 minutes to write a letter.

Letters will be written on behalf of Chia Thye Poh from Singapore; Linus Aloysius Franklin from Sri Lanka; Ion Bugan from Romania; Antoine Manirakiza from Burundi; Riad Al-Turk from Syria; Tatyana Semyonova Osipova from the USSR; Hugo de Leon Palacios from Guatemala; Lee Kwang-Ung from South Korea; Zhang Jingsheng from the People's Republic of China; and Danial Palma Robledo from Chile. So, if any students or professors have an expertise in these countries, please bring it to the tables.

World affairs are sometimes confusing. Who's a conservative? Who's a liberal? Who's Catholic? Who's Jewish? — Amnesty International disregards these questions and writes letters on behalf of just plain people imprisoned unjustly. Please help us on Nov. 19.

End policy of segregating the sexes

By MICHELLE CICCOLO

While I do not claim to be an expert on the issues involving the visitation policy, I would like to raise some of my concerns which I share with many of my peers.

Here at Villanova there seems to be a strain on the development of friendships between people of the opposite sex. I perceive that part of the cause of this problem is the lack of coed dorms. By segregating the sexes physically, there has been a segregation of the sexes intellectually as well. Men and women here see each other as objects of the forbidden fruit.

Since we all have a need to form friendships with people of the opposite sex, it becomes easy to make the mistake of trying to attract that friendship through the physical use of our bodies. An example of this is how girls and guys are petrified to go out in public without looking their best. They dress up to go to meals. Since we have no coed dorms, people here are afraid of letting their natural, relaxed self show through and thus often pretend to be something they are not.

There are of course many healthy friendships that have formed here but I would like to develop an atmosphere that can improve the quantity and quality of those friendships. Logically, I now turn to the visitation policy.

As Thomas Jefferson believed, law is created for the people, not people for the law. And a law ceases to become a law when the majority can no longer abide by it. Laws that can't be followed should be changed.

There is not one dorm on campus that doesn't house at least one overnight visitor of the opposite sex during the weekend and there are numerous infractions of the visitation policy every night. Why then do we have the visitation restrictions?

The administration has claimed their policies are to promote privacy. If this is true then why does the administration permit strange male security guards to tour the halls of girls dorms at 4 a.m., 6 a.m., and 10 a.m.? Why are there male custodians in girls dorms before 12 p.m. and female custodians in the guys dorms during the same period? Morning is the time when people need the most privacy to take showers and dress. If Villanova wants us to abide by and respect the rules then they can't be the first ones to break them.

If the goal is to achieve privacy then shouldn't we promote better roommate communications and cooperation? It is just as much of an infringment to have people of the same sex over when you want to study, sleep or be alone. It appears that Villanova is not then promoting privacy.

Many people here suspect that the underlying reason Villanova has their policies is because this is a Catholic school and they want to prevent promiscuity and excessive partying. What, however, can we do after 2 a.m. that we can't do before that time? By prohibiting us to stay in the dorms of the opposite sex they are really promoting a desire to do that very forbidden thing.

If Villanova wants to be a better school then they will strive to be a leader among the Augustinian schools, not a follower. We do not need to wait for Notre Dame to change their policies first.

I would suggest that the first step is to abolish the visitation policy on the weekends then eventually abolish it entirely.

Finally, establish coed dorms in the near future. The administration in their wisdom has built the new dorms with the facilities needed to be coed. Stanford, St. Monica and Katharine halls have wings that would enable the school to institute coed dorms with areas that can be wholly male and female so there would still be privacy.

Coed dorms are a part of college life that teaches the students to interact on a healthy day-to-day basis. Villanova is a fantastic institution. If we want it to become a better, more competitive university, we must encourage the school to improve itself. The first step is to challenge and investigate the visitation policy.

Michelle Ciccolo is a sophomore psychology major.

In a speech to the Democratic National Convention Aug. 12, 1980:

Stop the deadly horror of war

By KRISTIN A. SWITALA

The next time you see our country's flag flying proudly in the air, consider this: You can make it possible so that your great-grandchildren will not need to honor more new veterans on Veterans Day.

Three times a year my dad gathers us seven kids together and ropes us into helping him put up the American flag in our front yard.

One of these times, a frigid November afternoon of my 11th year, has never vanished from my memory for two reasons.

First, my brother Bill, at age 9, filled the flagpole hole with acorns. He said that he thought it was a chipmunk's hole, so he wanted to feed the poor creature.

My dad wanted to beat the poor creature. Not the chipmunk — my brother Bill. Dad spent half an hour digging out frozen acorns and muttering.

Second, as seven little pairs of mittened hands carried the flag-on-a-bamboo-pole out of the garage and up to the special place, I asked by dad why we were raising the banner.

He smiled, replying that Nov. 11 was Veterans Day, and that in honor of the veterans of America's wars, we unfurled the flag.

At 11 years old, I didn't know what a veteran was. I just thought he was someone who went away from home for a while and then returned to enjoy parties, ticker-tape parades in New York City, and emotional speeches. The concept of war did not even register.

Now I know that war means killing, destruction, death. And not just in some country over the sea somewhere.

There must be a better way to resolve conflicts.

Veterans Day serves as a reminder that the horror continues right here — in your own neighborhood and even on this campus — as the survivors of America's wars are slowly dying from physical injuries, chemical defoilants and psychological wounds that can never heal.

NBC brought this to life on Monday night in a TV-movie, "Unnatural Causes." John Ritter played a dying Vietnam veteran, who had come into contact with Agent Orange, a defoilant, while fighting in the jungles. Alfe Woodard played counselor Maude DeVictor, who in real life was a leading catalyst toward getting compensation for the Vietnam vets dying from Agent Orange poisoning.

The tragedy of Veterans Day is that America has known the depravity of war and its effects on our people for 210 years — and we continue fighting.

When the casualty statistics from World War I were released, an aghast world recoiled from the terror it had made and declared the conflict to be the "war to end all wars."

Not even 25 years later the second World War erupted.

For our country, Korea and Vietnam followed. Many fathers, uncles and neighbors died or were seriously wounded defending foreign soil.

George Washington warned the First Continental Congress to stay out of foreign entanglements. He realized the incredible sacrifice of American lives, along with resource and technology depletion, that could arise from such an outer conflict.

Our 20th-century wars alone have proven him right. Our men return as scarred veterans; our country becomes scarred by its actions.

The next time you see our country's flag flying proudly in the air, consider this: You can make it possible so that your great-grandchildren will not need to honor more new veterans on Veterans Day.

No wars; no veterans.

Only God has the right to judge

To the Editor:

What I enjoy most about the Villanovan is the Op-ed section of the paper, because since I like people very much, I find people's opinions to be very interesting and entertaining. You can tell a lot about a person through his or her opinions.

Since each opinion is worth two cents individually, if you ask a lot of questions, you'll wind up with either an earache or a lot of dirty bronze. However, I did not write this letter to be sarcastic, I just wanted to respond to those people out there in the Villanova community who think that their two cents is worth more than everyone else's.

In recent issues of the Villanovan, issues concerning homosexuality, feminism, and minorities have been violently debated. In these articles, people have quoted the Bible, the Constitution of the United States, Aristotle, the motto of Villanova University itself, Hitler's philosophy, and the Catholic Church. This is all well and good, but all of them except Aristotle express biased deductions.

Don't get me wrong, I hold all of the institutions above in very high esteem, except for anything born out of the mind of Hitler. But the bottom line is, Aristotle's concept of "know thy self" was the only one that can be truly applied to the issues at hands.

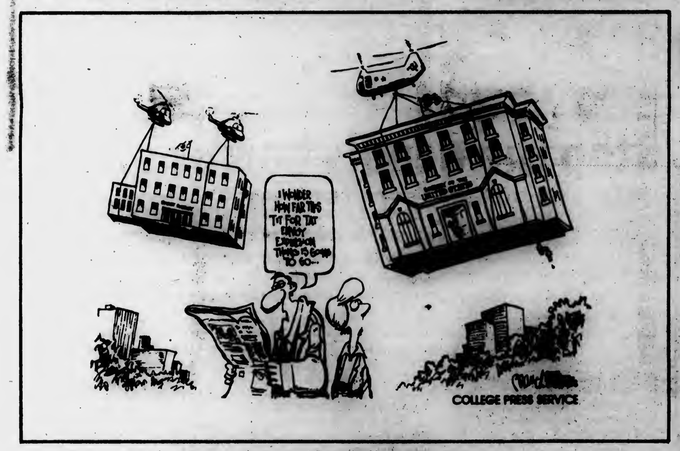
Concerning these three issues (homosexuality, feminism, and minorities) the basic ideal being challenged is this: equality. I personally believe in the freedom of every individual, be he or she white, black, gay, or unborn. I believe that only God has the right to judge anyone for any "crime" committed while on this earth.

The reason I put "crime" in quotes is because what people perceive to be criminal may be acceptable in the eyes of God, and what is within the law may be not at all acceptable in the eyes of God.

I am a firm believer in the "equal but different" way of looking at anyone and everyone. To fully clarify this point in your mind in a more stylistic way than I can, listen to a 1977 song by Rush titled "The Trees." This song depicts an incident in the forest, but you don't have to be an expert interpretive lyricist to see that it has another meaning:

"There is unrest in the forest,
There is trouble with the trees,
For the maples want more sunlight,
And the oaks ignore their pleas.

"The trouble with the maples,
(and they're quite convinced they're right,)
They say the oaks are just too lofty,
And they grab up all the light.
But the oaks can't help their feelings,
If they like the way they're made,
And they wonder why the maples,
Can't be happy in their shade.



"So the maples formed a union,
And demanded equal rights.
"The Oaks are just too greedy,
We'll make them give us light."
Now there's no more Oak oppression,
For they passed a noble law,
And the trees are all kept equal,
By hatchet, axe, and saw."

Next time you get a chance, take a walk through the forest alone. Look at the trees and all the beauty they have to offer and think of each one as a special indivdual among the masses. Think of our society in these terms. Without each individual able to express his or her own authenticity, we can only sit around and wonder aimlessly: If a tree falls down in the forest and no one is around, does it make any noise?

To me the answer is simple. The reason why some people's roots have a firmer hold on reality in this world than others is because, even though we call ourselves the freest nation in the world, we try to settle issues of inequality with hatchet, axe, and saw.

Reagan lies

To the Editor,

In newspapers early this week, the story behind the release of David P. Jacobsen was leaked to the press. The Reagan administration traded for his release. The particulars of this trade involved the sending of weapons to Iran. Despite the official policy of the Reagan administration to not pay ransom or make concessions for the release of hostages, this is precisely what President Reagan did. This is another example of White House policy, this policy being the deception of the American people.

Despite the official policy of the Reagan administration to not pay ransom or make concessions for the release of hostages, this is precisely what President Reagan did.

Reagan has embraced this policy whole heartedly. He seems to feel the American people are not interested in the truth. The Reagan administration has even brought back an old and trusted word in place of lies; they call it disinformation.

Reagan approved an official campaign of lies, or disinformation as he would prefer to call it, in regard to Libya. Reagan had the State Department leak information that Libya was planning terrorist attacks against the United States. It was of no consequence that the leaks were completely false.

This led to the resignation of the State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb. Kalb could not stomach what comes so easily to Reagan, lying to the American people.

Another recent example of Reagan's disregard for the truth was the release of Nicholas Daniloff. The President stated, as is the case of Jacobsen, that he made no deal for the release of Daniloff. It was later established that at the same time Daniloff was released from the Soviet Union, a Soviet spy named Zakharov was released from the United States.

It is interesting that Daniloff and Zakharov had extremely similar flight schedules home. Reagan would like the American people to believe that it was the work of some unknown travel agent. This might be the same travel agent who booked the last flight of Eugene Hasenfus over Nicaragua.

The list of lies goes on and on; the Contras can defeat the Sandinistas in Nicaragua and the Star Wars program will rid the world of nuclear weapons are just a few of Reagan's favorites. Reagan seems to see no limit to the amount of untruth the American people will accept. Perhaps the poor showing of the Republicans in the recent election will serve as notice that the American people have had quite enough, then Reagan can begin one of his famous radio chats [illegible] of restoring confidence to the U.S. Government.

Priest supports student who condemns gay activity

To the Editor:

This letter is not meant to prolong the discussion nor to exacerbate the issue regarding Christian Hunt's letter on homosexuality, but I think a few observations are in order regarding the response from Christopher Gannon.

Granted, the original letter was somewhat insensitive and intolerant of the situation and people's feelings and preferences. However, what Hunt stated in his letter was basically true and like the "Vatican Letter" — it is not against homosexual persons, but rather it stated that the action of homosexual conduct is wrong.

One final point. Even after several readings, I cannot understand how the two sentences in Gannon's letter, "Prostitution, crime and homosexuality still epitomize the underworld of loose morals and blatant unethical ideals" and "Jews, Catholics and Gypsies still epitomize the underworld of loose morals and blatant unethical ideals" are in any way similar. It seems to me one is talking about behavior and attitudes whereas the other is talking about persons. Gannon's notion of what is meant by paraphrasing is simply not correct.

Cover intramurals

To the Editor:

On the whole we think that the Villanovan covers the University's affairs quite adequately. The sports section gives a good summary of our intercollegiate athletic programs and leaves few questions in the readers' minds about what is happening with the teams.

However, these programs involve a relatively small percentage of actual participation on behalf of the students. A larger percentage of the student body is involved in the wide variety of intramural sports programs. With such a large amount of involvement it seems that it would be the Villanovan's responsibility to provide coverage of these programs.

We are positive that such action would be greatly appreciated on behalf of the student population.

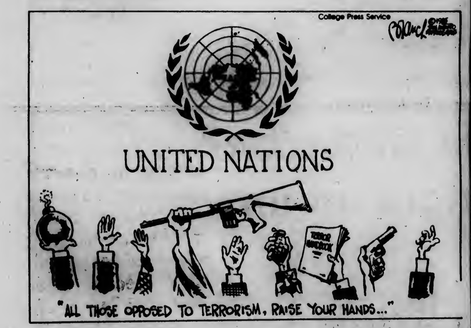
Allman to students: Respect neighbors

To the Students:

On Oct. 13 a forum was held on campus in which area residents were invited to express any problems or concerns that they have experienced as neighbors of Villanova University. The behavior of Villanova students was one of the concerns addressed by the neighbors.

Incidents of students damaging or stealing property, such as mailboxes and lawn furniture; speeding vehicles on small streets; littering trash or bottles on private property; loud noise coming from students at unreasonable hours; and problems with parking were some of the concerns discussed by the neighbors.

Many of the issues in which the students, faculty and administrators are concerned are impacted by our relations with our neighbors.



It was encouraging to hear that the neighbors realize that it is only about "one-tenth of 1 percent of the student population" who are responsible for the disreputable behavior off campus. Unfortunately, this small number of students can discredit all of the students and all efforts to establish good rapport with the neighbors.

The effects of being "bad" neighbors is not completely understood by many of our Villanova community members. Many of the issues in which the students, faculty and administrators are concerned are impacted by our relations with our neighbors. Off-campus students' problems with housing restrictions is directly related to Villanova's students' interactions with local residents.

Neighbors influence the University's ability to construct any new facilities, such as new dormitories and a parking facility. The success of events such as tailgating and any outdoor entertainment depends on our relationships with our neighbors.

It is then in the best interests of the students to adopt a good neighbor policy with local township residents. Such a stance calls for the students taking a more active role in assuring that our fellow students are always acting in our best interests. By exerting peer pressure, by policing ourselves, we can decrease the chance of the "one-tenth" of 1 percent" from ruining good relations for the rest of us.

V.U. residence halls need to be cleaned

To the Editor:

Dorm conditions at Villanova are often unsanitary and sometimes even unsafe. This is particularly true in Sullivan and Sheehan halls, where by Sunday mornings, bathrooms are intolerable.

The stench of vomit and garbage strewn about the facilities makes even showering a disagreeable experience.

The stench of vomit and garbage strewn about the facilities makes even showering a disagreeable experience. Broken glass in the hallways makes walking to the showers seem like some sort of agility test.

Many would argue that the residents themselves cause these damages and should be forced to live with them. The cleaning crew on one Sullivan floor refuses to clean the mess until Tuesday in order to punish residents.

Most residents will attest to the fact that more than 50 percent of the damage is done by outsiders. Students are charged for any vandalism to their hall, including false fire alarms. This is not a very just way of paying for damages considering that residents are not always responsible for the destruction.

To add insult to injury, repairs are usually very slow in being made. For example, last year many students paid fines for writing quotations on their doors. Simply walk through Sullivan and read the dates written next to some of the quotes and one quickly realizes that little has been done since two summers ago to erase or paint over this graffiti.

The dorms are home for some of us. For the health and safety of residents, I propose that cleaning crews should clean six days per week and recognize that the residents aren't necessarily responsible for all of the mess.

Democratic Senate offers hope for Americans

By FRED VALENTE

After what has seemed like five years of abuse, humiliation, and eulogies for the opposition, the Reagan stranglehold has been broken at last.

The smoke has cleared, the corpses have been dragged from the rubble. The dead, wounded and missing have all been counted up and placed in the elephant's graveyard. After what has seemed like five years of abuse, humiliation, and eulogies for the opposition, the Reagan stranglehold has been broken at last.

The Democrats have stormed the citadel and emerged victorious. What last Tuesday's election showed was that there was no realignment of voters to the Republican Party as Reagan has said. What last Tuesday showed was that Reagan is the Republican Party and that his popularity as a genial, grandfatherly leader has not transposed to some of the single-helixed mutoids that represent the GOP in other areas.

What last Tuesday showed was that the American people want to end all the mindless and superficial platitudes disguised as policy that have been so much a part of this current administration. They want to get down to the business of solving some of this nation's pressing problems.

Americans want to be certain that their sons will not have to dodge bullets in some banana patch in Nicaragua. Americans want to see that their kids are able to get a decent education by receiving federal loans and grants for college. Maybe now some people will be able to eat. Maybe now some people can get decent jobs. Maybe now we can be brought back from the brink of nuclear destruction.

Reagan is trying to put on the best face possible. He stammers about how the Republicans gained in governorships in various states (which has absolutely nothing to do with what goes on along the banks of the Potomac). He talks about still pushing his agenda in the Congress. He reiterates his "You ain't seen nothin' yet" phrase. Funny, those were probably Custer's last words too.

Certainly, we're not heading into Utopia, but the benign neglect of fundamental needs and problems of this society will hopefully be addressed by the Democrats. Joe Biden as head of the Judiciary Committee will make sure that extremist idealogues like William Rehnquist and Antonin Scalia won't be perched upon the federal bench.

A determined Sam Nunn, staring down his hawk-like nose as chairman of the Armed Services Committee will no doubt make Cap Weinberger squirm as he is called upon to justify his exorbitant defense expenditures. Claiborne Pell at Foreign Relations will help to extricate us from the Central American quagmire and hopefully ease the confrontational attitudes in our policies toward other nations.

Above all, dialogue about American society can finally open up. For the last five years, the Republican-controlled Senate has refused to listen to those at the other end. It is important for them to know what hasn't been discussed and debated within the Senate chambers. They've completely ignored the fact that this is a society divided by fear, hatred, ignorance, apathy and violence. And until we discuss what this society really is, then it's difficult to figure out how to change it. For example, there's been no discussion about the rot that destroys our cities. The government has all the resources it needs to keep it in check and hasn't used them, and it hasn't been discussed why not.

They haven't discussed why there is a nuclear warhead for every man, woman and child on this earth and what we're going to do about it. They haven't discussed the garbage and poison in our air and water. They haven't discussed race or poverty.

In short, there has been no dialogue about the sicknesses that may yet send this nation up in flames. They'd better start doing it. They'd better get it out in the open. Hopefully, the Democratic Senate will have the courage to confront these issues; instead of telling the American people what they want to hear, tell them the truth, and then do something about it.

Aside from immediate gratification, a Democratic majority in both Houses of Congress will let them set the national agenda for a change and place the party in a good position to recapture the White House in 1988. The 100th Congress, aside from being historical in and of itself, has a tremendous chance to make even more history in the Democratic traditions of the New Deal, the Civil Rights Act, and the Great Society. As the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. shouted from the rostrum in Memphis on his last night on earth; "I'm happy tonight! I'm not worried about anything, I'm not fearing any man! Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord!"

Ed Pourron: Heroic officer

By FRANK ORZECHOWICZ

(Photo by Nunes)

Ex police officer Ed Pourron brings Villanova students smiles, as well as a 20-year history of brave and dedicated service to Philadelphia's streets.

Have you ever walked into the library and noticed the smiling security guard known affectionately as Ed? You know, the guy who is always walking around, talking and saying hello to everyone.

Well, not many of you know the whole story behind Ed Pourron, a former Philadelphia police officer, with 20 years of experience under his belt. The same Ed Pourron who has received 25 commendations for acts of bravery and heroism.

Pourron was on the Philadelphia police force from 1962 to 1982. Throughout his 20 years, he worked both as a patrolman and in the police radio room.

He has two scrap books filled with newspaper clippings and snapshots. He has even been thrown through a plate-glass window during a riot.

Here is a sampling of some of the commendations Ed has received from the various police commissioners who served while he was on the force.

Pourron was given a commendation for bravery in 1965. While off duty, he aided a woman being held at knife-point. Pourron managed to free the woman, but the attacker still had possession of the knife. He did not shoot, for fear of hitting someone in the crowd. Instead, Pourron followed the attacker to his home and held him at gun-point until assistance arrived.

In 1970, Pourron received another commendation, this time a commendation for heroism. Off duty and wearing a back brace for an injury, Pourron rescued a gas station attendant engulfed in flames from a car explosion.

Pourron came to Villanova as a security guard in 1984, working various assignments throughout the campus. Most recently he has worked in the bookstore for eight months and in the library for the past one and one-half years.

What makes Pourron special is the relationship he has with the students he encounters every day. During our interview, three minutes did not go by without someone saying hello to Pourron or smiling at him.

"I like the kids," admitted Pourron. "I really like talking to them and saying hello."

He continued, "We have a very good relationship. Many of them are away from home for the first time, and they'll come to me to talk about some problem or concern. We all get along very well."

Pourron has a house and wife in Japan. He has been married for 12 years to Mitsuko Pourron.

The couple married in Philadelphia, and Mitsuko now lives in Japan. Pourron returns to Japan as often as possible, often bringing letters to foster children along with him on his trips.

Pourron also was a friend of Connie Mack, the famous baseball player. His mother grew up in the same neighborhood in Philadelphia with Mack.

During the interview, Pourron proudly pointed to a letter Mack had written to him a very long time ago (Connie Mack is now deceased).

So the next time you are in Falvey, look for the guard with the smile, greeting everyone he passes. Ask anyone in the library, and they will probably tell you that Pourron is great to talk to.

I rank Pourron in the top 10 of the "Most Popular People On Campus."

Education builds a future for Haitians

By NATALIE McKENNA

Education is the key to success — and the key to ending hunger. All of the funds raised by Villanova's Hunger Awareness Week will build a grade school to educate children living in Port Au Prince one of the poorest areas of poverty-stricken Haiti.

The school will be built through the guidance of Father Lawrence Bohnen, a Dutch priest who has dedicated his life to the education and feeding of the poor. Bohnen has built 125 similar schools throughout the slum areas of Haiti.

Bohnen not only builds schools for the poor of Haiti, but feeds 18,000 students everyday.

The Salesian priest has a policy that every child must attend school to get a meal. Bohnen mixes beans with grain to provide thousands of his students with balanced meals.

The school will have cinder block walls and a tin roof. The building will have six to eight classrooms, accommodating 300 children each year.

Barbara Haenn, coordinator for Hunger Awareness Week, said that the projected cost of building the school is $18,000. However, Haenn noted, the Villanovan community should surpass this amount.

The money to fund the school in Haiti has come from many sources, including fund raisers, contributions at Villanova masses and the 1985 and 1986 Hunger Awareness Weeks. Any extra monies will be put in a fund for the general upkeep of the building.

The classrooms in Bohnen's schools are always full, as the meal provides is often the only meal each child will receive that day. Often, children sneak bits of food home to their parents.

Bohnen gives the children of Port Au Price not only a nourishing meal, but an opportunity to gain the "basics of literacy," stated Haenn.

"The school being built in Villanova's name in Haiti will have a ripple effect for the next 30 or 40 years," Haenn continued. "It is significant in trying to change poverty and ignorance in the area."

Jumping into shape

By NATALIE McKENNA

Your heart is pounding quickly, your face is flushed and you feel like you could leap the DuPont Pavilion in a single bound. You have just survived an aerobics class at Villanova University.

Villanova's intramurals department started a new program this semester. One-hour aerobics sessions are held at 4 and 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, and at 10 a.m. on Saturdays.

"It's a good workout and a lot of fun ... there's always something new," stated aerobics instructor Kathy Nolan.

Nolan said that class sizes can range anywhere from six people to 60, but usually average 20 to 40 people per class.

Nolan noted that participation is stronger at the beginning of the week. "Mondays are crowded, there are some regulars that never skip a class, and some people drop in and out," stated Nolan.

The classes are attended mostly by girls, but the instructors would like to encourage Villanova guys to put on their sweats and give the aerobics classes a try.

Brian Vezina, a sophomore and the only male aerobics instructor, said that aerobic exercise helps breathing and increases endurance. Vezina gears his class toward toning and strengthening.

"Guys have the endurance because of their strength, but the girls have more coordination and technique," said Vezina.

"I stress getting a good workout and knowing your limitations," he said.

Nolan, on the other hand, said she stresses "proper form and warming up."

There are four aerobics instructors this semester: Nolan, Vezina, and seniors Susan Mellahand and Janet Ksenics. The instructors have a variety of backgrounds that provide for each student's preferences and goals.

For instance, Nolan has had dance training and has participated in numerous aerobic programs.

Fall into autumn's fashions

By STACEY WILKINS

Developing a distinctive look, whether that involves wearing a color you love, antique accessories or interesting shoes, can be a visible expression of your own individuality and special qualities.

Some feel that what is best for themselves is fine for everyone else. However, we should never allow others to dictate our clothing choices.

Clothing should be a statement of who we are. Our unique qualities should be accentuated and not hidden.

This begins by shopping with a discriminating eye. One can buy a lot of clothes — but not always the style that goes with it.

Class, good taste and a sense of style are timeless. A woman who possesses these attributes can wear just about anything and look smashing.

There are certain labels which exude class and style. For instance, classically composed Geiger clothing of Austria is known for their pure pool jackets, which make a sophisticated topcoat or accompanies a shirt for a business-like look.

Adrienne Vittadini gives the casual, low-key look in easy-to-wear knits accentuating styles. Vittadini's bold sweaters in [illegible] are one of her best lines yet.

Last fall's body-shaping styles, by Joan Vass USA, continue to be the trend. Especially worth noting is a rough hewn turtleneck sweater from Vass's line of knits.

Donna Karan has broken off from Anne Klein to offer yet another line of knits. The key to Karan's line are rich shades, including mustard, tortoise and peanut-colored merino wool, fastened at the waist with a crocodile or snakeskin belt.

Always save all your old clothes because inevitably they come back in style. One unlikely choice in this season of elegant, luxurious fabrics is terrycloth.

Terrycloth can now do more than hang on the towelrack. Several designers are showing terry in their sportswear and resort lines.

Ralph Lauren has sweats made of terry. Joan Vass has utilized terry in a more dressed up manner, with snug-fitting wrap skirts.

Terry is a versatile, easy to care for fabric. It is an affordable alternative to suede, cashmere, and silk.

Swatch has not cornered the market on innovations in the watch industry. A totally new look is being sported on the wrist called a chronograph.

A chronograph, while not the easiest watch to tell time, is a sophisticated change to trendy wristwatches. It has a moon phase dial and imitates styles characterized by watch manufacturers such as Movado.

In a season of neutrals, a hit of color has emerged in orginator Elsa Schiaparelli's "shocking" pink, a color that is reaching its prime.

Yves Saint Laurent, at the Bourges in Philadelphia, is showing a satiny oversized hot pink blouse over a black, short, cashmere skirt.

For upcoming holiday formals, some interesting changes on the standard attire can add that unexpected spark. A more romantic approach to dressing is being taken.

For example, velvet lends itself to an aura of feminine appeal. A velvet, emerald green dress with a halter style top will surely capture a few glances.

A basic outfit can go from "ho-hum" to striking with a touch of accessories. For instance, a simple black satin or patten leather pump becomes glittery news when clip-on, rhinestone bows are attached onto the backs of the shoes.

Another alternative is making a memorable entrance with long black gloves that reach to the elbow in bunched folds.

Adding your own style is a welcome change in a season of classic styles and styles. No one wants to look like everyone else.

Falvey's new computer system saves students time when checking out books.

Falvey computers save time

By ANNE DiSIMONE

Those of you who have not been to the library recently are in for a surprise. There are no more lines and no more rushing to get the book that everyone needs for a certain class.

The Falvey Memorial Library has recently installed GEAC computers; a line system from Canada which performs all circulation functions.

The computers work through a "codabar" bar code, which identifies books and people through the placement of coded stickers on books and student I.D. cards.

Circulation librarian Kathleen O'Connor and Louise Green, head of public services at the library, both stressed the importance of bar assignment for students. The process is called linking.

The process requires that a student's I.D. must have a current validation sticker. The student's social security number can then be entered and a bar code will be assigned.

The rest is simple. When books need to be taken out, they are "wanded" with a sensitive light. The light reads the numbers and information automatically appears on the screen.

With very little input, quite a lot of information can be discovered. In two seconds you can find out if a book is already out. In two more you can find out if the Freudian psychology book is still buried under your bed.

Any amount of money owed for fines will also show up.

When the computers were installed over Fall Break, the GEAC company provided a trainer who taught the basic methods for using the computer. O'Connor is now responsible for training other library employees.

Only the staff will be able to key into the bibliographic query to investigate book data. Students will still have to use the card catalog.

However, the library plans to have terminals installed for student use, also. Subject searching will no longer be necessary. An on-line catalog will be able to find the book a student needs.

A computerized Falvey Memorial? As Green stated, the GEAC computers are only the "first step, basis for the future."

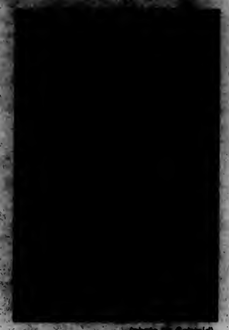
Wedding bells ring

By SUSAN TOLVE

Fairytales begin at least two times each Saturday as limousines pull up in front of the Villanova Chapel and out step a groom and a bride.

The first working day of each month, sometimes as early as 6:30 a.m., engaged couples line up outside St. Thomas of Villanova Parish to reserve the V.U. chapel.

When the doors open at 9 a.m., reservations are made about 14 months in advance for one of four time slots: 11 a.m., 12:30 p.m., 2:30 p.m. and 4:30 p.m. Only Villanova graduates and parish members can marry in the chapel.



Mary Jane Magee, campus ministry secretary, organizes weddings at the chapel for Villanova graduates. Since the chapel is in high demand, planning for weddings "takes up a big chunk of our [Campus Ministry's] time," she said.

Couples are assigned a staff member, who meets with them two or three times prior to the wedding and handles all their paperwork. "Part of the paperwork is making them [the couples] feel comfortable," said Magee.

In addition, couples are obligated to attend a pre-cana weekend (at Villanova or another parish) before they can be married. Couples are encouraged to bring a priest from their home parish.

Others request a priest from here, usually one they became acquainted with while attending Villanova.

As for wedding music, couples may arrange for their own or Campus Ministry will provide a list of musicians. Brother Nicholas Osuna, O.S.A., assists at all V.U. weddings, so couples do not have to find alter servers.

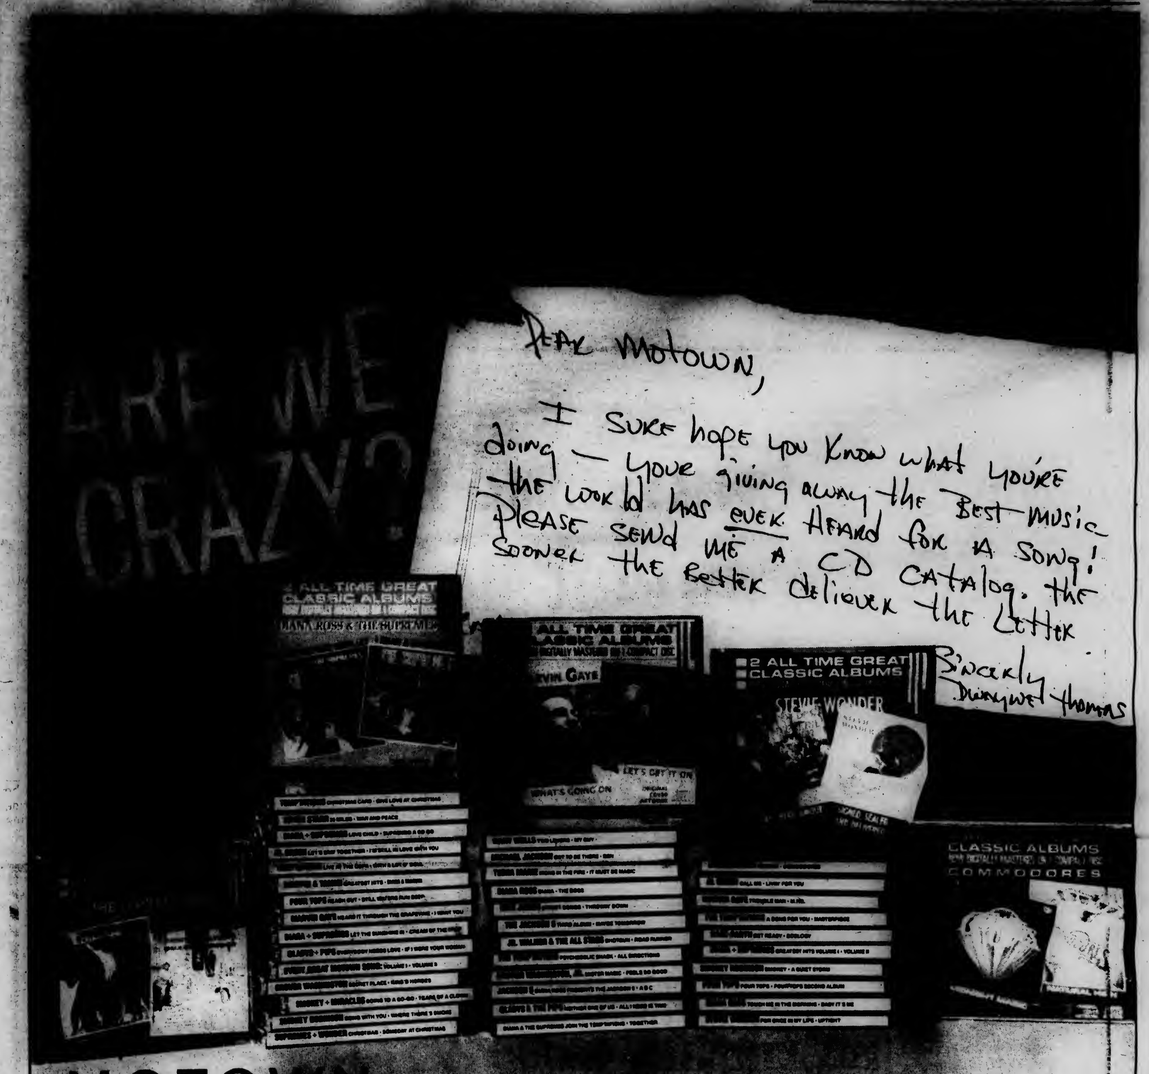
At least two weddings take place each Saturday at Villanova's beautiful chapel.

According to Magee, spring and fall are the most popular wedding seasons at V.U., "but every month is booked," she said.

Fall is also a popular time for tailgating at Villanova. Magee noted that Villanova security is notified of the date and times of all weddings.

This was not always the case. "At my wedding, seven years ago, people had to pay to park," said one Villanova administrator, who wishes to remain anonymous.



Some newlyweds welcome the football season. Last year, a bride and groom joined in the tailgating at Homecoming Weekend — right after they took their vows.

Vezina is a certified aerobics instructor who learned the techniques while working at a health club.

Both Vezina and Nolan hope to see improvements made in the upcoming semesters. "Hopefully a wider variety of time schedules can be arranged and more advertisement put out to increase the size of the program," said Veniza.

Both instructors noted that mirrors and a better sound system would help the program. "Music is very important, if you hear a good song, it gets you pumped," said Vezina.

Lisa Paul, a sophomore who just attended her first class, stated, "It was a really great workout, I wasn't ready for it, especially the stomach exercises."

Susan Corcoran, who heard about the aerobics classes from a flyer, tries to attend classes three times a week. "It's really good ... the instructor is excellent," said Corcoran.

Vezina stated, "This semester has really been a trial period for us. We have gotten nothing but positive reactions about the program."

The College of Nursing and the Human Organization Science Institute have collaborated on a project to provide care for the elderly..

Project assists the elderly

By NANCY L. DZWONCZYK

Over the centuries; the life expectancy of man has steadily increased as society became industrialized, sanitation improved and medical science advanced. With this in mind, it is not surprising that in 1986 the category of those over 65 numbers about 22 million, approximately 11 percent of the population. This figure is projected to reach 18 percent by the year 2030.

This rapid growth of the elderly population has generated practical needs in society to find ways to accommodate and manage the unique demands of our senior citizens.

Locating appropriate living arrangements for the elderly is a priority which presents a growing problem for society. While nursing homes and other long-term care facilities are options, increasing expenses and limited space have necessitated the search for alternative methods of care.

In response to these needs, the Pennsylvania Department of Aging instituted a state-wide Attendant Care Program in 1985. Attendant care for the elderly is the service of assisting disabled elderly individuals with in-home care services such as bathing, grooming and meal preparation.

It has been found that care of this sort is cost effective for both clients and health organizations, while allowing the clients maximum independence. Attendant care programs have enabled the care of the elderly to move out of the institution and into the home.

Through the combined efforts of faculty from several colleges and departments throughout the University, Villanova has recently made a unique contribution toward the enhancement of services to the elderly in the commonwealth.

After submitting a proposal, which was subsequently accepted by the Pennsylvania Department of Aging, the College of Nursing and the Human Organization Science Institute of Villanova have collaborated on a $63,000 project entitled "A Training Package on Management of Attendant Care Services to the Elderly."

The six-month project included two-day training sessions in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Brookville, Harrisburg and Wilkes-Barre for supervisors of area agencies on the aging.

In addition, the committee developed a training manual and slide tape presentation which will be used state-wide to train attendant care supervisors in effectively resolving issues which are inherent in administering Attendant Care Programs.

Simon produces another classic

By KEVIN HECHT

Graceland
Paul Simon
Warner Brothers

In 1984, as Paul Simon wavered in an artistic limbo after a divorce from his second wife, actress Carrie Fisher, a short-lived reunion with Art Garfunkel and the commercial flop of his album Hearts and Bones, a friend handed him a cassette that would change the direction of his career. The unmarked tape contained a unique style and rhythm he had never been exposed to before, and moved him so much that he embarked on a journey to find its creator. His odyssey led him into the heart of South Africa where the environment and culture he encountered inspired his song writing abilities and were the genesis of his brilliant new self-produced album Graceland, on Warner Bros. Records.

The mysterious tape that had such an impact upon Simon turned out to be titled Gumboots: Accordian Jive Hits, Vol. II, featuring the South African Boyoyo Boys. Simon used this group, along with other African musicians on his album to produce a completely original sound that makes Graceland special. Although Paul Simon has always produced strong, beautifully crafted songs and popular albums with diverse influences of jazz, rock and gospel music, Graceland's unprecedented synthesis of these styles and a unique African sound create an exquisite album that may well be Simon's masterpiece.

Graceland is laden with strong feeling and rhythm, clearly reflecting a boost in Simon's artistic inspiration. The album opens with "The Boy In The Bubble" in which Simon ironically juxtaposes the good and evil aspects of modern technology by exploring how in these "days of miracle and wonder," pain and suffering inevitably go on.

In one instance, he is fascinated by the miracles of science ("Medicine is magical and magical is art/ The boy in the bubble/ and the baby with the baboon heart"). Yet in another he realizes the despair caused by its improper usage ("There was a bright light/ a shattering of shop windows/ The bomb in the baby carriage was wired to the radio"). This song makes a strong opening statement and sets the pace for this intense, emotionally-charged album.

"Graceland," the title cut from the album, is a more traditional Simon composition that rhythmically fuses romantic disillusionment with the hope inspired by a famous symbol of the American spirit ("She said losing love is like a window in your heart/ everybody sees you're blown apart ... But I've reason to believe we will all be received in Graceland").

The appealing rhythm and sound contained in Graceland are formed by the way Simon cleverly molds African and American-influenced music together that first catches the listeners' attention with its uniqueness. It then spawns further interest with its solid musical foundation. "Homeless" and "Diamonds on The Soles of Her Shoes" are good examples of this stylistic blending as Simon layers his voice upon the a capella background chants of South African singers that produce a seemingly infinite variety of musical tones. Simon uses these tones to give "Homeless" a graceful ambience and he merges the textured vocals of "Diamonds on The Soles of Her Shoes" into a melodic, carefree composition punctuated by the sharp staccato accents of saxophones.

"Gumboots" and "That Was Your Mother" are introduced with funky accordian that, according to Simon, first attracted him to African music. "That Was Your Mother" combines a New Orleans jazz sound with the rest of the album's African feel, creating an appealing oddness in the song, and making it almost impossible to classify into a musical category.

Simon reveals his lighter, more humorous side in the album's first commercially successful song, "You Can Call Me Al." The songs catchy lyrical rumblings contain a backwoods rhythm with strong percussion and bass that is permeated by a piercing horn solo and the unusual use of a pennywhistle. "I Know What I Know" also stands out in this lighter vein as the shrill wailing of the Gaza Sisters back up Simon's whimsical lyrics.

African culture depicted on the cover of Graceland, Paul Simon's new masterpiece.

It's interesting to observe that even though Graceland expresses Simon's music in a different style, we still catch many familiar glimpses of his personality that have been revealed through all of his past music. One of Paul Simon's greatest strengths has been the sheer beauty of his lyrics and melodies showcased in classic songs such as "Sounds of Silence" and "Bridge Over Troubled Water." The lyrical, almost poetic flow of "Under African Skies," the album's most touching song, is just as beautiful as these older songs, but in a completely original fashion.

Classical ensemble to perform at Connelly

By THERESA JONES

Being the conscientious Villanova students that we are, sometimes we get so caught up in our studies and school activities that we lose sight of what goes on around us in the "real world." But the reverse often happens as well; we sometimes want to get away from university life so much that we fail to see the escape routes that are offered without actually making the great escape.

For example the various groups and clubs here on campus are constantly trying to create diversions for us, to give us that necessary study break. One such upcoming event is scheduled for next week, and is being sponsored by the German Club. The world-renowned Curtis Institute of Music will be putting on a concert here in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center, Nov. 19 at 8 p.m.

The Curtis Institute, located here in Philadelphia, is one of the best music institutes in the world, and its students are therefore truly gifted and talented. A concert was put on for Villanova students last year also, and this performance is sure to be of equal standard. Students as well as an alumnus from the Institute will perform, with selections to be taken from such German and Austrian greats as Mozart, Bach, Schubert, Brahms and more, creating what will surely be a fabulous presentation of Das deutsche Lied (the German Song).

After the concert there will be a reception and refreshments for all. A taste of German cuisine to follow a sampling of German art ... Again, the concert is scheduled for this Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the Villanova Room. It is free for students, in an attempt to encourage taking advantage of the various entertainment offerings of on-campus organizations. So come take a study break Wednesday night, either as an escape from university life, or simply to enjoy the music and food.

And as an afterthought, if you are still looking for an excuse to get off campus, the German comedy "Men," which has been playing worldwide to great reviews, is now playing in Narberth, and would also be well worth your while to attend.

Weaver leaves audience half satisfied

By MARYJO YANNACONE

"Half Moon Street"
directed by Bob Swaim

A story of international intrigue and intense eroticism, "Half Moon Street" presents a bleak portrait of both business dealings in the world and romance between strangers. Director Bob Swaim must have wanted to say something to his audience, but the intentions of the film are ambiguous, as in the entire plot.

Swaim's previous ventures have all been made in Paris, and the slow-paced quality of the classic French film can clearly be seen throughout the tediously long hour and 30 minutes of this, Swaim's first picture in English. Instead of being intrigued and aroused, the viewer finds himself caught in an unending series of sexual games played out by the title character, Dr. Lauren Slaughter, and a string of wealthy men. The international games of blackmail and murder are also being played out before us, though we are unaware of these motives until the final scenes of the film.

Portrayed by Sigourney Weaver, best known for her roles in "The Year of Living Dangerously" and the recent blockbuster "Aliens," Dr. Lauren Slaughter is both cold and uninteresting; there are no flaws and no character distinctions. She is just one immense stereotype of the do-all, be-all American yuppie on-the-rise: successful, well-travelled and well-versed at age 30.

A Ph.D. and an American expert in Middle Eastern politics and economics, she comes to London on a fellowship to a prestigious institute for scholarship and research. The job pays only 150 pounds a week, and the good doctor must find other means of supporting herself; living in Not-

PBS redefines the series

By JOE McGOWAN

Programming on the public television networks has in recent months offered much to support the notion that television in the right hands can be a remarkable medium for information in addition to entertainment. The PBS stations have recently offered excellent historical documentaries, such as "Ancient Lives" and "The Search For Troy," and film presentations, such as the Fassbinder rendition of Alfred Doblin's Berlin Alexanderplatz.

The recent spate of first-rate documentary programs began several months ago with "Ancient Lives," a fascinating look at the lives of all Egyptians, from peasant to pharoah, in the age of the pyramid-builders. "Ancient Lives" was written and hosted by Egyptologist John Romer and centered around the life of an artisan living at a temporary "city" that would appear at a pyramid construction site.

Last month the PBS stations aired "The Search For the Trojan War," a documentary hosted by the British journalist and BBC producer Michael Wood. The historical program presented a remarkably detailed account of the search for and fascination with the great city of King Priam. The search begins with Heinrich Schliemann's boyhood obsession with the gods and heroes of Homer's Iliad. It was an obsession that would cause Schliemann later in life to exhaust his fortune in search of the mythical city of the Trojans.

Schliemann's search for Troy was filled with visions of Agamemnon, Hector, Achilles, Troilus and Priam. What Schliemann and his successors would find at the Hissarlik site in Turkey was somewhat different than the city of legend.

As the program illustrated, Troy is not one but many cities built upon the same site and that city sacked and burned by the Achaians was not the first of them. Once Troy had been uncovered, the controversy surrounding it shifted to the matter of whether Homer's account was fact or fancy.

"The Search For Troy" not only reconstructed the city and its history but the fate of those that pursued it as well. Excellent production, filming, and music distinguished both "Ancient Lives" and "The Search For

Fans flock for Boss' release

By KEVIN HECHT

On Monday morning Columbia Records released Bruce Springsteen & the E Street Band Live/1975-1985 into record stores across the country, generating an interest and demand in the album that the music industry has never seen the likes of before.

Copies of the eagerly awaited record have been snatched off the shelves faster than they can be replaced as an onslought of loyal Springsteen fans try to get their hands on his new release.

Demand for the album is no different along the Main Line as local fans have swamped area stores at an unprecedented rate. "It's unbelievable," said Rich Williams, manager of Plastic Fantastic Used Record Exchange in Bryn Mawr, referring to the sales of the Boss' live album.

"We opened eagerly anticipating a large crowd, and then I left to go to the bank. On my way back I saw a kid running out of the store literally waving his copy of the album in the air. We had long lines for the rest of the day," Williams said.

Similar scenes have been carried out at many other local stores indicating that sales of the five-record collection have hit a fever pitch. Dan Matherson of Repo Records in Wayne has seen his sales run high. "We're selling the album at $24.99 which is a bit cheaper than most stores, and copies have been going fast," Matherson said. "It's definitely going to be a difficult album to get."

Live/1975-1985 contains a wide selection of Springsteen's music performed live during that 10-year period in arena's all over the country. Many of the Boss' live performances have been recorded and sold as illegal bootleg tapes, but this new album is the first legitimate live release ever offered to his fans.

Bruce Springsteen's last album, Born In The U.S.A., sold over 17 million copies and catapulted the native New Jersey rocker into world-wide superstardom.

Springsteen has always been known for giving breathtaking and spectacular performances, and his fans are hoping some of his energy and intensity will be transferred onto the record. According to Henry Johansson, an avid fan of the Boss who waited in line to get his copy of the new album, Live/1975-1985 definitely captures the essense of Bruce in concert. "I've seen Springsteen in concert three times and they've all been unbelievable shows. The new album is phenomenal. It's the next best thing to seeing him live," Johanson said.

Even the more expensive compact disc version of the new album is selling out in local stores. "Sales have been great," said Diana Piazza of 21 Century Sound in Bryn Mawr. "We only sell the album on compact disc and we sold over 50 by Tuesday afternoon."

Live/1975-1985 was released now to coincide with the holiday season, and stores are working overtime to keep the popular new album in stock. Nevertheless, it's safe to say that come Christmas morning, many fans of Bruce Springsteen will find his new album sitting beneath the tree.

Bruce Springsteen, pictured here on the cover of his 1978 release Darkness on the Edge of Town, has released a new live album that is selling out around the Main Line.

Further explorations made in electronic music

By JOE McGOWAN

The unusual success of the Windham Hill Records group has brought to prominence what is called "New Age" music. Thus have artists such as Shadowfax, Liz Story and George Winston become major names in the areas of progressive jazz and rock. While "New Age" music often borders on the classical end of the musical spectrum, with the solo piano works of Story and Winston, as well as Wim Mertens, William Ackerman, Paul Halley and Denny Zeitlin, other artists in this field employ an electronic approach.

Life Style Records is a small, new records group which claims that "All of the music that you will hear on Life Style Records is simply light years ahead of standard 'New Age' fare." Their product bears much resemblance to that of Windham Hill, the difference being that theirs is more firmly placed in the electronic field of music.

The Life Style label has debuted with six releases, two of which include the electronic ensemble Latitude and Thilo von Westerhagen & Band. The self-titled debut release of the former consists in eight electronic pieces whose arrangement and style differ from the orchestrations of a Vangelis and the pop rhythms of a Kraftwerk or Bauhaus. Such instrumentals as "Open Water" and "Cloud Dancing" come close to a semblance of Peter Gabriel's instrumental work, especially that which he produced for the film "Birdy."

Von Westerhagen & Band on their release Pleasureland combine both the acoustic and the electronic. Selections such as the title track "Pleasureland," "Waterlilies in the Desert" and "Drachenflug" mix a modern keyboard sound with that of traditional piano and saxophone. Much of the West German ensemble's music has, not surprisingly, been used for movie themes. It is difficult at best to say how Life Style Records releases will fare in the general market but, in view of the surprising success of Windham Hill, there seems recently to be a growing interest in music that diverges from the mainstream.

Nothing could be further from the mainstream than Tangerine Dream. This German electronic trio has been composing and performing since the late '60s and was playing "New Age" music long before anyone else. Their electronic compositions have explored the realm of the synthesizer and redefined the use of that instrument. What was once an accessory to serious music now creates it.

Tangerine Dream is a group obsessed with perfection in sound and performance, as evidenced by their show at the Tower Theater last June. Edgar Froese and Chris Franke have now been joined by the young pianist and guitarist Paul Haslinger from the University of Vienna. Two albums from the trio have been released this year: one a live recording from 1980 and the other the work of the new Froese/Franke/Haslinger lineup.

Pergamon is a recording of Tangerine Dream's Jan. 31, 1980 performance at the Palast der Republik in East Germany. "Quichotte," parts 1 and 2, occupies the entire length of the album and offers further evidence that Tangerine Dream still reigns supreme in the area of electronic music. Underwater Sunlight debuts a new Tangerine Dream on a new label (Relativity).

Underwater Sunlight
Tangerine Dream
Relativity Records

Recorded last April in their Berlin studio, Tangerine Dream's Underwater Sunlight is markedly different from previous compositions. Their earlier work was distinguished by its amorphousness, with the synthesizers rambling over an entire album's length.

This latest work concentrates on melody and order — a concentration especially apparent on the second side with the four short pieces: "Dolphin Dance," "Ride on the Ray," "Scuba Scuba," and "Underwater Twilight." The first side consists in the two parts of the moody "Song of the Whale," which is, at the least, one of the trio's finest compositions. A whole new array of sounds has been gathered by Tangerine Dream for this beautiful work — a tribute to a noble but endangered species.

In the last few years Tangerine Dream has attracted notice for work in the areas of film ("Sorcerer," "Thief," "Risky Business," "Wavelength," "Firestarter," "Flashpoint," "Heartbreakers," and "Legend") and television ("Streethawk" and "Moonlighting") scores. Their records sell moderately well. Their tours are confined to medium-sized venues. But their musical influence is far-reaching and their latest work Underwater Sunlight arcs out of the mainstream and illumines music higher and better.

Kelly's: Villanova's home away from home

By MICHELE O'NEILL

What do most Villanova students do on a Friday afternoon? Not their hair or their homework, that's for sure. They head right on down to their neighborhood hotspot, Kelly's, where the fun of the weekend begins.

What is so attractive about a college hangout that sometimes takes a half and hour to get into? Could it be the new paint job that Kelly's recently underwent? Could it be the friendly personnel? Or is it possible that it is just a great hangout where everyone can see their friends without being on campus or in class? I think that all three contribute to the success of this bar.

On any given Friday and even Wednesday night, one does not even have to worry about where to meet up with friends and that is a major plus for Kelly's.

"One of the best things about Kelly's is that anyone can go there by themselves and know that they will always see people there that they know," says Caron Cicero, a senior at Villanova.

Lori Conte, another practicing Kelly's goer says, "Wednesday nights at Kelly's are different and sometimes better than the Friday happy hour scene because it's a break from studying. It is a time to just have fun with your friends before the weekend."

The atmosphere in this college hangout is the best remedy for a long tedious week of classes. Most people agree that after a week of tests and papers Kelly's is the best cure.

Senior Mary Egan says, "After a week of working or after a test on Friday, just get me to Kelly's where I can forget school and have a good time."

Mounds of juniors and seniors pile into this bar one after another after another. The line outside is endless and sometimes it stays that way until very late at night.

This past weekend, because it was Homecoming, Kelly's was the spot to go to ... if you wanted to wait in line for an hour or so. Once you did get in, it was the place to be.

"It was like senior year relived. I walked in with friends of mine from Villanova and there were tons of other people there I had not seen since senior week," says Tom Dougherty, a 1986 Villanova graduate.

Once inside all that is seen is Villanova memorabilia surrounded by Villanova students. There is an aura of school spirit that permeates inside of Kelly's. No other place can match that.

The smiling, friendly people at Kelly's create a comfortable atmosphere conducive to having fun. The ever present employees always have a smile and a beer waiting just for you.

There are three rooms that make up this little place on the Main Line. The side room holds the DJ and the picnic tables, which become the center of conversation as people gather on top and around them. It seems to me that everyone goes to that room for air, or, maybe to request a song.

Most of the action is in the main room. This is where most socializing takes place through conversation, handshakes and kisses among friends. This is Kelly's! A fun-filled, highly spirited bar that attracts all types of Villanova students.

Finally, there is a pool room in the back of Kelly's where many guys (and some girls) gather to shoot some pool against a friend or a team. Cheers pour out of this room whenever a ball is plunked in the pocket.

Where else can any person go where there are absolutely no stereotypes placed on them then to Kelly's? "You can wear anything you want and you can feel confortable and never over or under dressed," says Judy Uhron, a senior at Villanova.

This is one of the best college hangouts for a Friday afternoon and even a Wednesday night. Although there is no dancing, the music is great and the best part is that Kelly's is affordable and conducive to the college budget. Regardless of the crowds and the heat, people will always begin their weekend here at the No. 1 spot on the Main Line.

Since today is Friday, make sure you get there early and just relax. Start off this weekend doing something fun, and if you do I'll see you there!

Kool & the Gang's success doesn't last forever

By KATIE KRACKELER

Forever
Kool & the Gang
Polygram Records

Even though Kool & The Gang were named the Top Black Artists of the Year of 1985, their success was not guaranteed to last "forever". And believe me, it hasn't. Forever, the inappropriate title of Kool & The Gang's latest album recently released by Poly Gram Records, is nothing more than a compilation of poorly written and poorly sung songs that definitely do not have the power to last "forever."

It is disappointing that a band that produced hits like "Celebration," "Get Down On It," and "Misled," could come up with an album that contains little if any creativity. There is nothing innovative about their sound in Forever; the sound is generic and predictable. In fact, even the titles of the songs are unimaginative, with names like "Broadway," "Holiday," and "Stone Love."

The first side of the album starts out with the song "Victory." The first few beats have a hint of potential, but the beat turns into a very "typical" sound that many of their songs contain; the same beat repeats over and over until the sound loses distinction. The next song entitled "IBMC," again has a weak, typical beat the repeats itself over and over again. The vocal quality is extremely poor and sounds unnaturally high-pitched. It produces an extremely grating sound.

The title track "Forever" sounds suspiciously like a Lionel Richie song. It is slow and monotonous and again the vocal quality is poor; the song seems to go on "forever."

The flip-side doesn't offer much diversity. This side starts off with "Holiday," another nondistinct song with that same irritating repetition of the other songs. Every song seems to lack originality and quality — nothing seems to fall into the category of being a hit.

It seems that little creative or artistic effort went into the production of this album. Perhaps Kool & The Gang were simply depending on their current popularity and success, rather than trying to develop a sound that would attract a broader audience. Their sound is "old news" and they should try to produce something a little more daring and up to date.

Even the album cover reveals this lack of creativity. On the front the group is posed together simply sitting there in extremely gaudy, glittering outfits that seem a little over done. This "family portrait" pose is not exactly "eye-catching" or very original. On the back cover there are individual shots of each band member. It seems that when they produced this album they were far more concerned about looking "good" on the album jacket then sounding "good" on the stereo.

Robert "Kool" Bell made a statement explaining the feeling and idea behind Forever. He said, "We sing about success in life, peace, and our special gifts, and most of all the importance of striving to achieve the highest you can." This may sound like valuable advice but maybe they should have practiced what they preached. Forever is not an album that achieves much of anything, much less success. If you like the sound of Kool & The Gang buy their earlier albums, Celebration and Emergency, but stay away from Forever.

Fall horrors scare up business

By RUSS CECCOLA

This fall hasn't seen the usual multitude of horror films as in past years. However, the two flicks that did come out weren't of any noticeable entertainment value either. Trying to maintain an objective opinion without chopping to shreds Wes Craven's latest, "Deadly Friend," is difficult. "Trick or Treat" was an excellent film, if you're into heavy metal.

Wes Craven is better known for "A Nightmare on Elm Street" and "The Hills Have Eyes." He should hope that his name is not recognized alongside the words "Deadly Friend." This movie, which was played up as the thriller of the '80s, turned into a moviegoer's nightmare as a lot of stupid people did stupid things in a dull movie. Starring Matthew "go-back-to-Little-House-in-the-Prairie" Laborteaux as Paul and Krysty Swanson as Samantha, the film is an attempt to connect with the computer-age teenagers who might find "Deadly Friend" enjoyable.

Paul is an intelligent young man who has built a robot that does just about everything except go to the bathroom. He skips high school and goes straight to college, moving into a new neighborhood. While moving in, he gets friendly with the girl-next-door and they get to know each other better and better every day. Paul finds out that Samantha gets beaten by her father and one night the father kills her by knocking Sam down the steps, telling police and Paul that it was an accident.

Meanwhile, on Halloween, the lady in the house down the street that hates visitors, shot Paul's robot and destroyed it when it entered her yard. He had saved the master chip and, when Sam died, decides to bring her back to life by putting the chip in her brain. She naturally kills everybody and almost gets away with it until a policeman shoots her at the end.

Come on, Craven, you can do better than that. It's a stupid idea for a film, and it was proved in the final version seen in the theatres. Th only redeeming quality of the film is comprised of two parts: the noxious Laborteaux is killed in a surprise ending and the lady who killed Paul's robot is destroyed by the undead Sam when she firepowers a basketball into her head and it explodes. Other than that, forget it Craven.

On the other hand, "Trick or Treat" is a well-made, humorous film aimed at the growing number in this country who enjoy heavy metal. Marc Price stars as Eddie Weinbauer, the high school kid into heavy metal and outcast by most of the rest of the school kids, who turn out to be the stereotyped upper-class, snobby, uncompromising fools. He is shocked when he finds out that his heavy metal idol, Sammi Curr, is dead, especially since the musician was supposed to play a Halloween concert at Eddie's alma mater, also the high school of Curr's diploma.

Eddie gets scared and has to stop Curr when he invades the high school Halloween dance that he was supposed to play at and kills people by zapping them with his guitar. Eddie eventually stops Curr and wins the only girl in the school who likes him.

The great thing about "Trick or Treat" is that whoever created the metal aspect knew what he was doing. The jokes and atmosphere of the film and Eddie's life are tailored to that. Also making a guest appearance is Ozzy Osbourne, who plays a preacher against heavy metal — a performance that must be seen. So, if you're into metal and need a good movie to see, catch "Trick or Treat" before it leaves the area or the PMRC gets it, whichever comes first.

ting Hill — one of the city's poorest neighborhoods — is bringing her down. So this American intellectual vegetarian, who speaks not only English but French, Japanese and Chinese fluently, decides to try working for an escort service, the Jasmine Agency, to increase her weekly salary.

She defends herself, however, by insisting that she is always in control of the situation, choosing for herself which customers get a quick dinner, and which get complimentary bed and breakfast. It is at this point in the so far highly implausible tale that Lord Bulbeck, a British diplomat played by Michael Caine, is introduced. As a customer of Slaughter, Bulbeck finds both pain and excitement in being in love with a hooker. He is turned on by her escapades, frequently asking about her customers and their sexual preferences and perversions, and at the same time somehow grieves for the supposedly desperate acts of a woman who has sold herself for an apartment in Central London.

Bulbeck is in the midst of a peace-making effort involving the British and the Arabs, (a connection that is never explained), and unbeknownst to him or Slaughter, is also being set up for murder by his opposition. Throughout the film up to the last 10 minutes, however, all the viewer is aware of are the negotiations, which are ambiguous at best, the confusing connection of the British and the Arabs, and the undercover surveillance of both Bulbeck and Slaughter by an unknown third party.

The film drags along in this way, consisting mainly of three basic scenes: Slaughter prancing around naked with some diplomat or playboy; Slaughter and Bulbeck making an attempt at communication or making love, and Slaughter making points at a dignitary affair or in a conference room, thereby reminding the audience that she is (or at least she's supposed to be) a woman of both strength and intelligence.

Director Bob Swaim fails to intrigue, and instead leaves the viewer completely clueless as to his intentions in making the film. Too slow to be a suspense story, too complicated to be a romance, Swaim's project falls short of any goal he might have had. Seeming to have no discernible message or meaning, "Half Moon Street" is an extremely slow-moving exercise in plot impausibility, leaving the viewer empty, confused and thoroughly disappointed.

Simon's Graceland

This song's gracefully descriptive lyrics glide upon a smooth guitar arpeggio that backs up the solemn harmonization between Simon and his guest Linda Ronstadt to create the dream-like imagery of the peaceful African plains ("Joseph's face was black as the night/ The pale yellow moon shone in his eyes/ His path was marked by the stars in the Southern Hemisphere/ and he walked his days under African skies").

The album closes with a departure from the African influence, in the euphonic south of the border rhythm of "All Around The World (or The Myth of fingerprints)" that is nurtured through Simon's acoustic strumming and the influence of the critically acclaimed Mexican band, Los Lobos. It's hard to pick out a highlight on an album full of highlights, but this song stands out as one of the best. The lyrics on "All Around The World" flow together so well that they seem to spontaneously spill out of the song, giving it an infectious sound that is easy to listen to over and over again.

In Graceland, Paul Simon synthesizes all of his greatest artistic aspects. His masterful lyricism, his power of description and his strong musical sense all gel within this unique and successful experimentation, making it a truly memorable album. Perhaps the best description of the feeling that pervades Graceland can be summed up in Simon's own words in the lyrics of "Under African Skies" as he sings, "This is the story of how we begin to remember/ this is the powerful pulsing of love in the vein./ These are the roots of rhythm, and the roots of rhythm remain."

Graceland is a powerful, elegant collection of songs that will be remembered for quite a long time to come. The emotion and music contained on the album surpasses any of the fine works that have previously marked Paul Simon's career, and reveal that his odyssey into the African culture produced a classic in the true sense of the word.

Scorcese epitomizes black jazz in 'Midnight'

By RICHARD ABRAHAM

In telling a story about black American jazz musicians living in Paris during the late '50s, Betrand Tavernier's "'Round Midnight" succeeds in becoming one of the most penetrating and deceptively energetic jazz films in years.

The Parisian atmosphere seems to fit in perfectly with the heart and guts style of creation that jazz seems to make all its own. This style can also bring its own kind of frustration and sorrow in some artists if the creation and progress of their music is not continual. "'Round Midnight" is about Dale Turner, who, if he ever existed, would have been such an artist. In this musician's case, he is his music, and neither he nor his music can remain the same night after night.

In casting saxophone aficionado Dexter Gordon in the role of Dale Turner, director Tavernier made a risky yet inspired decision. By casting an actual musician in the part, he could get the true feelings on film of a sax player during his difficulties and successes in the origination and the delivery of his music.

Truly, the character of Dale Turner dominates "'Round Midnight" with Gordon's gravely voice. While the voice has been decimated by too many nights of lonely liquor and the more than occasional cigarette, it also is a voice that speaks of experience and destructive determination.

As the story opens, Turner is playing at the Blue Note in Paris. Outside in the rain, is a French commercial artist named Francis Boriern (Francois Cluzet). This artist listens to Turner through a grate by the sidewalk. He listens and becomes engrossed by the feeling of the music, because as we later learn, jazz and specifically Dale Turner are his artistic inspirations.

After the show, he buys the desperate Turner a drink and later discovers Turner's alcoholic tendencies. In an attempt to have Turner swtich his attentions from liquor to musical composition, Francis has Turner move in with him and his daughter Beranger. Through Francis and Beranger's affection, Turner at last attains a sober mind. Turner starts to compose and record material again and everything seems fine.

However, Turner's destruction then begins, despite Francis' resolution to stay with him, when he makes the decision to leave Paris in order to return to New York. As Goodley, Turner's manager, Martin Scorsese epitomizes New York beautifully in his quick, reflectionless, never-look-back way of living. Everything is "great" and "fantastic" according to Goodley. In the way he says these phrases with such a lack of sincerity or true feeling, Goodley proves himself to be the polar opposite of Turner and his music.

The plot line (inspired by incidents of Francis Paudras and Bud Powell's lives), and indeed the film itself would not have been brought to the screen this way if it had not been for Bertrand Tavernier's love for jazz and the people in it. Dedicated to Bud Powell and Lester Young, "'Round Midnight," for Tavernier, was a labor of love.

"'Round Midnight" flows along with elegant pacing and a rich, insightful script co-written by Tavernier and David Rayfiel. Tavernier also made sure that the lingual authenticity was not lost with his commonly used method of English subtitles with spoken French.

The musical lineup brought together for the film, led by composer Herbie Hancock, gives the audience a chance to listen to some very fine jazz, but Tavernier makes it readily noticeable that you don't have to love jazz to like the movie, you only have to understand emotions.

Friendly Floppies. . . Activision and [illegible]

By RUSS CECCOLA

In this edition of Friendly Floppies, a new code will be given to each game that indicates the availability of that game on different computers. This was started because of the confusion that some people have had about whether a certain package was available for their system. The code will be as follows: C64 for the Commodore 64, C128 for the Commodore 128, AP for Apple computers, IBM for IBM PC, MAC for the Apple Macintoshsh and compatibles and AT for Atari computers. Any other computers will be indicated if needed. However, the above code covers the major computers.

GREETING CARD MAKER **
ACTIVISION, INC.
C64/128, AP

How many times have you forgotten to pick up a greeting card for a special occasion or haven't had time to run to the store to get one? Activision just last week released the cure to the problem under the title Greeting Card Maker. This software package, connected with a printer, enables you to create greeting cards of all kinds. Choices involve different sizes of cards, a pop-up card, background scenes, pictures, style of text, border pattern and many other options that are all accessed from a menu-type program.

Greeting Card Maker works with most popular printers and their compatibles and simply prints out the card on your printer paper or any paper (colored, etc.) that you choose to load. The great things about Greeting Card Maker is that you don't have to worry about having the right pictures for a certain card. That has been taken care of in the form of such a long list of pictures on the disk.

PAPER MODELS: THE CHRISTMAS KIT **
ACTIVISION, INC.
C64/128, AP, IBM, MAC, Tandy 1000

Along the same lines as Greeting Card Maker, Christmas Kit works with a printer with the difference being that Christmas Kit still involves the building and decoration of the final product. With Christmas Kit, the object is to create Christmas decorations with your computer and printer. There are numerous pictures come out in pieces and you have to cut the pieces out and paste them together to form the final product.

The pictures range from very simple to very complex, like the houses from Dickens' A Christmas Carol. The software package also includes an Activision ruler, red and green magic markers and a paste stick. So there's no excuse to start creating as soon as you open the box. Christmas Kit is just another bit from the Creativity Software branch of Activision, the branch dedicated to the creativity of its customers and giving them the best software with which to be creative.

GIVE MY REGARDS TO BROADSTREET ***
MASTERTRONIC C64/128

Although Paul McCartney's "Give My Regards to Broadstreet," the movie, was a flop, this video game/adventure is definitely not. As Paul McCartney, you must track down the other members of your band and close friends who each have a part of the only song that wasn't recovered after the original tapes were destroyed in the studio. You must track them on an actual map of London that stretches 943 screens' worth and meet them as they come out of the exit from the Tube, London's equivalent of a subway.

It is different along the lines of finding the people, but it is rewarding when you finally return to the studio with the parts to the song and keep your rights to the material from being taken away. This game deserves some attention and, although it is an older title, it is worth the effort to find in a computer store.

NINJA ***
MASTERTRONIC C64/128, AT

Need I say more? Ninja combines all of the best martial arts games with a goal to give one of the best fighting games in a while — and still at a cheap price. Ninja takes you through a multi-level temple in which you are in search for your girlfriend, trapped by the Evil Ninja on the top floor. You must fight many a Karateka, Thug and Evil Ninja to reach Akuma's Chamber where the lady is being held.

The game requires a lot of practice, but once completed, still demands that you play more to pass the time. Although you can choose different routes to the top of the temple, the game is made even more different by the randomness in where you will find enemies. Each game is different. You must collect idols dropped by your loved one on the way. To get into Akuma's Chamber, you must have collected six idols. Killing all of the four enemies in the Chamber allows access to the seventh and last idol, at which point you win the game.

CHILLER *
MASTRONIC C64/128

Chiller is an interesting adventure, in which you must fend off beasts of all natures to save your girlfriend who is trapped deep in the forest. As a graphic game, Chiller is pretty good, but in game play, it is lacking. The character that represents you is hard to move and the game itself is designed in such a way as to inhibit the movement of your character on the screen.

The object is to make it through five screens, get your girlfriend and return through these same five screens again. This was the final straw. The game is just too hard, but deserves an honorable mention because of the theme (you're traveling through a haunted area and encounter monsters and things that go bump in the night).

PRO-GOLF *
MASTERTRONIC C64/128

Although golf simulators are pretty popular with golf enthusiasts, you better be careful about buying this one. Two elements that are essential to playing golf on a computer are missing: the range between you and the ball is not given and the player stays in one angle. I find it hard to get him to hit in another direction without putting some wild angle on the ball. The graphics are excellent, but the rest of the game leaves much to be desired. There is one course, with a detailed look at the 18 holes in the instruction manual, including tips. But just try executing those hints. It is next to impossible. But as a first try at golf simulation for both Mastertronic and maybe that novice golf enthusiast out there, Pro-Golf is an average game.

ZZZZZ **
MASTERTRONIC C64/128

Graphic adventures are returning to vogue in the last few months. ZZZZ is another entry into the Hall of Fame for computer games. It is an interesting concept and executes well. In ZZZZ, you wake up from a dream to find that you aren't in your bed at all, but floating in a river in the Land of Nod. You must travel through the dream world via an icon-based system and cross the border between wakefulness and sleep. Although it is difficult to make it to the end of the game, the graphics are excellent and the game responds to the commands you give it intelligently.

THE GATES OF DAWN **
MASTERTRONIC C64/128

Although it is difficult to understand what the goal of this game is, The Gates of Dawn is an excellent attempt at an adventure game. You travel from room to room in a chess board-like scenario as a knight in order to explore all rooms in the area. You have a sword at your side to fight the denizens of the rooms, yet you still need more to survive.

You can pick up many things along the way, including gems and more weapons, but just be careful where you walk or you might wind up dead. The graphics are very good and give a certain feel to the game. Worth the money to buy because of the theme and the challenge to make it to the gates of dawn.

HERO OF THE GOLDEN TALISMAN ***
MASTERTRONIC C64/128

This game is definitely right up there with Ninja as one of the better games released by Mastertronic. It involves all levels of a gamer's abilities to try to find the five pieces of the Golden Talisman in a giant cavernous maze. The more obvious part of the package is the arcade qualities, which definitely deserve the notice.

It takes all of your skills to maneuver your way through the passages, all the while firing back at the creatures that aim to hurt you. It took about 40 minutes of exploration to find one piece of the famed object, just proving Golden Talisman's staying power in your disk drive. If you're looking for an adventure that takes your time away, yet doesn't bore you, this is the one.

THE LAST V8 **
MASTERTRONIC C64/128, AT

Along with the very good come the very bad and Last V8 belongs unfortunately with the very bad. Although speech synthesis is involved, Last V8 is the hardest video game to maneuver ever. You've got a relatively short amount of time to cover a disproportionate amount of space. The road you travel has so many twists and turns that you can't make it to your goal, reaching the base. The graphics are excellent, with some of the best landscapes seen on a computer screen, but the obscure outweighs the visuals to reduce this game to the bargain bin.

Torture your ears with 8 seconds of techno-pop failure

By MEGAN GUIDERA

Eight Seconds
Almacantan
Plydor/Polygram
½

Music, the ever changing multi-millionaire industry that makes stars overnight and has-beens over an hour, is a highly complex field. Stardom is a rarity that takes time, talent and money to achieve. Eight Seconds, a new Canadian quintet, is striving to attain stardom with their new album Almacantar. However, it's going to take more than one fairly decent album for Eight Seconds to achieve their goal.

The band Eight Seconds formed in 1982. Its five band members are: Andres del Castillo, Brazillan-born lead singer and lyricist; March Cesare, bassist; Frank Levin, keyboardist; Scott Milks, drummer; and Marc Parent, guitarist. Their name, Eight Seconds, comes from the idea of how quickly one can grasp fame. They were discovered by producer Rupert Hine at The Canada Day Festival in 1985. Rupert loved their music and was "ecstatic" to work with them. Hine is best known for his success with The Fixx, Tina Turner and Howard Jones.

The album, Almacantar, is a compilation of their contemporary pop/rock music. The title, Almacantar, has two meanings: 1) a navigational instrument that measures time and latitude; 2) the poetic translation is "singing from the heart," or "soul-singing."

The first side of Almacantar is somewhat entertaining. The music bears a striking resemblance to that of The Fixx. The song "Sincere" sounds very much like The Fixx's "Saved By Zero." However, "Sincere" is a bit too long and it drags.

The majority of the songs on the first side deal with the all important themes of broken trust in a relationship. This is exemplified in the heavily synthesized song "Call and Cry:" "Somebody has made a promise/ Somebody has told a lie/ The hour won't last forever./ The call and cry."

The best song on the album is "Kiss You (When it's Dangerous)." "Kiss You (When it's Dangerous)" is a slower-paced song with a strong bass beat. It deals with the politics of sex.

The song "Just Pretend" also has a great deal of synthesizers; however, it is slow and unique. It speaks of games played in a relationship that is fading.

After an entertaining first side, the second side of Almacantar, is a disappointment. Its four songs are long, tedious and repetitive.

Eight Seconds has a sound that is new and entertaining, yet it is not fully developed. The band displays definite potential with the enriched first side of Almacantar; however, they also dispel definite signs of a strong need for development with the poor second side. Almacantar is new, different and worth listening to, but it is definitely not going to be the next top pop album.

PBS programs

Troy." And both series should soon be repeated by one of the local PBS affiliates but, in the interim, both of the series has an outstanding companion book currently available.

Two excellent series are presently being aired on PBS, the first of which, "The Africans," offers a spectacular look at the many aspects, the cultural, the anthropological and so forth, of an entire continent. This week's segment, aired Sunday afternoon on Channel 39 and Sunday evening on Channel 12, "New Conflicts," examined the violence that has wracked the continent as a result of the assault and withdrawal of imperialism. Algeria, Nigeria, Sudan, Mozambique, Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) and South Africa have all witnessed terrible violence. "New Conflicts" concentrated on the violence of the last of these — the apartheid state of South Africa. The situation in that southernmost African state was calmly examined in the context of past African struggles for liberation, and the situation appears tragic for both parties involved — the oppressed black majority and the ruling Afrikaner minority — in the last bastion of colonial imperialism.

The second excellent offering presently unfolding on PBS is being shown through the Great Performances series. Originally a 1982 nine-hour film by Tony Palmer, "Wagner" has been converted into one-hour segments airing each Sunday afternoon.

"Wagner" is the brilliant biography of the German opera master chronicling his triumphs, setbacks and music. In the third installment, aired this past Sunday, Wagner, played brilliantly by Richard Burton, received a godsend — royal patronage under Otto II of Bavaria. The great composer, however, seemed to wield too strong an influence over the young monarch in the opinion of three top Bavarian ministers (played by three top British actors: John Gielgud, Laurence Olivier, and Ralph Richardson).

Wagner fills the young king with dreams of a united Germany under a true German king, such as the Swan warrior Lohengrin. Unfortunately for Bavaria, then at odds with Prussia, King Otto is more interested in the composer and his lavish tale of the Ring of the Nibelungs than in the affairs of the state.

Richard Wagner is described in his film biography as a man of towering passions, chief among which was his music. He was a man not averse to having affairs, such as the one with Cosima von Bulow (Vanessa Redgrave). He was a man who strained relations to and beyond the limit even with friends such as fellow composer Franz Liszt, and he was unabashedly an anti-Semite. And he was a man of music — of Tanhauser, Lohengrin, The Flying Dutchman, Die Meistersinger, Tristan and Isolde, Die Walkure, Siegfried, and the rest of his great operas, works which have earned him enduring fame and affection, so much so that many consider him the greatest writer of operas ever.

The acting, scenery and especially the music of "Wagner" make this series remarkable even for Great Performances. And the airing of "Wagner" is hopefully a sign that public television is not in a waning, but rather a waxing phase.

The Bacchae

The chorus in Euripides' "The Bacchae" tells of the Gods they worship in Villanova Theatre's production of the Greek tragedy, running Nov. 19-22 and Dec. 3-7.

By MEGAN GUIDERA

Villanova Theatre will continue their escapade of horror this season with their third production this year, Euripides' tragedy "The Bacchae." After the smashingly successful performances of "Frankenstein" and "Something's Afoot's" director, Dr. James J. Christy, will attempt to match the excellence of the two prior plays of horror. "The Bacchae" is the intense tale of the violence and horror that result from the conflict between man's desire for order and the demands of instinct.

Vasey's production should be especially enriching after director Christy recently spent six weeks participating in a colloquium on Greek Tragedy in Translation at Dartmouth College.

"The Bacchae" will open Nov. 19 and run to Nov. 22 and Dec. 3-7. For more information contact The Vasey Theatre Box Office at 645-7474.

Ruggers win their 398th

By SHANA LYNCH

The Villanova Rugby Team took the muddy pitch in fine form as they tread on Haverford College for their 398th Club victory. The Homecoming crowd eclisped 500 and fun was had by all. The A Team blew out the lads from Lancaster Avenue 30-6, and the B Team score was so lopsided, in our favor, that it's embarrassing to print.

Carlo DiNota was certainly the unstoppable man of the day with two tries, as the Noone brothers looked on approvingly. Meanwhile, the 'Nova defense held tough on a couple of key tryline stands, with the help of a fine upfield run by Chris "Czonka" Gatti, and a couple kicks by Noone.

Billy Mendrcyndi scored on a heads up play, as the wing got even with three tries of its own by Chris "Super Fresh" McStarr, Select-sider Gregory Poch, and dancin' Denis Graeber.

The hustle award goes to Matt Lyons, and conversely, James Stack received the coveted Ewok Award. The scoring was capped by handsome Tim Whelan, but what else is new?

The Killer B's rolled on undefeated which led Buck Reitmeyer, who was very appreciative of all the fans, to believe that, "We haven't lost a game yet!" And with nearly every guy scoring they're not going to lose in the future. Dave Walsh, who has the best hit of the day, scored, as well as Mr. Nice Guy Bill Sicord, Trip "on the lawn," and the honorable Charlie Regan. Stripe McMorrow scored twice, as he continues to lead the team in tries.

Play was hot and furious during the Rugby team's game last Saturday.

Tickets available

By MICHAEL IRONS

There are still over 1,500 tickets available for tomorrow's season football finale against Widener University. Students who purchase a $6 ticket will also be given a free ticket to the Beru Revue concert in the du Pont Pavilion on Dec. 13. The concert will begin at 8 p.m.

Student season ticket holders also will receive a free ticket to the concert. All that is required is that students go to the ticket office in the pavilion with a ticket stub from any of the games. Students who buy their tickets today or tomorrow have to bring back the stub to the ticket office sometime next week.

There are also many good tickets remaining for the men's basketball N.I.T. game versus Howard on Nov. 21 in the Pavilion. If Villanova wins the game there are three possible opponents for the Cats in the next round: ACC powerhouse Virginia, Big Five rival Temple or the Villanova of the Mid-West, Notre Dame.

Spikers win

By MIKE SMITH

The Wildcat volleyball team continued its impressive surge of victories by winning four matches over the past week. Up at Lehigh, the Cats looked formidable as they won a 15-6, 15-12, 9-15, 5-11 victory over the Engineers.

Hosting their own tournament during Homecoming weekend, Villanova picked up three more victories. In the first match last Friday, the Cats beat Boston College 15-9, 15-13, 15-10. On Saturday, they defeated Connecticut 7-15, 15-11, 15-9, 13-11, and then Rice 15-6, 15-7, 5-15, 15-15 to clinch the tournament championship. Wildcat senior Mia Grosso and freshman Jill Beiter, who have played major roles in the Cats' success so far, were named to the all-tournament team.

Villanova is 21-13 overall and has compiled a 7-3 record in the Big East.

Pre-season coaches' poll

(NEW YORK, NY) — The balance anticipated in the 1986-87 Big East basketball title chase clearly is reflected in the league's pre-season coaches' poll. In one of the closest votes ever, Georgetown edges Pittsburgh by a single point and so ranks as the coaches' pre-season choice to win The Big East Championship.

The Hoyas' 57 points include four first-place votes, but five other number one ballots are split between four teams, including runner-up Pitt. Georgetown is a young team with just one senior (All-American candidate Reggie Williams) on the roster. However, Big East coaches feel an impressive group of freshmen gives coach John Thompson a true contender.

Pittsburgh has quite the opposite situation, with an experienced club headed by Big East Pre-Season Player of the Year Charles Smith. The 6 foot-10 inch junior forward was a third-team All-Big East choice last season, averaging 15.9 points and 8.1 rebounds. He is expected to flourish under new head coach Paul Evans, who coached at the U.S. Naval Academy the last six years.

Last November, the league's pre-season choice was Syracuse, which tied St. John's for the 1985-86 Big East regular season championship. The Orange have been voted third this year with 50 points, followed by Villanova (44), 1986 Big East Tournament champion St. John's (42), Providence (30) and Seton Hall (21). Boston College and Connecticut, both under new head coaches in Jim O'Brien and Jim Calhoun, respectively, tied for eighth place with 12 points each.

V.U. to host carnival

SPORTS INFORMATION

This weekend, Villanova University will host the first Villanova/John duPont Swimming Relay Carnival, at the John Eleuthere duPont Swimming Center. Joining the Wildcats will be relay teams from Army, Drexel, LaSalle, Glassboro and Boston University.

Ten events are scheduled for this unique meet, which will be used as a conditioner for relay events. According to Villanova University men's swimming coach Ed Giesz, "The relay carnival will be a good conditioner, and it gets all of the teams off on a strong footing for the beginning of the season."

"This is something I've always wanted to do as a coach," continued Geisz. "Now that we have this magnificent facility, it's a reality."

The "magnificent facility" is Villanova's one-year old John Eleuthere duPont Swimming Center, which features eight racing lanes for competitive swimming, dimensions of 25 meters by 25 yards, and water depths ranging from four-and-one-half to 13 feet. The center is also equipped with a recirculating gutter system, and the latest in electronic scoring and timing.

The Relay Carnival is scheduled to begin at 7 p.m. today with semi-final races. Finals in all 10 events are scheduled to begin at noon on Saturday, Nov. 15. Admission is free of charge for both days.

SCHEDULE OF EVENTS

1. 400-yard medley relay
2. 200-yard freestyle relay
3. 400-yard breaststroke relay
4. 800-yard freestyle relay
5. 400-yard backstroke relay

Wetsuiters ends season

By JOHN RICCO

The Villanova water polo team wrapped up its best season ever with a fourth place finish at the Eastern Intercollegiate Championships last weekend. The Wildcat's final record of 17-8 was the first ever winning season for a Villanova water polo team.

The championships, held at the U.S. Naval Academy, consisted of eight teams representing the Mid-Atlantic, New England, Mid-East and Southern conferences. Finishing ahead of the Wildcats were Cornell, the tournament champions, Amherst and Queens.

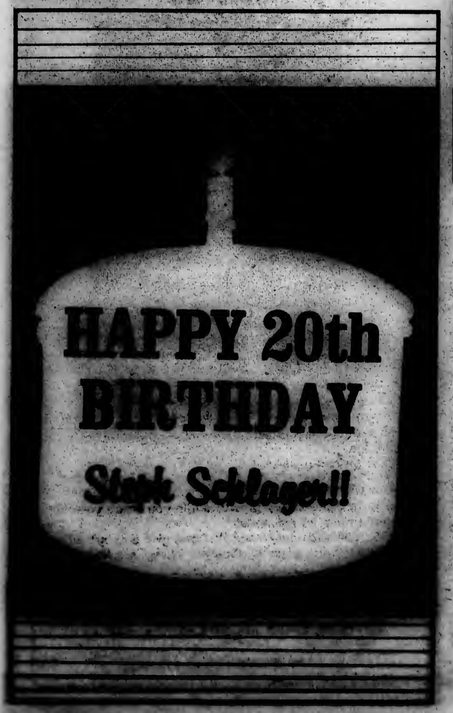
Head Coach Dan Sheridan did not expect much going into the championships. He knew he would be without two of his best players until Sunday, the final day of the tournament. Jim Reilly, the team's leading scorer, couldn't attend Saturday's games due to a previous engagement, and freshman Ted Morris, third on the team in goals, was not at full strength due to an illness.

"I was a bit discouraged going into the Easterns," Coach Sheridan said, "because I knew we wouldn't have the same team that got us into the tourniament."

Despite the absence of Morris and Reilly, Villanova was able to defeat Maryland 11-5 in the first round, with sophomore Farshad Charmforoosh scoring three of the Wildcat goals.

Villanova lost their next two games, however, 10-6 to Cornell and 11-10 in the third overtime to Queens to give them their fourth place finish.

In addition to Charmforoosh, freshmen Ed Rae and Matt Morris played well for the team.



Coach Sheridan believes that for Villanova water polo the best is yet to come. The squad graduates no seniors, and the bulk of the team is made up of sophomores and freshmen. "Last year was the first year we made some considerable progress towards improving the team. We brought in seven freshmen last year and another seven again this year," Coach Sheridan said. The quality as well as the quantity of the team's recruits has also improved over the last two years.

"We're now bringing in players who played on organized teams in high school," Coach Sheridan explained, "and not just on a summer team." The combination of the talent the squad already possesses and the improvement in the team's recruiting program should result in good things for Villanova water polo in the years to come.

Runners tip for NCAAs

By SUSAN GANEM

The women's and men's cross country teams will return to action tomorrow following a three-week hiatus when they travel to Lehigh University. The women's team will run in the ECAC and NCAA Region II competitions. The men's team will run in the ICAAAA and NCAA Region II contests. Coaches Marty Stern and Jack Pyrah are very optimistic about tomorrow's meets.

"We want to win," commented Stern. "We have a chance to win if we can get five of our people running as well as they can at the same time at this meet. We have three runners who could potentially win the meet. Vicki Huber, Gina Procaccio and Lauren Searby should all be considered top contenders."

The women's team is currently ranked 15th in the nation. But, according to Stern, "We are one of the top five teams in America. I think that we can do very well at the NCAA meet, if we qualify as a team at the regional meet tomorrow. Our main competition in regionals will come from defending champion Penn State, Boston College and Yale. At nationals, the teams that we will have to beat are Texas and last year's champion Wisconsin. I am really looking forward to the chance to finally prove how good we really are."

Pyrah's squad will also have to prove themselves tomorrow. "It is going to be a real tough meet," commented Pyrah. "The ICAAAA competition will be more difficult than the regional meet. Boston University, Dartmouth and Providence will all be tough to beat in the ICAAAAs. In the regional scoring, Penn State, Bucknell, Navy and Army are all going to be strong competition."

The men's three top harriers, Gerry O'Reilly, Roy Masolino and Sean O'Neill, are all having their best season ever. Ken Fowler and Jan Friedli have been consistent all season.

Wildcats drown Blue Devils, 28-0

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

As the torrential downpours and ensuing floods attacked Sheehan Beach and alumni and students alike wallowed in the mud, swilling beer as if prohibition had just been lifted, the Villanova Wildcats, wet and sober, marched to their seventh win of the season. On the wet turf at Goodreau Field the Wildcats took on the 0-7 Blue Devils of Central Connecticut.

Villanova started off the first half by winning the toss, but that was about it for the good fortune. The first 30 minutes was pure hell for the average spectator, as they sat through the rain and cold only to see less than 200 yards of total offense, six punts, three fumbles, three interceptions, seven penalties and no points.

The second half, however, had in store a lot of excitement for those weary aficionados in the cheap seats. Villanova received the second half kickoff and returned it 51 yards to the central Connecticut 41-yard line. The Wildcats then moved the ball for a first down before Kirk Schulz threw away his third pass of the day and a prime scoring opportunity.

This week the much maligned defense would have to rescue the offense, and they did. Not only did they force the Blue Devils to punt in four downs, but then strong safety Bobby Rosato blocked the punt allowing Villanova to start their next offensive series on the Blue Devil 27-yard line. On the Cats' first play from scrimmage, Coach Andy Talley unveiled a new play in the Villanova repertoire, the hook-and-ladder-play. First there was the throw to Brady for 12 yards, Brady then flipped a lateral to Sency for another 12, taking the ball down to the three-yard line. Three plays later, fullback Pete Lombardi blasted into the end zone for the first score of the game.

The Villanova defense again took the field and again took control of the Blue Devil offensive line. On first down, the Wildcats sacked Blue Devil quarterback John Cavanaugh for 13 yards. On the succeeding plays, the Wildcats forced two incomplete passes and a punt.

Following the punt and a clipping penalty the Wildcat offense found itself at midfield mounting another scoring drive against the now-troubled Blue Devils. It took the Wildcats 10 plays, but finally Ron Sency took the ball and forged up the middle for a touchdown. Villanova now had a strong 14-0 lead.

The Villanova defense was not yet finished. Not only did they stop the next Central Connecticut drive, but they started putting nails into the Blue Devil coffins with an interception. Not only did the defense intercept the errant John Cavanaugh pass, but sophomore Rich Spugnardi returned the interception 26 yards for a Villanova TD.

The Wildcats again had the ball to start out the fourth quarter. The Wildcats were in the middle of a successful drive when Kirk Schulz threw yet another interception. The Villanova offense, however, came in yet again and nullified the offensive error. Four plays after receiving the ball, the Blue Devils were forced to punt and again the defense got a hand on it. This time it was sophomore linebacker Doug DeLuca who put the ball back in the face of Central Connecticut punter Sean O'Rourke. The lame 14-yard punt put the Wildcat offense back in business at the Blue Devil 41-yard line.

It did not take long for the Wildcats to take advantage of the field position. Two plays after receiving the ball, Ron Sency took off around the left end and did not return until he had another six points on the scoreboard. The ball was batted back and forth until time ran out and the Wildcats had improved their record to 7-1 by beating the hapless Blue Devils 28-0.

From the Central Connecticut sidelines these words spewed forth, "Villanova's a good football team, but we seem to find ways to lose the game in the second half ... the fumble on fourth down from the one really hurt us. Maybe we should just go home at half time."

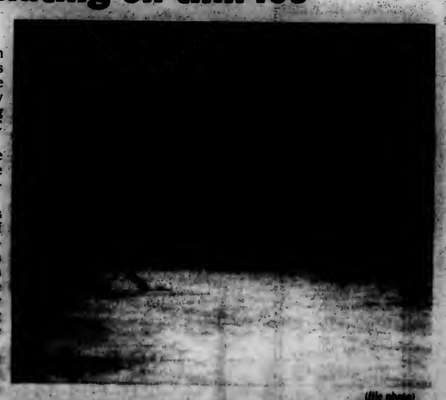
Villanova skating on thin ice

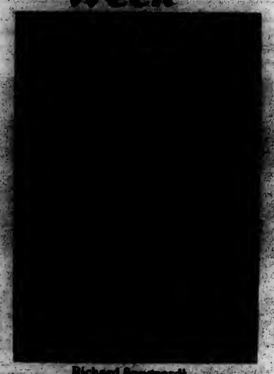


By NED THOMPSON

The Villanova ice hockey team continued to struggle last week as they dropped two of their three games. The team's record now stands at 2-5 overall for the young season and 1-1 in the ECAC South.

The Wildcats dropped a game on the road Tuesday against the Princeton University junior varsity, 7-0, to drop to 1-4.

On Saturday, however, the Cats collected their second victory of the season, blowing away Scranton, 11-2. Freshman Jim Rogers collected a hat trick while juniors John Delfini and Mike Cacciatore collected two goals each. Junior Dave Duffy was the winning goalie in his first start of the season.



On Sunday the Cats returned home but lost to Upsala in a hard fought game, 9-6. Cacciatore played valiantly, collecting three goals in a losing effort.

This week's Sno-Seal Athlete of the Week is Richard Spugnardi. Spugnardi, a 6-foot, 1-inch, 205 pound sophomore finance major from Emmaus, Pennsylvania was instrumental in Villanova's 28-0 victory over the Central Connecticut Blue Devils.

Spugnardi, a linebacker, had seven tackles and one interception in the Homecoming massacre. Spugnardi, not only intercepted the errant Blue Devil pass, but ran it back 26 yards for a Villanova touchdown.

With a total of 54 tackles, Spugnardi is the second leading tackler on the Wildcat squad.

Faculty research examined

By KRISTIN A. SWITALA

Across the nation there is a growing concern among students attending highly-accredited universities that faculty research and publishing is overemphasized and causes the quality of teaching to diminish, according to the Wall Street Journal.

At Villanova, the College of Commerce and Finance, which is accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB), requires professors to "be involved in currrent research and writing," Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, said this week. are a professionally accredited business school," Clay stated. "Our accreditation requires our faculty to actively research and seek publication. Also, our faculty must actively participate in their fields to obtain tenured positions and promotions."

According to Dr. James F. Klingler, of the department of management, the requirement "gives faculty the opportunity to remain current in the field and to teach 'state of the art' material. People who tend to be active in research tend to have a broader view in their field."

One economics professor disagreed. He said that, "The role of research is greatly overemphasized. It is an attempt to earn some brownie points by professors. These people should be paid to research, not to teach. The fundamental purpose of an academic institution is teaching."

In the College of Commerce and Finance, teaching, research and a commitment to Villanova are required of faculty, according to Clay.

"A university exists to promote knowledge," stated economics professor Dr. James Giordano, "both through research and teaching. Unfortunately, some schools require only so much research to maintain or achieve certain accreditations."

"Villanova's demand for research is a derived demand. This means that their demand for research is derived from their demand for accreditation. If accreditation didn't demand research, research wouldn't be as stressed here at Villanova," he said.

A finance professor pointed out that faculty have been terminated because they failed to participate in research.

A conflict between teaching and research does exist, according to faculty members. Time allocation, according to Klingler, is the key. Summers and vacations become critical research periods. "You can't be available to students at all times."

Some students are concerned that the out-of-class time they need for degree counseling or extra help is being replaced with research.

Panel favors reading days

By LYNN PERDEK

A motion to guarantee that one reading day be made mandatory for each semester was passed last Friday at a meeting ot the academic policy committee of the University Senate.

Paul Mullin, a member of the academic policy committee and the academic affairs department of Student Government, proposed that one mandatory reading day be scheduled into both the fall and spring semesters and, where possible, two reading days.

Controversy arose between administration, faculty and the students because of a previous motion, which was passed that makes 65 days of classes inviolate.

According to Kristin Switala, a member of the academic policy committee and the academic affairs department of Student Government, the debate was caused by the possibility of classes being cancelled because of a snow storm or any other reason. In this situation, the faculty and administration did not want to lose any of the 65 mandatory days, while the students did not want to lose the reading days.

One faculty member made the comment that generally classes are not cancelled during the fall because of snow.

Mullin countered that last year classes were cancelled because of a hurricane in the fall semester, and both reading days were maintained, but because of two snow days during the spring semester, both reading days were cancelled. A question was raised as to why one semester was granted reading days and the other was not.

Switala proposed that since the Christmas break is now four weeks long, the calendar could be revised to cut into that break and ensure that both the 65 mandatory days and the reading days are maintained.

Opposition to suggestion came from Dr. Charles L. Cherry, associate vice president for Academic Affairs, who claimed that

Activities' budgets issued

By SUSAN E. CORCORAN

Today all student activities of Villanova will receive their budgets for the 1986-87 fiscal year after eight months of deliberation, according to Lucyna J. Gorski, director of Student Activities.

In April, Gorski proposed a Student Activities budget that reflected the previous year's expenses. Her estimation was actually $90,000 short because many new activities organized this year, in addition to the expansion of many existing activities. For instance, Jake's Place needs at least $20,000 to exist this year.

Gorski also said it was difficult to request money for activities before their new administration came into office and decided what they would do during their term and what funds they would need.

Instead of cutting budget requests for all 120 student organizations, Gorski resubmitted a budget proposal to the University requesting more money.

"I couldn't cut all the activities to shreds," said Gorski.

The University approved a budget increase of $30,000, allowing each activity a slight increase. "The activities will gradually receive their requested amounts in a two-year period," said Gorski.

Gorski said each activity got at

Controversy in American Catholicism reviewed

By DANTE J. SCALA

At the annual meeting of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops last week, Bishop James W. Malone, the former president of the council, warned of "a growing and dangerous disaffection" between some American Roman Catholics and the Vatican and stated that he was seeking a meeting between American bishops, the Pope and members of the Curia before the Pope's visit to the United States in September.

The American bishops' conference was overshadowed by controversy concerning recent Vatican actions towards the American church, particularly the evaluation of the Archbishop of Seattle Raymond G. Hunthausen's pastoral in his Northwest archdiocese.

However, Dr. Rodger Van Allen, a Villanova University professor who recently revised and expanded a book on American Catholicism, said impressions that the American church is in trouble are misplaced.

He stressed that the American church is a "thriving expression of Catholicism" and that the vigor and faith of American Catholicism is striking. He also cited the great affection and respect for the pope in the United States, and that, "Catholics regard themselves as Roman Catholics."

However, Van Allen said, "A wise exercise of authority is clearly necessary at times in the church, but the constant finger-wagging of key Vatican officials may need to be relieved by the extension of a warm and understanding hand."

A wise exercise of authority is clearly necessary at times in the church, but a constant finger-wagging of key Vatican officials may need to be relieved by the extension of a warm and understanding hand.

Recently, Hunthausen was criticized by the Vatican for his actions in five "pastoral areas," including improper ministering to homosexuals, the misemployment of rules in regard to the invalidity of marriages not annulled by the Church, the condoning of contraceptive sterilization in Catholic hospitals and not following Church liturgy standards in such areas as general absolution and the reception of Communion by non-Catholics. Hunthauser's authority in these areas was revoked and given to Auxiliary Bishop Donald Wuerl.

This recent action, along with the Vatican's expulsion of the Rev. Charles E. Curran, theologian, from his teaching post at Catholic University for his dissenting views on sexual issues, has stirred up much controversy among American Roman Catholics.

American bishops did decide to support the Vatican in the Hunthausen decision after much debate in a closed meeting, but expressed sympathy for their "brother" Hunthausen.

Barbara Wall, O.P., a professor at Villanova in the philosophy department, stated that she was "disappointed" in that vote. "What I think won out was the judicial [legalistic] over the ministerial reality of our lives as Catholics," she stated.

Dissension within the Church in certain areas is not confined to

Mock trial of Hinckley explores insanity plea

By NOEL E. FALCO

A mock trial of John Hinckley, the man who attempted to assassinate President Reagan, was staged on Nov. 13 in Connelly Center Cinema.

The trial, which sprang from Dr. Bernard Gallagher's social psychiatry class, was co-sponsored by the Sociology Club and the Pre-Law Society. It included an analysis of the insanity defense, a brief lecture, and a re-enactment of an excerpt of the Hinckley trial centering on the expert witness.

Gallagher said the mock trial was put on in response to "the question of insanity and the law that has aroused the curiosity of the American public."

Gallagher enlisted the help of several professionals in staging the trial, including Arthur Donato, Esq., a criminal defense lawyer who played the role of Hinckley's lawyer; Patrick Connors, Esq., a Delaware County district attorney, who represented the commonwealth; the Honorable Maureen Fitzpatrick, who acted as judge; and Dr. Anthony Pisa, a psychiatrist who was called in for his knowledge to act as the expert witness.

Brett Datto, president of the Pre-Law Society, played John Hinckley.

Donato, in the lecture, said that the insanity defense plea was "rarely believed ... and not often successful" for "a defendant must admit that he has committed the charge he's accused of."

(Photo by Schmid)

The Sociology Club and the Pre-Law Society recently sponsored a mock trial of the John Hinckley case in the Connelly Center Cinema.

Donato also commented on the fact that after the Hinckley case, the federal legislature changed the insanity defense to place the burden of proof of insanity on the defendant.

Donato stated that the insanity plea is "a contradiction in terms," being pronounced "guilty but mentally ill" is analogous to "guilty but diabetic."

He said that many convicted on the insanity plea receive a sentence and then treatment, with more time spent in a mental institution than would be spent in jail with a regular sentence.

The excerpt of the case that was presented was a spontaneous version of the testimony of Hinckley's insanity and a cross-examination, which centered on the expert witness, because "the defendant has the absolute right not to testify [in a case like this]," according to Donato.

With Donato as defender and Connors as prosecutor, the opening statements were presented and questioning of Pisa, the expert witness, began while Datto, as Hinckley, looked on.

This testimony was meant to show how difficult it is to prove insanity. Pisa had to cite his status as a psychiatrist, the tests he used, the diagnosis he made, and then to withstand cross-examination by Connors.

The actual outcome of the real Hinckley trial was a judgment of not guilty by reason of insanity.

Student leaders document arrests

By ELIA DiTADDEO

Student Government is currently in the process of documenting student arrests in which the accused feels his or her rights were violated.

According to a notice in last week's issue of the Villanovan, any student who believes he or she was unjustly arrested may go to the Student Government office to complete a complaint form.

Joe Allman, Student Government president, said Student Government was motivated to take action on this issue after an article printed in the Philadelphia Inquirer stated that 39 Villanova students were arrested in one weekend in three separate incidents.

Student Government called the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) to find out what steps could be taken. The ACLU sent complaint forms to be filled out by accused students. In addition to this form, the student must also send a copy of the citation received at the time of the arrest.

Through word of mouth, Student Government first let students know about the documentation process, but only one student came to file a complaint.

Later, in another incident that occurred Halloween weekend, however, 11 students filed complaint forms. Altogether Student Government has received 15 complaints.

Student Government will send the cases with the most probable cause of rights violation to the ACLU.

The ACLU was not available to comment upon the next step in the procedure.

Phil Brach, Student Government secretary for external affairs, believes part of the problem stems from the fact that the township is enforcing housing codes and becoming stricter on the subject of parties.

Lower Merion Township Policeman Lt. Richard Cordivari said in the Inquirer, "The problem is that there are so many students living off-campus."

Allman said that the Rev. John M. Driscoll O.S.A., University president, and Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, met with the police chiefs of Lower Merion, Haverford and Radnor townships two weeks ago to discuss the situation. Allman said that Student Government was not informed of the meetings nor of the progress made.

Yearbook includes underclassmen

By DEBBIE GROSS

The 1986-87 edition of the Belle Air yearbook has recently added a new "people" section to its format, according to Kevin Rose.

The idea of including underclassmen was investigated thoroughly and guided by formats found in the yearbooks of such schools as the University of Virginia and the University of Western Kentucky, stated Rose.

The process of taking the underclassmen photographs occurred during the pre-registration period, Rose said. The "people" section will not be devoted entirely to underclassmen, however. Beginning with a senior introduction, the section will then proceed to the underclassman section and end with photographs of the faculty and administration.

For those students who missed the pre-registration photograph session, the Lindelle Photographers will be in the West Lounge on Nov. 24 from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and on Nov. 25 from 9:30 a.m. to 12 p.m. There is no charge for having photographs taken, but students wishing to purchase photo packages (ranging in price from $16.95 to $45.95) can do so at this time.

Along with the new "people" section, which spans approximately 78 pages, there will be an addition of a general index in the back of the yearbook, said Rose.

Rose expects that these improvements will increase yearbook sales.

Another change for the yearbook is the relocation of its office from St. Mary's Hall to John Barry Hall. This anticipated move, stated Rose, will make access to the yearbook office "more convenient and will aid in its customer service."

The office will be relocated because of the decision to consolidate the music program in the office previously occupied by the yearbook in the basement of St. Mary's Hall.

Students arrested on theft charges

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

Five Villanova students were arrested by local police in two separate incidents of theft during the second weekend of November.

In the early morning of Nov. 8, three sophomores were arrested for removing an American flag and Commonwealth of Pennsylvania flag from the flagpoles at Pasquale Partnership on Renaissance Blvd. in Swedeland, Pa.

The students were taken to Upper Merion Township police station at approximately 4 a.m., after police had stopped the students' car and discovered the stolen flags, according to Jack Kowal from the records division of the Upper Merion police department.

The students, residents of Sullivan Hall, were charged with theft, receiving stolen property and criminal conspiracy, according to the police report.

The students were released after posting 10 percent of $5,000 bail each.

Kowal stated that a preliminary court hearing was scheduled for Nov. 20.

The students were unavailable for comment.

In a second incident on the following day, two Villanova sophomores and a friend who was visiting the campus were arrested for taking four pizzas and a bag of potato chips from the Sunoco Stop-N-Shop, located on the northeast corner of Lancaster Avenue and Spring Mill Road in Villanova.

The Sunoco Stop-N-Shop was closed at the time of the theft, according to a spokesperson from the store. However, the door was reportedly unlocked.

According to Radnor Police, the three were apprehended by Villanova Security guards, who observed them running from the scene, at approximately 2 a.m. Sunday. Villanova Security then turned the accused in to the Radnor Township police department.

were charged with burglary, theft, criminal conspiracy, criminal trespass and receiving stolen property.

The three students were released on their own recognizance and an original court hearing was set for Nov. 19.

The scheduled hearing was not held on the original date, according to a spokesperson from the records department of the Radnor police department, and "the case was continued for 30 days," although a second court date has yet to be scheduled, the spokesperson said.

A Sunoco Stop-N-Shop representative stated, however, "We are not pressing charges."

Mailroom policies probed

(Photo by Harrell)

The policy of not changing mailroom combinations has recently come into question.

Homecoming weekend is the traditional weekend for all alumni to come back and see how things have changed. This homecoming, an alumnus found that one thing that does not change is the combinations for Kennedy Hall mailboxes.

A current Villanova student discovered this when she found a note in her mailbox which stated, "I had this box from 1980-84 and the combo still hasn't changed. Are you spooked?"

The note was signed only with the writer's initials and "'84," followed by a postscript stating the correct combination to the mailbox.

When the student requested to have her combination changed, she said she noted some reluctance to do so on the part of Charles MacFarland, Kennedy Hall post office director.

Villanova's policy is to keep the same mailbox combinations, according to MacFarland. He stressed that this is only the second such incident to occur in seven years and that in those seven years he has had no complaints of actual tampering with the mail.

"With 3,232 boxes we just don't have the manpower available [to change the combinations]," MacFarland said. He felt that changing the combinations for such a rare occurrence would be a great disservice to the students. To change combinations, entire sections of mailboxes would have to be closed, causing significant delays in mail delivery to those students, he said.

According to federal law, tampering with mail can be a felony, Postal Inspector Charles Sielski said. Obstruction of correspondence, which includes taking anything out of an authorized mail depository before the addressee receives it, can result in fines up to $2,000 and/or five years in prison.

Given these stiff penalties and the extreme rarity of mailbox break-ins, MacFarland felt that the changing of combinations would be unwarranted.

Student directory to be delayed

By LYNN PERDEK

The 1986-87 Student Directory will not be available before Thanksgiving break, as originally planned, because of delays in organization, Mike McGinnis, Student Government vice president, said that the directory should be completed before the end of this semester.

According to McGinnis, the delay was created because of organizational problems and the tremendous amount of work that is incorporated into coordinating a student directory.

He stated that this year the student directory is not the highest priority for the Student Government. "This year, Student Government is more concerned with facing issues, where last year's government was interested in putting something concrete into the student's hand," he said.

McGinnis also said that Student Government "is a governing body, not a phone service. Some other organization should be in charge of coordinating the directory."

Over the summer, Joan Dorley was appointed editor-in-chief of the directory, but resigned over the course of the semester, according to Joe Allman, Student Government president. All members of the Student Government are now combining their efforts to get the directory published.

This year's directory promises to be much longer and more professional looking, according to Allman. Its added features will include yellow pages, 20 introductory pages including calendars and maps, and a complete listing of faculty, staff and administrators. Each individual listing will include students' local and home addresses and phone numbers, year and major.

Club appoints new moderator

By KAREN M. MITCHELL

The Wildcat Investment Club recently appointed James Fee of the accounting department to the position of moderator. Fee succeeds John Tomkinson, who retired last year.

Martin Sedwick, vice president of the club, said that Fee " is the best for us because he has expressed interest in the club, but has left the investing to the club members. He is there if we need any help."

Sedwick said it is important to leave the investing up to the club because participation should be a learning experience for its members. "The general concept is teaching the students about the stock market while investing in it," said Sedwick.

The club has 53 members. Twenty-eight are new members and membership is open to anyone. The only requirement is a $30 down payment the first month of membership and a $20 payment each month thereafter. The payments are placed in a pool, which is later invested in companies such as IBM and Philip Petroleum.

A member remains in good standing until he owes the club over $200. If this amount is not paid, the member's stocks are liquidated.

Any member can request that his stock be withdrawn from the pool at anytime.

When a member decides to liquidate, a complex formula used by investment clubs throughout the United States is employed to determine an individual's shares, said Sedwick.

A fear that surrounds the club is the controversy that can develop from dealing with large sums of money and a large group of people simultaneously. One fear is the possibility that someone could embezzle the money. Sedwick said that this is not likely because the club policy requires that the checks be signed by at least two people.

One administrator believes the biggest fear would be tax-related problems. He said that one reason the Wildcat Investment Club is an unofficial club is because of the large amount of money being handled and the possiblity of tax problems. He said that Villanova does not want to be involved in case the club receives bad publicity.

Dr. Margaret Clark was the first club moderator. Five years ago, a student founded the club when his father, who owned Maaco, proposed the idea. The student decided to merge the other members' monies into a pool and used his father's broker.

The National Order of Omega

OMEGA MEN OF THE WEEK

Jim Gruccio

Order of Omega is proud to present Jim Gruccio as this week's Greek of the Week. Jim is a senior political science major coming to Villanova from the wonderful city of Vineland, N.J. Jim is a proud brother of Pi Kappa Phi and has been very active in the Greek community since pledging his freshman year.

Jim now serves on the Interfraternity Council Executive Board as secretary. He was elected to that position after being Pi Kappa Phi's IFC representative for three consecutive semesters. You may also recognize Jim by the fact that he was co-chairperson of Villanova for Africa Charity Ball held last November. In honor of all the work he had done for the Greeks, Jim was elected to Order of Omega last spring and this semester and was part of the new member selection committee.

Outside of fraternity involvement, Jim is very active in University and community activities. This fall you could have seen Jim Saturday afternoons on Sheehan Beach as part of the Tailgate Management Team. Being a Third Degree Knight in the Knights of Columbus, Jim worked as chairman of fundraising last year and is membership and community service chairperson this year. As a part of the Knights of Columbus, Jim is an active volunteer at St. Edmond's Home for Crippled Children. Last spring Jim was also part of Villanova's Senior Week Committee.

Better known by his friends as "The Don," Jim's future plans include law school and making lots of money — one way or another. Good luck Jim and congratulations on all your achievements at Villanova!!

U.S. Catholicism controversies

a few isolated people, but is widespread. In a recent article in the New York Times, some Roman Catholic officials said that many of the actions of Hunthausen criticized by the Vatican are "common across the United States."

This prevalent conflict with the Vatican's rulings is mainly caused by "conflicting interpretations of Vatican guidelines," they suggested.

The laity also has disagreements with the Vatican. In a New York Times CBS News poll of American Catholics held last November, 79 percent felt that it was "possible to disagree with the Pope on birth control, abortion or divorce and still be a good Catholic."

Also, 68 percent favored use of artificial birth control and 73 percent believed that Catholics should be allowed to divorce and remarry.

Sixty-three percent thought that priests should be allowed to marry and 52 percent said that women should be in the priesthood.

This widespread dissension began "symbolically" with Pope Paul VI's encyclical, "Humanae Vitae," which reaffirmed the Church's banning of artificial birth control, according to Russell Shaw, a member of the Office of Public Affairs of the U.S. Catholic Conference.

The encyclical was met with a "wave of hostility," Shaw stated. It was expected by dissenting bishops, but they placed a section on guidelines for theological dissent in the document.

This document, coupled with a papacy which became "less likely to insist on practical conformity to the Church's doctrine" and practical dissent became "taken for granted," Shaw said.

Another cause was the movement of Catholics into the mainstream of American society, Shaw said. This movement caused a conflict between American values and Roman Catholic values, he stated.

Malone commented in his speech to the bishops' conference, "What makes the question of dissent all the more complicated in our local church is the passion we have in this country to let all persons have the freedom to give their point of view. As citizens, we will die to protect this freedom of speech."

The democratic attitude of Americans conflicts with the hierarchical attitude of the Vatican, according to Wall.

Wall also said that the Vatican II council helped to cause Catholics to "reexamine the church." The council's coincidence with the 1960's culture, which "called forth a questioning of rights," such as civil rights and women's rights, also had an effect, she said.

Despite the dissent, surveys showed American Catholics hold much vigor and faith in their religion. The surveys showed that Americans Catholics' church attendance at Mass is among the highest in the world, percentage-wise. Also, the numbers of priests, deacons and involved lay people are very high compared with churches in other countries.

On the birth control controversy, he stated, "If otherwise faithful Catholics are using contraceptives for family planning, could it not be that the teaching itself needs to be examined? Maybe the problem isn't the dissent [on birth control], but the teaching itself."

Van Allen cited a speech given by Archbishop John R. Quinn in 1980 urging dialogue and effort to work towards resolution between the Vatican and Catholic theologians on the problem as a good proposal. This proposal was not picked up by the Vatican.

Van Allen also said it is the whole church bureaucracy, not just the Pope, that makes decisions. He cited that the Pope's advisers, such as Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, have much influence. He stated that most of the bureaucracy have little pastoral experience and thus do not deal with people much, as parish priests do. They are "a little out of touch, maybe," he said.

Malone termed the Vatican's initial reaction to a bishop-papacy meeting as "positive."

Wall felt such a meeting was important. "I think what we need to do is help the Pope understand the situation church and democracy in the United States."

Stack warns against hazing

By CAROLYN MIRABILE

Although there have not been any hazing problems on campus this year, the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, said that "most of the hazing problems occur at the end of pledge week." In order to avoid any problems this year, Stack told the fraternities at the Interfraternity Council (IFC) meeting on Nov. 18, that, "Since it is getting near the end of pledge week, you [the fraternities] should be more careful."

Jeff Allrich, president of the IFC, said, "Anytime there is hazing there is a problem, but incidents on our campus are minimal compared to other colleges."

Allrich also said, "Service projects should be a form of punishment instead of a loss of pledging." He reported at the meeting, "If anything major goes on, with respect to hazing, then that fraternity chapter would be taken out."

Joe Zaller, vice president of the IFC said, "The hazing policy is fair at Villanova and the University is only doing their job and protecting themselves from liability."

The hazing policies were established five years ago along with the Code of Student Conduct. Both were upgraded this year.

Faculty research

According to sophomore international business major Maria Ferri, "Professors should be able to pursue their own research projects, but they should never let it detract from teaching. I had a professor drop my class [after registration] because of his research project. I ended up taking the course in summer school."

However, sophomore Elissa Karl, an accounting major, stated that some teachers balance research and teaching well. "My business law professor was working on an article, but it never affected her class."

Another important reason why faculty members must publish is to maintain marketability, said Klingler. "Many of the people who are doing research are doing it for personal satisfaction anyway. They are the tenure-tracked people who would publish," he explained.

A serious problem arising in the College of Commerce and Finance is the increasing demand for research coupled with a heavy course load. Currently, all business professors must teach four courses, or 12 hours a week, per semester. For those teaching in the master's of business administration (MBA) program, only three courses, or nine hours a week, is required.

According to Giordano, "Research is more important in universities today. A 12-hour course load is too much at a school like Villanova where research is stressed."

Giordano pointed out that at Gettysburg, an institution where research is not stressed, teachers carry only two or three courses per semester.

"As far as I know, no university has more than 12 hours, and most have less. Villanova's 12-hour teaching load is too high because the student gets the short end of the deal. It is impossible for a teacher to be as enthusiastic when they're in their fourth class of the day, teaching the same material rehashed again. Later in the day it becomes a more and more inferior product."

"For the kind of quality institution that Villanova wants to be, a 12-hour teaching load is counterproductive."

It is impossible for a teacher to be as enthusiastic when they're in their fourth class of the day, teaching the same material rehashed again.

Dr. James Giordano, economic professor

The College of Commerce and Finance does have a policy concerning ongoing research products and course loads. A faculty member who needs additional time for such products can write a letter requesting a load reduction to nine hours per week (three courses per semester). However, the reduction lasts for one semester only. Faculty must reapply for each additional semester.

Financial Aid forms delayed

The delivery of 1987-88 financial aid forms for 2.5 million high school and college students are being delayed one month or more because of changes in federal student-aid regulations, the College Board said recently.

The forms are now being printed and shipments have started, said George H. Hanford, College Board president. However, he said that the application period would be shortened because of the delay.

The forms are required by most colleges and universities for students requesting financial aid.

They could not be printed until changes were made to show new congressionally required regulations in the federal Higher Education Act. President Ronald Reagan signed reauthorization of the act in mid-October, but the forms could not be printed until federal authorities reviewed and approved them, said Hanford.

Enrollment up in Phila. colleges

Many colleges in the Philadelphia area are reporting enrollments as high or higher than last year's. The current enrollment defied predictions that the number of students would drop this year.

The enrollment was helped by increasing recruiting activities and aggressive marketing.

Also, schools have been attracting older, "non-traditional" students with part-time, evening and special programs to make up for any decline in younger students.

Public universities continue to make significant gains in admissions throughout the nation, while private universities' admissions have remained stable or declined.

"Nationally, right now about 80 percent of the students are enrolled in public institutions and only about 20 percent are in private institutions," said Robert Kirkwood, executive director of the Commission for Higher Education of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools.

The significantly lower cost of public universities is one reason for their success in admission, according to the College Board.

The United States Education Department predicted in September that national college enrollment might decline 1 percent, because of a lower number of high school graduates.

Also, demographic trends indicate that the number of 18 to 21-year-olds in Pennsylvania and the Northeast will decrease over the next five years.

Villanova University reported that its enrollment increased slightly, from 11,959 to 11,963.

Activities budgets approved

leat the amount they received last year in the new budget unless their activity was extremely inactive. "Everyone who came in asking about budgets did not get a lesser amount than last year," commented Gorski.

All student activities this year existed until now without a budget. Gorski said that all activities were told to try to stick to last year's budgets. "No activities were told not to spend money," said Gorski. "We told them to plan on spending at least what was spent last year."

Some activities, such as Special Olympics, have already been completed without a budget. Gorski said it was no tremendous problem because such activities used the existing budgets from last year. "If they [these activities] should receive more money under the new budget they can use the extra funds to help better their group's position for next year," said Gorski.

Gorski is expecting the new budget to be approved by the Rev. John P. Stack, dean of students and Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, today. Each group should have their budgets in the afternoon.

Joe Allman, president of Student Government, said that the absence of a budget was not greatly felt. Allman also said that although Student Government will be getting more money than ever before it still will not be enough to meet the needs of the organization. Allman said, the past student governments never had a need for more money, but the current administration is planning to expand in its involvement and the need for more funds is imperative.

Cancun vacation sold-out

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER

The Villanova Union-sponsored Spring Break trip to Cancun, Mexico, sold out in the first few hours of ticket sales. Another plane with a waiting list of students had to be added to accommodate the large demand, said Carolyn Miller, a Spring Break trip coordinator.

Cancun has done better than expected, according to Miller. The Bahamas was supposed to be the "hot spot" this year as it has been in the past, but Cancun surpassed all expectations, she said.

The Union is also sponsoring a trip to Nassau in the Bahamas. Miller said that out of the 150 spaces available, 86 spaces have been filled. She expects the trip to be full by the Dec. 12 deadline of the first deposit.

The Bahamas trip costs $439 and the Cancun trip costs $487. Both trips include round-trip airfare, transportation to and from the airports, accommodations and passes for various attractions. Neither of the trips includes meals.

Each trip is coordinated by two chairpeople who plan and arrange the trips with travel agencies months in advance. This year the Bahamas trip is being coordinated by Miller and Sue Quinn and the Cancun trip is being coordinated by Pete D'Angre and Melinda Bedics.

When asked this week, many students said that they were going away for Spring Break. One student said, "I think the school-sponsored trips are a great opportunity to go away with my friends from school and have fun."

Reading day favored

returning early from Christmas break might not be economically feasible because of the high cost that would arise from heating the dorms and academic buildings during those extra days. Cherry abstained from the vote, stating, "I wholly support the concept of reading days if the calendar permits."

Prior to the meeting, Mullin and Switala completed four months of research July through October on the subject of reading days and semester lengths. They were assisted by Elizabeth Blaney and Joe Sixeas.

According the Switala, their research discovered that in a consortium of 12 highly competitive schools, including Notre Dame, Princeton and Boston College, the minimum amount of reading days allotted was two. Most schools fell within the range of two to four days. Switala said that Villanova was the only school in this group that did not guarantee any reading days until now.

As a result of this meeting, the committee passed a motion and determined that one reading day should be made mandatory for ech semester. In order for it to become official, the motion must be passed through the University Senate and signed by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president.

According to Switala, there should be no problem with passing the motion through the Senate or with Driscoll signing it. She explained that there is research to back it up as well as the support of counselors, in particular, Dr. Joan Greenhouse Whitney, the director of Counseling and Career Services. The school counselors feel that the reading days are necessary to bolster academics.

WHEN IS THE RIGHT TIME TO CALL YOUR GRANDPARENTS?

a) Five minutes into "The Lawrence Welk Show."

b) About a week before your birthday.

c) When you just want to tell them you miss them, and that you ate the last of Grandma's chocolate-chip cookies this morning.

There's nothing grandparents like better than a call from a grandchild in college. But if you do accidentally happen to interrupt Lawrence, you ought to have something worth telling them.

For example, you could mention that you called using AT&T Long Distance Service because you can depend on AT&T's high quality service and exceptional value.

And then you can tell them that AT&T gives you immediate credit if you dial a wrong number.

And that you can count on AT&T for clear long distance connections.

Finally, of course, you should quickly reassure them that you're eating enough, then let them hurry back to the TV to catch the rest of the Lennon Sisters' Blue Oyster Cult medley.

Promoting good relations is vital

Villanova students must realize that promoting good relations with residents in surrounding communities is vital. If Villanova is ever to achieve those things that are in the University's best interests, such as a loosening of restrictive housing codes, students need to become more conscious of their image in the community.

All too often, articles that ominously begin "Several Villanova students" appear in The Inquirer, The Suburban and other local newspapers. They report incidents of arrests for drinking and disorderly conduct, a theft from a local convenience store, and the theft of an American flag from an area business.

Even if these incidents do not appear that serious, the bad publicity arising from them lessens the status of Villanova students in our neighbors' eyes and creates attitudes that will take a long time to change.

Certainly, area residents do not help the situation with their outspoken unfriendliness to Villanova. They pass unfair housing codes; they try to close down places where students gather; they try to keep students out. Although it is easy to adopt a pugnacious attitude in response to these efforts, students must face the fact that Villanova is not an island. Senseless actions, thefts and vandalism will not make the residents any more inclined to give an inch.

Student leaders and the administration are making efforts to talk and ease the tension between Villanova and residents in surrounding communities. But these efforts are doomed to fail if students continue to make a bad name for Villanova.

It all comes down to respect. The respect of residents can lead to fair treatment and can give us bargaining power in future negotiations. Villanova students need to work on their image by cleaning up their act and practicing some good public relations.

Reading days must be irrevocable

The Academic Policy Committee's recent decision to propose having an irrevocable reading day each semester is certainly a prudent act. And the two Student Government members who lobbied for that mandatory reading day should be applauded for their efforts. It is now up to the University Senate to follow suit by approving the proposal and allowing students to count on at least one of their two scheduled reading days.

Most students are heavily weighed down with papers and last-minute tests at the end of each semester. Those students plan to use the two scheduled reading days as a time to recuperate from the end of the semester frenzy, as well as to get a solid start on studying for finals.

Furthermore, many teachers make final examinations worth 30 to 50 percent of the final grade. It is unfair to allow a student to do poorly on such an important exam because circumstances beyond his control removed the expected study time.

Surprisingly enough, the circumstance which most often necessitates reading day cancellation is snowfall. Snowfall should certainly not be a factor when a whole semester of hard work is at stake. In Pennsylvania where at least two or three snow days per academic year are inevitable, it is ridiculous on the part of Villanova University not to plan extra days for possible snowstorms.

In addition, most schools, including those in the Ivy League, schedule a full week of study time before final examinations. Is it too much to ask to have at least one of our two scheduled reading days be mandatory?

The Academic Policy Committee and Student Government have made the right choice by supporting the irrevocable reading day. And the University Senate should waste no time in approving the measure as well.

Letters to the Editor

Students urged to unite

To the Editor:

Students of Villanova unite.

Because of the loud outcry of a minority, a favorite hang-out spot for Villanova students is being threatened. Smokey Joe's is under attack by local Radnor residents who are upset at the behavior of a small group of obnoxious students.

Granted that these students were wrong in their actions, but it is not a reason to punish the owners of Smokey Joe's, as well as those students who regularly go to the bar and cause no problems.

The Radnor residents are over-reacting. How come it is only the people who live near Smokey Joe's who have experienced these problems while residents who live around other Villanova hang-outs have not experienced the same thing? The pompous residents of Radnor feel sorry for themselves and want to take their revenge out on Villanova.

If the people of Radnor succeed this time, what will prevent the residents of Bryn Mawr from closing John Barleycorn's, Rosemont from closing Kelly's or Ardmore from closing Montana's?

It is time for Villanova students to stand up for our rights and stop being pushed around by these Main-Liners who want to stick it to students. If we can stop the closing of Smokey Joe's, Villanova students will still be able to enjoy a form of social activity which is denied to them on campus.

This brings me to another issue about which local residents are attacking Villanova students. The harassment by the local townships of off-campus students. It is not a federal offense for six guys or girls, not related, to live together while they go to school.

The local townships have to come out of the Dark Ages and see the Enlightenment. Students have a right to live in peace while they are attending school instead of worrying about who they are living with and whether the next knock is the local police coming to check the birth certificates of the residents of the apartment.

Republican reacts to the new Senate

By G.J. DONNELLY

The Democrats have taken the Senate! The Reagan Era is over! That aged neo-fascist is finally finished! Oh-'tis a glorious day for the revolution!

Big deal.

The Democratic Party won the Senate in an off-year election which featured more cheap political attacks than intelligent discussions of the issues.

To put it simply, the Democrats won the Senate largely on local issues and the political appeal of their candidates. And, by the way, what were the first words out of likely Democratic leader Robert Byrd's mouth? "We'll cooperate with the President."

So what's the big deal?

In my opinion, the big deal is the loss of one of the most competent, independent and dedicated Senates in a long time.

Under the leadership of Republicans Howard Baker and especially Robert Dole, the GOP Senate made groundbreaking strides on such issues as taxes, defense, South Africa and the farm crisis.

Last week's editorial is a perfect example of Democratic bitterness toward Republican reforms. In the 25 years previous to 1980, the Democrats only made one significant contribution through the Senate, the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Watergate, with the exception of the late Sam Ervin, did not even show the party as being particularly effective in the upper chamber, since the majority Democrats were constantly being showed up in their interrogation by such Republicans as Lowell P. Weicker of Connecticut and the aforementioned Baker, then Senator from Tennessee.

What they did do during their tenure as the majority party was to drag the United States into Vietnam through the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution, raise taxes, drive up inflation close to 14 percent (thereby doing great good for all those starving out there that they supposedly want to feed) and reject their own nuclear arms treaty, SALT II.

Does that offer you hope? The Republicans did.

Far from leading the country to an imminent social apocalypse, the GOP Senate made constructive attempts to cure problems like the deficit through Gramm-Rudman.

The GOP also cut taxes and unemployment while encouraging economic growth. The Foreign Relations Committee under the cool-headed Richard Lugar of Indiana did a superb job in aiding the shift of U.S. support to Corazon Quino in the Philippines. It also made headway in passing a bill to approve sanctions for South Africa.

With the change in majority, Lugar will lose his chairmanship and be sorely missed. Others falling into that category are Pete Domenici of New Mexico, whose dedicated leadership of the Budget Committee resulted in the 1984 budget which cut a projected $40 billion off the deficit and Robert Packwood of Oregon, whose shepherding of the Tax Reform Bill through Finance should put his name in the history books of the future.

But to be fair, the Democratic Senate will do some good. Senator Sam Nunn of Georgia brings a seasoned military intellect to the Armed Services Committee. Likewise Senator Robert Byrd will bring a conciliatory tone to his post as majority leader. However, as usual with the Democrats, for every competent one there are a great deal more clunkers.

For instance, liberal-to-the-point-of-excess Senator Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts will have a grand old time bashing Reagan conservative appointees as head of the Judiciary Committee. Senator John Stennis of Mississippi, a right-wing hawk, will be a friendly aid to Reagan's military plans at Appropriations as opposed to his predecessor, liberal Mark Hatfield.

To make things worse, Texas Democrat Lloyd Bentsen, a lackey of big business and oil interests will replace Packwood at Finance, a situation which speaks for itself.

This election is not so much of a resurgence for the Democrats as it seems. The GOP did pick up eight governorships on the Democrats despite the fact that many of those states sent Democrats to Washington.

Nobody, I think, cared about this election. Voter turnout was low and the attitude of those who did vote was one of, "Boy is this election boring. Why not split our tickets?"

The indifference of the voter is something that the President can use to his advantage, for he is a popular and recognizable figure. In the battle for public opinion, Reagan will be able to shake the Democratic poll-watchers into doing his bidding.

So what does this say for the 100th Congress?

Not a whole lot. This Senate will not cure poverty in our time nor will it feed all our nation's hungry. It will not cure the farm crisis nor will it regenerate racial harmony and become a gang of Martin Luther King impersonators. The most likely scenario is that it will agree with Reagan on some of his agenda and disagree on others.

This Congress will do what all the other Congresses in the past have done. It will do the best job it can (with liberal overtones), become mixed up in some ideological disputes, and two years from now blame the opposition for whatever went wrong.

Saying 'No' to apartheid

By JOE McGOWAN

"If necessary we can take even stronger steps than we have taken so far," thus spoke President Pieter W. Botha of the Republic of South Africa. A few weeks ago, President Botha warned South African business leaders to keep their minds on money and not on apartheid reform. A few days ago, he told South African Catholic bishops to likewise stay away from the apartheid issue and to "get their house in order."

Botha has made it quite clear that the enactment of apartheid reform, if any, is expressly a matter to be decided upon by leading Nationalist party members. To say that Botha and his Nationalist party take a hard-line stance on the race issue is a great understatement.

The South African armed forces have periodically launched raids and air strikes against the "front nations," bordering on or near to the apartheid state: Mozambique, Swaziland, Botswana, Namibia, Zambia, Zimbabwe and Angola.

The most destabilizing force on the African continent is that of militant white power, amplified by high tech weaponry and strong ties to such military powers as Israel and the United States.

The "necklacing" horror enacted by angry black mobs against fellow blacks is a terrible expression of frustration and rage. The calculated torture and murder enacted by channels of the official government with calm precision and unflinching brutality is terrible as the ultimate denigration of humanity.

Both business and religion have failed to dismantle apartheid. And Reagan's policy of "constructive engagement" has not even addressed the issue of dismantling apartheid.

The American government could exert great influence on the matter of granting South African blacks human rights.

The inability to recognize apartheid as a moral issue and one which involves a moral decision clearly marks our government. There is now no moral basis for our government, and perhaps there never was one.

It is difficult to feel sympathy for the ruling whites of South Africa, but they, too, suffer. Victims of their own policies, they are turned upon by a vast majority and they have nowhere to run to — they are neither truly Dutch, nor British, but Afrikaner.

There is no register in which are enrolled the names of those who protested apartheid and of those who remained silent. One day South Africa, too, like so many previous tragedies, will be forgotten by most people. Though a small act which may so very soon be forgotten, to say "no" to apartheid is nonetheless so very important.

V.U. alumni offer career assistance.

By MICHELE GILLERAN

As the class of 1987 moves closer to graduation, they are faced with many important decisions about their futures. For those who choose to enter the job market immediately, the job search plays a major role.

For me, as a junior, the VALUE Program here at Villanova has proven to be an excellent way to get in touch with the working world far in advance of graduation. I could only urge more students to take advantage of this opportunity.

VALUE, Villanova Alumni Lending Undergraduates Experience, is a program designed to match Villanova students and their career interests with Villanova alumni who are working in that field.

Of the 150 alumni currently participating in the program, the student selects one that he/she wishes to visit for a full or half day in order to gain first-hand knowledge and assess career possibilities.

Since the alumni have volunteered to take part in the program, they are eager for your visit and willing to answer any questions concerning the details of the job responsibilities.

Through a visit, a student may either become more interested in a particular field or decide that a certain job is not at all how he/she imagined it. Either way, the visit plays an important part. Choosing to visit a job setting that was never considered may also provide insights into new possibilities.

Juniors, sophomores, and second-semester freshmen are all eligible participants. The process for becoming involved is very simple. It only requires that the student attend an orientation meeting and complete an application form. The time of the visit is arranged between the student and the alumnus.

It is to your advantage to familiarize yourself with experienced professionals in your field of interest. It can help you to make more realistic decisions about your career aspirations upon graduation.

More information and applications are available from Judy in the Career Development Office in the basement of Corr Hall.

Michele Gilleran is a junior economics major.

Priest defines purpose of sex

To the Editor:

There is so much confusion surrounding homosexuals that it becomes necessary to state the purpose of sex. Both in man and animals, the primary object of sex is to preserve the species.

This is quite evident. The pleasure that accompanies sex is the powerful drive that bring partners together for the purpose of keeping their species from becoming extinct.

The pleasure is only a means to an end. It is the preservation of the species that is the end and chief reason. God, the Creator has made it this way.

When pleasure becomes the only reason for sex, the species is betrayed by its own kind. It is unreasonable and illogical.

It is similar to the saying of putting the "cart before the horse." This is true not only for active homosexuals. It applies to all the varieties of sex abuse.

When pleasure becomes the only reason for sex, the species is betrayed by its own kind. It is unreasonable and illogical.

Truth, and only truth, will make us free. It is the obligation of all universities to teach the truth and only the truth.

The many deviations of circumventing the truth is not truth. It is the cause of so much confusion.

Student leader calls for support

To the Editor:

Student Government would like to thank the Villanovan for recognizing the efforts that we have put forth this year. In addition to the Fall Break issue, which was successfully passed through the University Senate last month, Student Government is working aggressively on other issues that affect every member of the Villanova Community.

In order to make Student Government an effective governing body at Villanova University, it is very important for strong student involvement regarding these issues. The amount of student involvement is directly related to the quality of Student Government's results.

Secondly, we would like to extend a sincere invitation to all students to become a part of the process of self-governance. The students are Student Government, and they should be informed of ways to exercise their power in this capacity.

There are many ways to become involved in the affairs of Villanova — from dropping an idea into a Student Government suggestion box, to expressing your opinion in a letter in the Villanovan.

The students are Student Government, and they should be informed of ways to exercise their power in this capacity.

Currently, Student Government is scheduling meetings with the residence halls and the various organizations on campus. If you or your organization are interested in meeting with us, please feel more than welcome to contact Student Government.

From these meetings, we are discovering student's opinions and gathering ideas to form a general consensus — a consensus reflecting the life of Villanova students.

There is so much confusion surrounding homosexuals that it becomes necessary to state the purpose of sex. Both in man and animals, the primary object of sex is to preserve the species.

When pleasure becomes the only reason for sex, the species is betrayed by its own kind. It is unreasonable and illogical.

This is quite evident. The pleasure that accompanies sex is the powerful drive that bring partners together for the purpose of keeping their species from becoming extinct.

The pleasure is only a means to an end. It is the preservation of the species that is the end and chief reason. God, the Creator has made it this way.

When pleasure becomes the only reason for sex, the species is betrayed by its own kind. It is unreasonable and illogical.

It is similar to the saying of putting the "cart before the horse." This is true not only for active homosexuals. It applies to all the varieties of sex abuse.

Truth, and only truth, will make us free. It is the obligation of all universities to teach the truth and only the truth.

The many deviations of circumventing the truth is not truth. It is the cause of so much confusion.

Student leader calls for support

To the Editor:

Student Government would like to thank the Villanovan for recognizing the efforts that we have put forth this year. In addition to the Fall Break issue, which was successfully passed through the University Senate last month, Student Government is working aggresively on other issues that affect every member of the Villanova Communitv.

The students are Student Government, and they should be informed of ways to exercise their power in this capacity.

In order to make Student Government an effective governing body at Villanova University, it is very important for strong student involvement regarding these issues. The amount of student involvement is directly related to the quality of Student Government's results.

Secondly, we would like to extend a sincere invitation to all students to become a part of the process of self-governance. The students are Student Government, and they should be informed of ways to exercise their power in this capacity.

There are many ways to become involved in the affairs of Villanova — from dropping an idea into a Student Government suggestion box, to expressing your opinion in a letter in the Villanovan.

Currently, Student Government is scheduling meetings with the residence halls and the various organizations on campus. If you or your organization are interested in meeting with us, please feel more than welcome to contact Student Government.

From these meetings, we are discovering student's opinions and gathering ideas to form a general consensus — a consensus reflecting the life of Villanova students.

V.U. students experience Haiti

By NATALIE McKENNA

Fall Break '86 was an unforgettable experience for four Villanova students. Over the break they did not get a job to make extra cash, nor did they catch up on school work. And, they most certainly did not relax.

These four students, Janet Lyons, Meg Lynch, Heidi Rojas and Jeff Kirchner, spent their Fall Break in Haiti, the poorest country in the Western Hemisphere.

The students, guided by Beth Hassel, P.B.V.M., of the Campus Ministry staff, joined Joanne Pompinio, a graduate of Villanova, to learn more about the situation in Haiti.

Hassel originally planned on taking ten students to Haiti. However, the instability of the government, financial problems and the fear of disease prevented some students from making the trip.

Malaria, yellow fever and hepatitis are some of the diseases that caused parental fear.

V.U. students Janet Lyons (left) and Meg Lynch play with children at a Haitian mission.

The cost to each student was $500, the bulk of which paid for air fare. Students found various ways to pay for the trip. One student took on a second job. Some received parental help, and others obtained sponsors.

"You can't put a price on a trip like that ... it was an experience of a lifetime," one student stated.

The group spent Oct. 17 to Oct. 24 at St. Joseph's Orphanage for Boys in Port-au-Prince, Haiti. The orphanage, run by Michael Gelienfeld, houses 21 boys aged 5 to 17.

"The kids have so little but are so thankful for the little that they do have. They are richest in other ways," commented Lyons.

"Living at the orphanage was one of the greatest experiences of the whole trip. You would think the kids would be hostile and bitter because they are so deprived ... but the boys are so open and affectionate," Lyons said.

Each day the volunteers visited a different mission site. One day the group painted a mission house, another day they gave back rubs to the dying at Mother Theresa's Home for the Dying.

Lyons stated, "We did so much in one week; it just blows my mind."

"The people are so poor, there are no words to describe it ... it's dirty and disease-ridden. You don't know where to begin," stated Hassel.

The average middle class person in Haiti has one meal a day, consisting of rice and vegetables. The lower class unfortunately must pick through the garbage to find a meal.

"It's a slow pace of life ... their energy level is low because of malnutrition," Hassel said.

The people live in 12x12 houses of cardboard and scrap wood. The houses have dirt floors and tin roofs, with no plumbing facilities. Usually 12 to 15 people live in these small homes.

"When I first came back home it was difficult to put it into perspective ... the two worlds are just so different, there's just no comparison," said Lyons. "It won't be my last trip," she continued.

One student added, "The whole experience is so hard to talk about and to put into words."

"The trip to Haiti is a very deep, personal challenge for any student — it's not for everyone," Hassel stated.

Teaching auto etiquette

By FRANK ORZECHOWICZ

Decisions, decisions, decisions. At some point in time, everyone faces some sort of decision concerning what to do in life. Many of us pack up and go to college to become doctors, lawyers, journalists, professors and so on.

Some go to vocational schools to learn a certain trade or skill. Some enter the military, while some go out and hit the road in search of a job.

Now there is yet another choice. Yes, boys and girls, you too can now enter the exciting world of the professional chauffeur. "How?" you ask, totally enthralled by the idea. The new Executive Chauffeuring School, located in Camden, N.J., offers you this possibility.

The Executive Chauffeuring School has been operating on the West Coast since April 1983. It made its East Coast debut on Sept. 15, 1986, when it began lessons for its first East Coast class. The president of the Los Angeles-based school is Sherrie Van Vliet, "The First Lady of Chauffeuring." Van Vliet was one of the first female chauffeurs, and has been chauffeuring for over 10 years.

This all sounds like a big joke, but the chauffeuring business is serious. There are currently 33,000 limousines in livery service and 7,000 in use by private corporations and individuals. That is about 40,000 limousines in use, which means there must be 40,000 well-trained chauffeurs to drive them. Would you want an untrained person driving your limo?

"The Philadelphia area is one of the top five limousine markets in the United States," commented Rahn Farris, president of Executive Coach Builders, one of the largest limousine manufacturers in the country.

"Every night, people see limousines in use on shows like "Dallas" and "Dynasty" and realize that limousines are a luxury that is available to them," Farris said.

The Executive Chauffeuring School that Van Vliet operates is one of the oldest in the country, with nearly 2,000 graduates. The school offers two courses, the "Basic Course" and the "Expanded Course."

The "Basic Course" is a 20-hour course, involving both lectures and behind-the-wheel lessons. The lectures cover such topics including dress, grooming, etiquette, payment collection, basic limousine maintenance and the like. The tuition fee for the "Basic Course" is $290.

The "Expanded Course" offers all the information covered in the "Basic Course" plus some extras. Cardio-pulmonary Resuscitation, first aid, cellular phone repair and the proper procedure for changing a limousine tire are just some of the extra tid-bits offered in this course. The price for the "Expanded Course" is $495.

Sherrie Van Vliet (right), The First Lady of Chauffeuring, will bring her Executive Chauffeuring School to Philadelphia in September.

"When students complete these courses, they know all that can be taught about chauffeuring," reflected Van Vliet. "All that's required to begin is a good personal appearance and a good driving record."

The final exam is composed of a written exam and a driving test.

Sartre's politics addressed

By KRISTIN A. SWITALA

On Tuesday night in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center, "Satre's Political Philosophy," presented by Dr. William McBride, concluded the Fall 1986 Philosophy Department's Public Lecture Series.

McBride, a professor of philosophy at Purdue University, has published numerous articles on Marx, Sartre and the philosophy of law and justice issues. He is the co-director of the Sartre Society and is writing his fifth book, covering Sartre's social and political philosophy for the Indiana University Press.

The lecture, attended by a select group of faculty, undergraduates and graduate students, covered three major topics: the importance of Sartre's social and political theory in 20th century thought, an overview of the origins of this theory, and its evolution in Sartre's mind.

According to McBride, the central import of Sartre's thought lies in its influence upon Marxism, liberal politics, behavioral science and feminism.

The French philosopher had an indirect influence on feminism by making sex/gender considerations more prominent in philosophical thought. However, "His whole effort was to reconcile individual freedom with various important central aspects of Marxism," stated McBride. "In this effort Satre was successful."

The Second World War marked the turning point in Sartre's social and political thought. Prior to the war, the philosopher did not incorporate politics into his theories, as revealed in Nausea, stated McBride. However, when the Germans occupied France, Sartre was sent to a Prisoner of War camp, where he wrote Being and Nothingness, "a great work of phenomenological ontology," said McBride.

In this work Sartre discusses "being for others" or the relation of the person to the outside world. He denies the possibility of the "we" subject of one massed, collective being acting as a singular body. He drew these theories from experiencing different classes of people in the POW camp. This also marked his "conversion" to socialism.

After the War, Sartre organized an anti-Fascist group. He maintained a commitment to socialism, but within "an atmosphere of utmost respect for individualism," according to McBride.

The evolution of Sartre's theory is revealed in his post-War works. In the 1946 Materialism and Revolution, he proposes that revolution in our society is important, but that advocates of materialism are not "going about it in the right way."

Ethics also must be revolutionary. In his notebooks on ethics, Sartre tries to explain oppression and alienation. He also emphasizes generosity and creation as ways to change the earth, stated McBride.

In Search for a Method, Sartre asserts his program on social and political philosophy. McBride points out that the philosopher

College Pro seeks painters

By FRANK DUNNE

"Don't get a job this summer ... Get a business." This bold challenge is the slogan of College Pro Painters, a franchise organization that puts students into business for themselves.

College Pro was founded in 1971 by Greig Clark at the University of West Ontario in Canada. Clark went into the painting business to help pay for college. The company has since grown into the largest residential painting company in North America.

The College Pro method consists of training qualified applicants to be the manager of their own franchise outlet.

The training is divided into three weekend sessions, each covering a different aspect of managing a painting franchise. The first session teaches the manager about paint. When this session is complete, the manager is considered a paint expert.

The second session covers the business end. Here the manager learns about marketing, finance and accounting, as well as how to manage personnel. In the third and final session, the manager is actually taught how to paint according to College Pro standards.

When the training is complete, the manager sets out on his own business venture. He is free to make his own decisions concerning sales, marketing, financing and hiring. He does his own accounting and purchasing and provides his customers with estimates.

The reward for all this work? Profits. All profits belong to the manager of the franchise.

Of course, the manager is not totally free from College Pro. The franchise must report all figures to the company and must pay a royalty fee. Otherwise, the company acts as an advisor, not an employer.

College Pro does its recruiting on college campuses. The company has been recruiting at Villanova for about four years and approximately seven managers have come out of Villanova. All have been successful.

Dave Heintz, a senior at Villanova, has been managing for College Pro for two years and now serves as a regional manager. He is currently responsible for recruiting new managers.

This goes to show that College Pro offers opportunities for advancement as well as profit which, by the way, average between $7,000 and $11,000 per season (although some outlets have netted upwards of $30,000 in a season).

The money and opportunities are the most visible benefits of the College Pro program, but the experience itself is what is really invaluable, according to Heintz.

"Success is mostly based on ability and desire to succeed. The company will fill in the skills," Heintz said.

Thanksgiving

By MARK V. DISTASIO

Happy Thanksgiving Villanova! When the Pilgrims arrived in America in 1620, they immediately committed an act that would today be viewed as un-American.

Desiring to create a just and equal society, they established a communist economy. The early colonists remained committed to communism for several years until they found it economically inefficient. They finally switched to capitalism.

with Van Vliet acting as the client. The student must pick Van Vliet up at a designated location, explain the uses of the various conveniences available in the limousine, and drive Van Vliet to a specific locale. All the while, (now check this out), a filled drinking glass sits in the rear salon. If the drinking class spills, the student has failed the driving test.

"It sounds ridiculous," said Van Vliet, "but belive me, a chauffeur who spills the liquid because he's turned a corner too fast is likely to find his client wearing champagne all over his clothing, ... and that doesn't go over very well."

After completing both exams successfully, students receive a signed certificate of graduation and job placement assistance.

"The goal of the school is not to rush the students through the course, but to elevate their professionalism and to make them employable. We want them to make it," Van Vliet said.

BERMUDA COLLEGE WEEKS

When you break away this year, do it with style.

Your College Week in Bermuda is more than just sun, sand and surf.

Right from the first outrageous "College Bash" at Elbow Beach, it's an unrelenting test of your endurance.

Spectacular seaside buffet luncheons. A calypso and limbo festival like none other. Smashing dance-til-you-drop beach parties, featuring Bermuda's top rock, steel and calypso bands. Even a "Party Cruise and Private Island Extravaganza." All compliments of the Bermuda Department of Tourism.

Bermuda is all of this—and much, much more.

It's touring the island on our breezy mopeds. (Do remember to keep left!)

It's jogging on quiet country roads—including an early morning 2-k "Fun Run" from Horseshoe Bay. It's exploring the treasures in our international shops, playing golf on eight great courses, and tennis on over 100 island-wide courts.

But most of all, it's the feeling you get on a tiny, flower-bedecked island, separated from everywhere and everything by 600 miles of sea.

This year, go wild... in style. See your Campus Travel Representative or Travel Agent for details.

New technological advances aid diabetics

By SUSAN TOLVE

November is National Diabetes Month — a month to focus on the third most frequent cause of death in the United States. Approximately 6 million people in our country have diabetes, and another 13,000, all under the age of 20, will be diagnosed this year.

Diabetes is a disease in which the amount of sugar in the blood does not stay at a normal level. This occurs when the pancreas fails to manufacture enough of the hormone insulin. Blindness, kidney disease, nerve disease, loss of toes, feet or legs, and even death, are all complications resulting from consistently higher than normal blood sugar levels.

Ninety percent of diabetics can control their disease by diet, oral medication or insulin injections. The other 10 percent of individuals with diabetes are insulin-dependent. In addition to following a rigid meal schedule, these people must have between one and five injections of insulin daily.

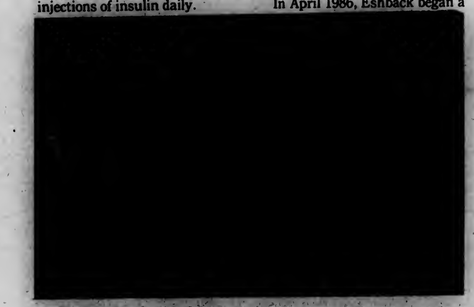
As Debbie Eshback knows, this treatment can be very restricting to a diabetic. In February 1985, Eshback was diagnosed with diabetes while a student at the University of California, Santa Barbara.

She initially treated her diabetes by taking one insulin injection a day. This later was increased to two daily shots to control her blood sugar level.

"The diabetes really affected my eating habits," she said. "It affected when and what I could eat."

Eshback also disliked carrying around insulin and hypodermic needles. "I didn't want to lose it, or have the insulin get hot or have the bottle break. I would leave and people would ask me why I had to go home. It was because I had to take an insulin shot," she said.

Unable to adhere to her rigid treatment schedule and an active college life, Eshback searched for new ways to deal with her diabetes.



In April 1986, Eshback began a new treatment — the external insulin pump. This electronic device is about the size of a credit card. A syringe filled with insulin is stored inside the pump. A small, plastic tube about three feet long connects the syringe with a special needle.

A diabetic using the pump inserts the needle under the skin in the abdominal area. Then the pump can be held on the wearer's belt or in his/her pocket. This method of treatment provides a diabetic with small doses of insulin throughout the day and with a larger dose at mealtimes. Medical research indicates that the small, frequent doses of a pump are similar to the natural insulin production of healthy individuals.

"I would recommend the pump to people my age who are active and don't want to deal with the hassle of injections and the rigid schedule that goes along with it," Eshback said. Her active schedule includes jogging, snorkeling, skiing, camping and river-rafting.

Without the insulin pump, this young woman could not engage in rigorous sports activities.

The insulin pump is the size of a credit card and weighs only 3.8 ounces.

Sartre philosophy lecture

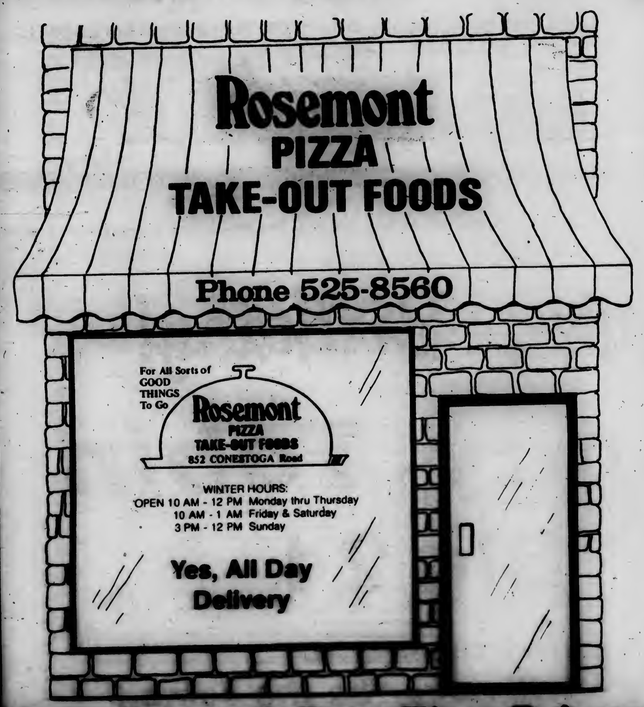
pass the current trends: Marxism, American sociology and Freudian psychoanalysis in western thought. "Humans must get out of seriality," stated McBride. "Institutions become rigid and solidified through repetition of ideas and theories."

According to McBride, "A fantastic attempt to try to argue that the only way to understand an individual and his society is to do a complete research of the subject, as Sartre does in the Family Idiot." This final work of the French philosopher covers the life of Gustave Flaubert and approaches social theory by emphasizing individual freedom. He also discusses the "singular universal" in this book. This is the attempt to understand the individual as singular, while remembering his universal condition.



At the end of Sartre's life he declared, "The world seems ugly, evil ... We must try to explain why the world is so horrible ... but we must hope."

McBride considers Sartre's work to be "an exceedingly lucid, personal description of the current state of world affairs and how to change them."

Dr. Barbara Wall, director of the lecture series, stated that social and political philosophy was chosen for the topic of this Fall's series because the "direction of social and political philosophy and the issues that it covers are issues relevant not only to students and faculty, but also to the community as a whole. We try to get topics that would be interesting to a larger audience."

According to Wall, the theme for next semester's series is "Ethical issues in health care."

Tracing the origins of the Villanova Alma Mater

By NATALIE McKENNA

For more than 50 years, Villanovans have been singing their Alma Mater, a song that has a history many Villanovans may find surprising.

In 1928, James F. Burke, a V.U. biology major, wrote a letter to his father, Joe, a composer. Joe Burke, with his friend Al Dubin, a lyricist, was writing songs for Warner Brothers in Hollywood, for the film musical "Gold Diggers of Broadway."

Weeks later, James Burke received a letter from his father, complete with words and music, for what would become Villanova's Alma Mater.

"I was the black sheep of the family. I don't play any instruments," Joe Burke told the Villanova Magazine, "I had to find someone to play it."

He took the anthem to the dean of the School of Sciences, then the Rev. Joseph D. Dougherty, O.S.A. Dougherty suggested that the song be reviewed by the Rev. James H. Griffin, O.S.A., the president of the college (from 1926 to 1932).

The song was then handed to the moderator of the Villanova band. The Alma Mater was recorded in a studio on campus, and the legacy was born.

James Burke, M.D., is proud to tell of his father's musical accomplishments. In one weekend Joe Burke and Al Dubin created four songs for a broadway musical, one being the famous "Tiptoe Through the Tulips." This song was the No. 1 hit on the pop charts for 11 weeks at the end of 1929 into 1930.

Burke was considered to be one of the leading composers of popular music. After returning from Hollywood to New York, Burke collaborated with other composers to write such famous melodies as "Moon Over Miami," "Carolina Moon" and "It Looks Like Rain in Cherry Blossom Lane," a song which took less than one-half hour to write and reached the top of the charts.

Dubin stayed in Hollywood to co-write such infamous songs as "Forty-Second Street," "We're in the Money" and "The Lullaby of Broadway." The latter won Dubin an Oscar from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in 1935.

However, in the hearts of Villanovans throughout the years, the Alma Mater was Burke and Dubin's most treasured melody.

Museum schedule highlighted

By JOE McGOWAN

Located at the juncture of 26th Street and Benjamin Franklin Parkway, the Philadelphia Museum of Art has long been a recipient of the most prestigious exhibitions on tour. This summer record crowds viewed the special exhibition "Diego Rivera: A Retrospective," a collection of over 350 works from the Mexican-born artist.

From August to October the Museum hosted the photographic exhibition "Black Sun: The Eyes of Four," which displayed the works of four post-World War II Japanese photographers: Eikoh Hosoe, Shomei Tomatsu, Masahisa Fukase and Daido Moriyama. The work of the first of these, Eikoh Hosoe, may be more well known for the photography collected in Hiroshima: A Place To Remember. In Hiroshima Hosoe captured the lives of the Japanese after Hiroshima.

Two special exhibits now at the Museum are a collection of African sculpture from the University of Pennsylvania Museum, and one of prints from the late 16th-century Dutch engraver Hendrik Goltzius.

The former collection consists of 88 pieces of West African tribal art from Penn's University Museum, which is also an outstanding museum. The University Museum, situated on the Penn campus near the Palestra, houses collections of ancient art from eastern and western cultures. The collection from dynastic Egypt, is particularly excellent.

The latter exhibition focuses on the engravings of a leader in the school of Dutch Mannerism, and complements the Museum's permanent collection of numerous works from 16th and 17th century Dutch masters. Also in the permanent collection of the Art Museum is a highly interesting exhibit of Medieval armor and weaponry.

Although not so extensive a collection as that housed in New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Philadelphia collection nonetheless surveys an aspect of Medieval life that serves to stand as an ironic counterpoint to the age's religious art.

The Art Museum has been a more frequent host to photographic exhibitions in recent years and another is slated to arrive in April. March will bring "The Quest For Eternity," an exhibition chronicling the evolution of Chinese ceramic sculpture. Even without such special exhibitions, the permanent collection at Philadelphia's Museum of Art merits a visit.

Vincent Van Gogh's Sunflowers is but one of the works housed in the permanent collection of the Philadelphia Museum of Art.

General Public plays Pavilion

By MICHELE O'NEILL

Although there were only 2,000 people, the John E. duPont Pavilion rocked as people cheered, making it seem as if the place was sold-out. The spirit the audience gave off made up for the lack of people.

It was obvious to me that General Public felt the energy of the crowd because it was relayed through their energetic ability to keep the crowd going through their music. It was as if everyone in the crowd was connected somehow to the band because the music never ended or lacked any sort of integrity.

The opening band, Buddy System, played for approximately 45 minutes to an enthusiastic mixture of people. The crowd ranged in age from teens to early 30s. By 8:10, people were pouring into the Pavilion and half of the first level sections were full by 8:30. At 9:20, General Public began and so did the dancing, screaming and cheering of the crowd. There were people on chairs as well as in the aisles dancing up a storm. General Public really knows how to get people going.

The opening song, "General Public," caused an eruption from the crowd that can best be compared to that which occured when Villanova won the 1985 NCAA Basketball Championship.

For the next hour and one-half it was pure pandamonium among the band, as well as the audience. People were doing such things as back handsprings or cartwheels, and there were even people doing something that resembled the Rock Lobster.

"You're So Generous," the last song before the two encores, seemed to be one of the favorites among everyone. Every person was dancing, clapping and screaming for the three or four minutes this song lasted.

Then the concert was over, but that did not stop the enthusiasm of the crowd. If anything, it increased their vitality. General Public exited the stage and for close to two minutes the stands shook from the stomping feet of the crowd. The cheering got louder and the clapping faster.

Then Saxa came out and played the saxophone for the beginning of a two song encore. The rest of the band paraded out to the beat of clapping hands. Will the spunk and energy of this crowd or band ever die?

I do not think so because no sooner was the band off the stage after the first encore as they were back on the stage for the second encore. The crowd did not let up. They wanted a second encore and they got it.

It was obvious to me that General Public loved this crowd as much as they loved General Public. To answer my above question, all I have to say is that spunk and energy of this crowd and band never died.

David Wakeling, General Public's lead singer and guitarist took the duPont Pavilion by storm.

Exclusive interview with 'Public'

By MICHELE O'NEILL

The General Public concert was over and all that was left in the Pavilion were about 50 groupies awaiting the appearance of the band members. David Wakeling, lead vocalist, guitarist and former member of the English Beat, was the first member to come out and entertain the crowd with autographs and pictures.

While the crowd surrounded him, I was lucky enough to find Micky Billingham, keyboards and vocals, and Horace Panter, bass player. Although they were exhausted after traveling down to Villanova from their Saturday night show at Madison Square Garden, they were willing and more than cooperative to answer a few questions for the Villanovan.

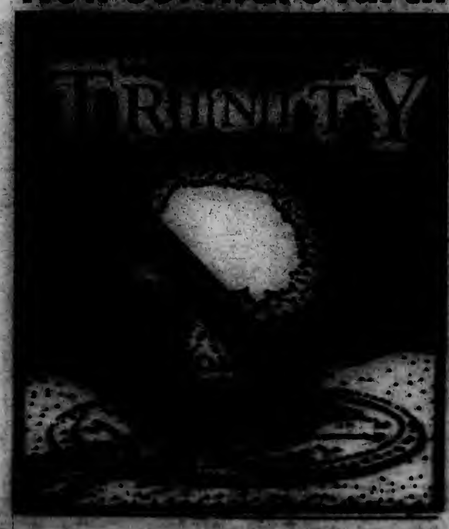
As most fans know, General Public is a fairly new group that consists of Wakeling, Ranking Roger, vocals, keyboards, drums, bass and triangle; Billingham, Stoker, drums; Panter, Devin White, guitar, and Saxas, saxaphone.

What many people do not know is that one of the major reasons for General Public's success is that the group's formation was based upon past reputations of each member of the band.

Billingham said, "We wanted to make sure we knew each other and we did that through our reputations we had before General Public." For Panter, General Public's first album, "All the Rage," which was released in 1984, meant that he would not have to get a job for another two or three years.

Two members of General Public were also in the English Beat, which broke up due to political reasons. "The name General Public is political, in general, because politics strikes up everywhere, even in your private life. The songs are political in some way, but choosing the right words means a lot more," said Billingham. Billingham believes that they will begin recording a third album some time in April to be released within the next two years. The musical influences of this band range from The Cure, to Chopin, to Squeeze and Genesis.

One ultimate desire for Billingham is to have the opportunity in the future, to play "Rhapsody in Blue" on the piano with the Utah Symphony Orchestra. Panter is hoping to produce an album with David Bowie some time soon.



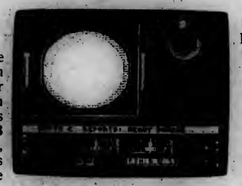
One thing Panter made clear was that there are absolutely no plans for future work between General Public and The Fine Young Cannibals, a group formed by the other English Beat members, but he did not elaborate and say why.

I was surprised to find out that General Public does not play to the English audiences. Why? "They don't come to see us. We're not famous in England," said Panter. He said he enjoys playing in Salt Lake City or Phoenix because of the climate. Billingham said he prefers New York City and Philadelphia.

Presently, the band is playing the East Coast. After Villanova, they were on their way to Boston and then to Detroit. The tour will end in Minneapolis. They will also be playing in eastern Canada. The tour ends Nov. 25, and they will return to Birmingham, England for Christmas. This break will not last long because after Christmas it is back to the states where they will be playing the Mid-West and the West.

The band does not have time for anything but recording and traveling, although in their spare time they enjoy doing normal everyday things like walking the dog and digging in the garden.

New software furthers advanced graphics use



By RUSS CECCOLA

This week we will look at a wide variety of the latest games from the software world. As a reminder on the codes associated with different computers, C64 stands for the Commodore 64, C128 stands for the Commodore 128, AT stands for Atari, AP stands for Apple, MAC stands for the Apple MacIntosh and IBM stands for the IBM and compatibles.

BALLYHOO •••• INFOCOM C64/128, AP, AT, MAC, IBM

That master of the text adventure, Infocom, strikes again with another great mystery to test your abilities of perception and knowledge of facts. In Ballyhoo, you are an innocent attendant at the local circus passing through the town. You like the glamor of the circus and decide to investigate behind the scenes and explore the corners of the circus lot when you hear a conversation about the owner's daughter.

What you hear is the owner talking to a private detective about finding his daughter who has been kidnapped. The problem is that the detective is a bumbling idiot who could not find the nose on his face, let alone a missing girl. You decide to intervene and explore the circus yourself. Suspicions are that the girl is hidden somewhere inside the circus, but you must find her soon, for you are at danger as well. It is rumored that the kidnapper is a member of the circus.

Ballyhoo is a definite addition to your collection of games and adventure mysteries. Every package comes with a program for the Traveling Circus That Time Forgot, Inc., a Dr. Nostrum's Herbified Extract trading card, a balloon from the circus and a ticket to the circus. All are added extras for you people who invest in Infocom.

Ballyhoo is entertaining and deservedly worth all of your efforts in finding the owner's daughter, for you have heard another rumor about the circus that the owner will reward the detective handsomely if he finds his daughter. So, take full advantage of what you have in the area of perception and judgment and invest it into Infocom, especially all you would-be Perry Masons out there.

The past and present of the 'Voice' of Villanova

By LINI MULLEN

Allow me to appeal to your nostalgic side. Imagine for a moment that the year is 1947. You are where you are now, well, sort of. This isn't Villanova University, rather, it is Villanova College. The students are men only. World War II is over. The students are driving hot new Hudson Hornets, the first car to have flush fender styling. And one of the newest inventions is the television.

There is a spirit of expansion at Villanova College. Currently only about one-third of the buildings that will exist in 1986 are built. They are: Alumni Hall, the "College Building"; the chapel; the "new" monastery (replacing the one that burned in the fire of 1932); Mendel; a commerce and finance building (not Bartley Hall); Austin Hall (an upperclassman dorm housing the library and radio station); Fedigan Hall; St. Mary's Hall (housing seminarians); St. Rita's Hall (also housing seminarians); Middleton Hall (the infirmary); Delurey Hall; O'Dwyer Hall; Simpson Hall; the Field House; Goodreau Stadium; a chemical engineering building (1948); a library; a naval science building (1948); Belle Air Hall (4 army barracks along Ithan Avenue housing 200 students); and The Pie Shop (1 wing of an H-shaped army cafeteria).

The students attend classes in tie and jacket. The enrollment has tripled. There are political parties running against each other for Student Government. The freshmen must wear "pup" caps and name buttons and rolled pantlegs. There is a live mascot, "Count Villain III" which is being held captive by the Hoya. And the Villanova College radio station is just beginning.

Operating out of a linen closet in Austin Hall with a transmitting unit built entirely by students from the engineering department, a livelihood for hundreds of students yet to come was begun.

At 7 p.m. on December 9, 1947 the first words were spoken over the air. Under the call letters of WVIL, the Rev. Ralph Handran made history when he said, "You're listening to WVIL, the voice of Villanova College."

Thirty-nine years later we can assuredly say, "We've come a long way, baby!" Villanova College became a university in 1954. Many more buildings have been constructed with possible plans for even more. Students attend classes in casual attire. There are no more political parties within the campus. The freshmen no longer wear "pup" caps nor name tags. The mascot is not four-legged anymore. And the radio station is progressing to the level of more well-known college stations.

Today WKVU offers a variety of shows to appeal to the diversity of students' tastes, ranging from the playlist (Top 40 album-oriented rock (AOR) and progressive rock) to the specialty shows. These specialty shows airing between 7-11 p.m. include heavy metal on Mondays, oldies and blues on Tuesdays, classic rock on Wednesdays, progressive on Thursdays and dance on Fridays. The weekend shows vary from classical and new age to progressive and hardcore. Thursday at lunchtime (11:30-1) is the reggae show.

The music department interviews a plethora of musicians, both local and famous. In addition to musical variety, WKVU's sports department broadcasts the home football games and the men's home basketball games.

I encourage anyone who has suggestions or some free time to stop by 210 Dougherty Hall and see what the Voice of Villanova is up to.

A MIND FOREVER VOGAGING  INFOCOM C128, AP, AT, IBM

Infocom began its history with the popular adventure game Zork a long while ago, adapted from the mainframe version of the same name. Back in those days, an adventure like Zork was considered a masterpiece of all time — but that was before computers got smarter and obtained more memory.

AMVF, as A Mind Forever Voyaging is appropriately referred to by Infocom and myself, is the first adventure to take full advantage of the higher memory capabilities of modern computers. AMVF is probably the best adventure that Infocom has put out, too. It has a seemingly endless number of rooms for the adventurer to explore. The plot is an intricate one, as well.

You are PRISM, the first sentient machine. The time is 2031 and the world is on the brink of chaos. The economy of the United States of North America is stagnating, the youth are committing suicide in joybooths, overpopulation and poverty are rampant. There are nuclear weapons as small as cigarette packs and you must save the world. Senator Richard Ryder and other members of government have proposed the Plan for Renewed National Purpose to save the USNA from becoming a police state.

The Plan must be validated, however. That is where you come in. As PRISM, you must create a simulation of the future at different points in time to test the Plan. You have five modes of operation and must use them according to your best judgment. They are: Communications Mode, Library Mode, Interface Mode, Simulation Mode and Sleep Mode. You must switch between the modes in your quest to save the USNA and the Earth.

AMVF is everything you always wanted in an adventure and more. Included in the package are a full-color map of Rockvil, South Dakota, a 21st-Century plastic pen, a Class One Security Mode Access Decoder and Dakota Online Magazine.

LEATHER GODDESSES OF PHOBOS  INFOCOM C64/128, AT, AP, MAC, IBM

Looking at the name alone and passing judgement on a game is bad to do, as I'm sure you just did that. Leather Goddesses is not only a very humorous and challenging game, but you get Scratch and Sniff and 3D too, Infocom is the company from Cambridge, MA, that makes almost only text adventures. The neat part is that you get to imagine everything that is going on in your head.

With games like Leather Goddesses, you have to really exercise your imagination, because most of the game takes place on Phobos, a moon of Mars. You are just an average Joe from Sandusky, Ohio, hanging at the local bar when a blinding flash of light transfers you to a prison cell on Phobos. It seems that the Leather Goddesses of Phobos have kidnapped you.

The intentions of the Leather Goddesses are sexually-oriented. They want to make earth people their slaves, their sex slaves, that is. You must find the elements to make a machine capable of destroying the Leather Goddesses. Your quest takes you far and wide on the moon, via teleportation circles. Do not fret, because you meet a friend from Earth who is ready to help you in case of emergency.

Leather Goddesses of Phobos is meant as a spoof of the pulp fiction of the early 20th century. Each package contains a pair of 3D glasses and 3D comic book of the adventures of Lane Mastodon, hero of all and defender of earth, trying to save the people from the Goddesses.

THE MOVIE MONSTER GAME  EPYX C64/128, AP, IBM

Finally, after a long wait, I finally get to review this classic among classics. As the title says, the game involves movie monsters. As the title does not say, it involves six movie monsters, six cities to use and five plots for the game. Epyx is one of the leaders in entertainment software, and their latest hit proves their success.

You can be one of the six following monsters; Godzilla, king of the lizards, Mr. Meringue, a giant meringue man, Sphectra, the large stinging wasp, The Glog, an oozing mass of slimy flesh, Tarantus, the huge tarantula and Mechatron, the king of robots.

There are five plots that you can choose to put your monster through. He can aim to destroy a famous landmark in the city that you choose, simply try to escape the city before being killed, make lunch of the people and buildings to increase the hunger indicator, search for your baby that the mean people have captured and hidden somewhere in the city and finally just go berserk and try to destroy everything in the city.

You have a choice of six cities to carry forth your mission in: Tokyo, of course, New York, London, San Francisco, Paris or the marvelous Moscow. The element that immediately captures your attention is that The Movie Monster Game is the most interesting idea to hit the software market since Pong. Now you can get your chance to destroy Tokyo the way it was meant to be destroyed, by every monster in existence.

CHAMPIONSHIP WRESTLING  EPYX C64/128, AP, AT

Wrestling is one of the most popular spectator sports these days, with everything from video tapes and posters to underwear and T-shirts selling like hot cakes. Epyx has jumped on the band wagon to give the suplex to the software industry with Championship Wrestling.

In this game, you can be one of eight different wrestlers and can fight the computer, battling all of the other eight contestants, or fight your friends who pose as one of the personalities. The contestants include K.C. Colossus, Purple Hays, Colonel Rooski, Prince Vicious, Zantoklaw, Zeke Weasel, The Berserker and Howling Manslayer. Each have their own personality, and especially their own trademark wrestling move that will bring your opponent directly to the floor. After choosing who is going to fight whom, the match begins.

DESTROYER  EPYX C64/128, AP, IBM

Never has a video war game been so fun and challenging as with Epyx's newest release, Destroyer. The objective is to finish one of seven missions without getting sunk. You pilot a destroyer ship, acting as captain and sole person in charge of various stations of the ship. The great thing about this game (and all Epyx games for that matter) is that the controls are easy to perform and the instructions are easy to understand. Epyx put together probably the most concise packet for your money, giving a clear understanding of what you have to do as well as jamming as much of a good game onto a disk as possible.

Destroyer is not lacking in these categories either. The missions that you can choose are of the following: Subhunter, in which you track down subs; Screen, in which you have to protect a convoy from incoming enemy attackers; Scout, where you must reach checkpoints to make sure a stretch of water is safe; Bombardment, where you protect landing Marines from the enemy; Blockade Runner, where you break through the enemy to bring supplies to our men trapped on an island; Convoy Escort, in which you must guide a slow convoy into enemy territory; and Rescue, where you must save a downed pilot in enemy territory. All missions are challenging and require a lot of practice.

As Captain, you must monitor the following positions as carefully as possible: Bridge, Navigation, Observation Deck, Radar, Sonar, Guns Forward, Guns Aft, Anti-Aircraft Guns Port, Anti-Aircraft Guns Starboard, Torpedoes Port, Torpedoes Starboard, Depth Charges and Damage Control.

MARBLE MADNESS  ELECTRONIC ARTS C64, AP, AT, IBM

One of the newest releases from Electronic Arts in the past few weeks is Marble Madness, the home computer translation of the popular arcade hit, originally created by the Atari Games Corporation. The original game was controlled by a trak ball, in which you rolled a marble around a track, trying to make it to the end of the course without running out of time. Time is wasted by falling off of the course, getting eaten by

Dynagroove sparks interest in Philly club scene

By MICHELE O'NEILL

It was a Tuesday night at John Barleycorn's the day I interviewed Dynagroove. Who, you ask, is Dynagroove? Dynagroove is a local band that is out to make it big in the Philadelphia area. There are four ambitious guys that comprise this dance and party band.

Bryn "Woody" Ward, 24, is the bass guitarist. He is from Wynne wood, Pa., and attended Lower Merion High School. Presently he is enrolled at the Tyler School of Art. Andy Carr, 24, is the rhythm guitarist and vocalist. He attended Abington High School, in Abington, Pa., and then enrolled in Pennsylvania State University. Eric "Smokey" Horvitz, 21, is the lead guitarist and vocalist. He also attended Lower Merion High School and is presently a communications major at Drexel. Scott "Builder" Derr, 22, is in charge of the percussion. He attended Upper Dublin High School and is an engineering student at Drexel.

Dynagroove has been together for about one year now. Before the start of this band, Carn and Dern were a part of another band called The Shifters. Ward and Horvitz were friends who used to just play in the basement of Horvitz's Bala Cynwyd home with Tommy Conwell (of Tommy Conwell and the Young Rumblers).

This band has since been playing area bars such as 23 East Cabaret, the Chestnut Cabaret, and Khyber Pass. Coming up on Nov. 26, they will be playing J.C. Dobbs with Radio Rodeo, on Nov. 28 they will be at the Ambler Cabaret, and on Nov. 29 they will open for Beru Revue at The Chameleon.

These guys know how to have a good time at the same time they are working. Sometimes their shows include mud-wrestling or shaving cream-wrestling between a member in the band and someone in the audience, making it a pleasure to watch them.

Many of their songs are originals, but many are familiar to everyone whether you are 10 or 50. They play songs such as "Tears of a Clown," "Big Shot," "Dynagroove song," "The Beverly Hillbillies" and even "The Munster Theme." One favorite song among all Dynagroove fans and soon-to-be-fans is "Let's Get Down Tonight" (French Fries). It is a song you will never forget.

Dynagroove is primarily a dance band that likes to have fun both on and off stage.

Ritz Theater hosts Lee

By KATHLEEN CUNNINGHAM

"She's Gotta Have It" is a film written, directed and edited by the 29-year-old genius Spike Lee. He calls the film a "Spike Lee Joint." "A joint," said Lee, "is just New York street talk for a cool place to be, like a hamburger joint or a pizza joint."

Well, this off-center, romantic comedy-farce is a cool place to be. "She's Gotta Have It" is a refreshing change from our Rambo movie era. It has all the feelings and soul-searching qualities of a "Big Chill" and more. It is a realistic and fast-moving view of a contemporary Brooklyn woman that hypnotized me from the beginning.

The cast of "She's Gotta Have It" is black, and the picture is in black and white, except for one beautiful color scene. Nola Darling, played by the beautiful Tracy Camila Johns, is the first major character we meet.

Nola Darling is a sexual magnet. She may even be considered promiscuous by some, a nymph by others. What I believe she represents is the reversal of our patriarchial stereotype, the embodiment of a male stud. Each of her lovers has his own distinct personality, representing a particular segment of society.

Greer Childs, played by John Canada Terrell, is the smooth-talking, suave; money-making yuppie. He drives a Jaguar and sips fine wine.

His direct opposite, Mars Blackmon, played by Spike Lee, is the hilarious comic dressed in a satin baseball jacket and Air Jordan leather basketball sneakers traveling on a 10-speed bike.

James Overstreet, played by Tomme Redmond Hicks, is the middle-class, hard working James Dean type. This macho man falls under Lola's spell and almost captures her but . . .

The movie is an organized tangle of characters, emotions and perspectives.

This movie received a spontaneous standing ovation at the 1986 San Francisco Film Festival and for good reason. "She's Gotta Have It" is without a doubt a success. As the title says, "Nola Darling has to have it and she does." Do yourself a favor and see this one. You will not be disappointed. It is playing at The Ritz Theater in Philadelphia and is well worth the trip.

the Marble Munchers or pounded by the hammers.

In two player competition, both players must try to maneuver their marble to the finish line of the course faster than the other by precision in movement and the dirty trick of pushing your opponent off the track. Either way, Marble Madness gives you your quarter's worth in heart-pounding action, coupled with excellent graphics and theme music.

Electronic Arts took Atari's game and did one better — brought it to your home computer. The home version is exactly the same as the popular arcade game, except that you can use either a joystick or trak ball and that you do not need to insert another quarter when your game is done.

I would recommend using a trak ball as opposed to a joystick, since using a joystick requires constantly moving it to correct the spin of the ball. Spinning an actual ball is easier.

The home version has all of the original tracks that Atari's version had and adds an extra track if you finish the others. I haven't made it to the secret track, so when you get Marble Madness, drop a line to me telling me what it is. So if you are looking for that definitive version of an arcade classic, go get Marble Madness today and start the ball rolling.

"52-Pickup"
Directed by: John Frankenheimer
Cannon
*¼

"The book was better than the movie." Now that may be an old and overused cliche, but in the case of "52-Pickup" the phrase fits more than adequately well. In an over-sexed film that under-uses logic, director John Frankenheimer created an adaptation of an Elmore Leonard novel that gives Leonard's crime novel work its best treatment yet.

However, saying that Leonard was given his best treatment doesn't necessarily mean that Leonard was given a good treatment, considering the feeble work done on his crime novels (Burt Reynold's "Stick" for example) in the past. In fact, from what I can remember, "52-Pickup" has given me the best reason for walking out on a movie in a long, long time.

Unfortunately, I have to give some of the credit (or shame) for writing this film to Leonard himself because the screenplay credits are shared by Leonard and John Steppling. The screenplay seems to only scrape the surface of Leonard's novel in that only the main plot remains and that is so scaled-down and modified that the caring felt for main character Harry Mitchell (Roy Scheider) and the logic, understanding and development of the characters and their decisions are seriously diminished. Aside from the subplots eliminated, there is also the problem of subplots added, such as Mitchell's wife Barbara (Ann-Margret) running in a local Los Angeles election.

Whereas the book held suspense, the movie settled for millisecond shocks that wore off almost immediately thereafter. These changes also created predictability for the audience. From my experience, all this occurred even when audience members had not read "52-Pickup" before viewing it.

Another drawback is the high place nudity is given in the film. Faced with this comparatively high proportion of all-female nudity, one tends to become blase towards both it, and, at those times as well as others, the movie itself.

The incident that begins Mitchell's fight against the scum of Los Angeles is a simple affair with a 22-year-old girl. What Mitchell did not know was that portions of this affair were being videotaped for private use. This usage is blackmail.

Mitchell finds out when he goes to his girlfriend's apartment to break off their three-month odyssey. Waiting for him instead are three hooded men holding guns and armed with a videotape. (The videotape scenes are the best in the film.) As Mitchell watches it, he realizes the trouble he is in and is not additionally shocked when they ask for $105,000 and a $10,000 downpayment.

Mitchell crosses them on the downpayment and as a result the thugs set him up for the killing of his girlfriend, which they so accommodatingly videotaped for him. The price is jacked up to $105,000 a year as Mitchell becomes desperate in his search to find a way out. As the movie continues, the thugs too become desperate with dissension bubbling within their ranks. Naturally, there is a happy ending with all of the thugs gone and the husband and wife walking into the sunset.

Of the performances, the most intriguing belong to the villains themselves and in particular Clarence Williams III as Bobby Shy, a coked-up and murderous daredevil, and John Glover as Alan Rainy, the perverted, murderous, porno-flick master. Unfortunately, however intriguing they are, the end result just is not good enough.

"52-Pickup" basically was a waste of good, and in some cases, great talent. Scheider has had much better showcases than this one and will hopefully get himself a quality role next time. As for Ann-Margret, she gave a good performance as Mitchell's wife in showing that she could act, but she was given a role with little to do. Sadly, the film's largest waste was of Leonard, whose slick, involving and sensical novel was reduced in every way.

For fans of Leonard, this is not his last chance. At least two of his other novels are in or will be in production ("LaBrava" and "Glits"), so be patient and eventually the fans of Leonard will surely be rewarded.

Georgia-born artist Robert Cray, of The Robert Cray Band, is promoting their new album Strong Persuader.

Cray fishes for hit

By MEGAN GUIDERA

Strong Persuader
The Robert Cray Band
Mercury-Hightone

Contrary to what MTV or local radio stations play, there is more to music than America's top 40. One such variation is blues music, which has the potential to be both emotional and enjoyable. However, The Robert Cray Band's new album Strong Persuader does not portray the potential emotional enjoyment found in good blues music. Rather, Strong Persuader is a shuffled together mess whose lyrics might give the album the nickname "chauvinistic delight."

The Robert Cray Band is a fairly unknown band composed of four members. Robert Cray, the lead vocalist, plays lead guitar and lends his name to the group's title. Richard Cousins performs the bass. Peter Boe plays the keyboards and David Olson plays the drums.

The Robert Cray Band was aided by The Memphis Horns on Strong Persuader. Wayne Jackson played the trumpet and trombone and Andrew Love played the tenor sax.

The Robert Cray Band formed in 1978 with Cray and Cousins as the band's nucleus. Their first album, Who's Been Talkin', was released in 1980. Since then three albums have followed: Bad Influence in 1983, False Accusations in 1985 and finally Strong Persuader in 1986. Bad Influence earned The Robert Cray Band four blues awards: Best Contemporary Album, Single of the Year, Song of the Year (both for "Phone Booth" from the album).

Among The Robert Cray Band's fans are musicians Eric Clapton, Elvis Costello and Keith Richards. However, Cray's illustrious fan club may drop their membership after listening to four minutes of Strong Persuader.

Strong Persuader deals with the seemingly favorite theme of relationships with females. However, songs like "Nothin' But A Woman" contain degrading chauvinistic undertones. This song analogizes a woman to such romantic things as gasoline, California weed and real estate. ("Don't need Nothin' but a woman to get me through the night." "Nothin' But a Woman" relays a tone that woman are only good for one thing — "to get me through the night."

Other songs like "Smoking Gun," "I Guess I Showed Her" and "Foul Play" display bitterness toward women that have been unfaithful. The song's lyrics are senseless, repetitive and do not correspond to the music.

The song "Fantasized" portrays the typical stereotype of women as a sex toy. ("Sugar sweet lips and magical hips just like I fantasized.") Not only are the lyrics ridiculous, but the four minute song is too long and the music too repetitive.

The creation of a masterpiece takes time, thought and patience. Stronger Persuader is a far cry from a masterpiece. The lyrics are insulting. The music sounds almost identical in every song. The vocals are sloppy and disturbing to the ear.

Usually an album has one saving grace; however, Strong Persuader did not even manage that much. Perhaps if The Robert Cray Band takes the time to create something listenable their name will be recognizable. Until then, there are other blues, soul and rock-n-roll artists that are well worth listening to.

Cars' lead singer shines in latest solo effort

By MEGAN GUIDERA

The Side of Paradise
Ric Ocasek
Geffen Records

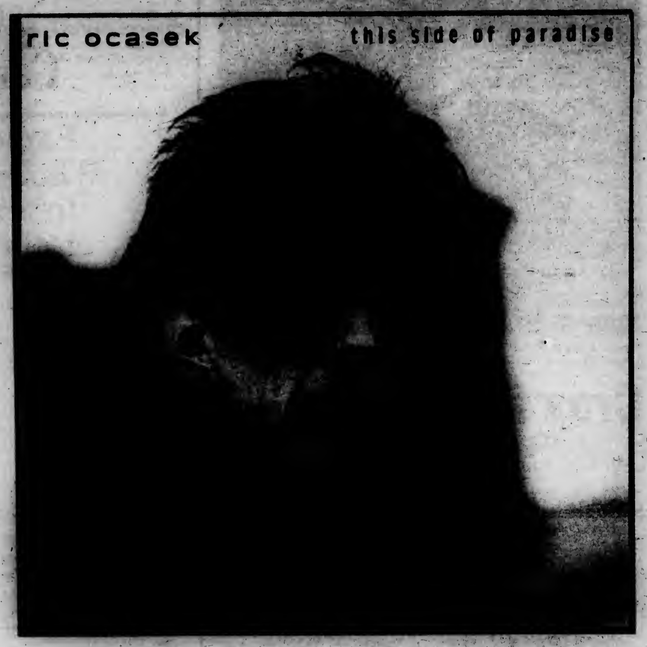
What could be more ego-enhancing than being a member of a well-known classic pop group? However, what could intensify insecurity more than the uncertainty of one's own personal talent and independence?

An increasingly popular trend among lead singers of hot rock groups is to strike out on their own to see if they can wade the waters of success without the security blanket of their group. Phil Collins from Genesis, Peter Satera from Chicago and Ric Ocasek from The Cars are classic examples of modern rockers wanting to test their personal abilities with their solo albums.

On Sept. 15, Ric Ocasek released his second solo masterpiece, This Side of Paradise. His first solo album, Beatitude, was released a few years ago. Unlike Collins and Satera, Ocasek is "not breaking away from The Cars," says Chris Wheat from Warner Brothers. In fact, two members of The Cars, Greg Hawks and Benjamin Orr, aided Ocasek with This Side of Paradise.

Orr, who is perhaps best known for his lead vocals on The Cars song "Drive," found time to lend background vocals on three of Ocasek's songs while working on his own solo album, Lace, which was released by Electra Records.

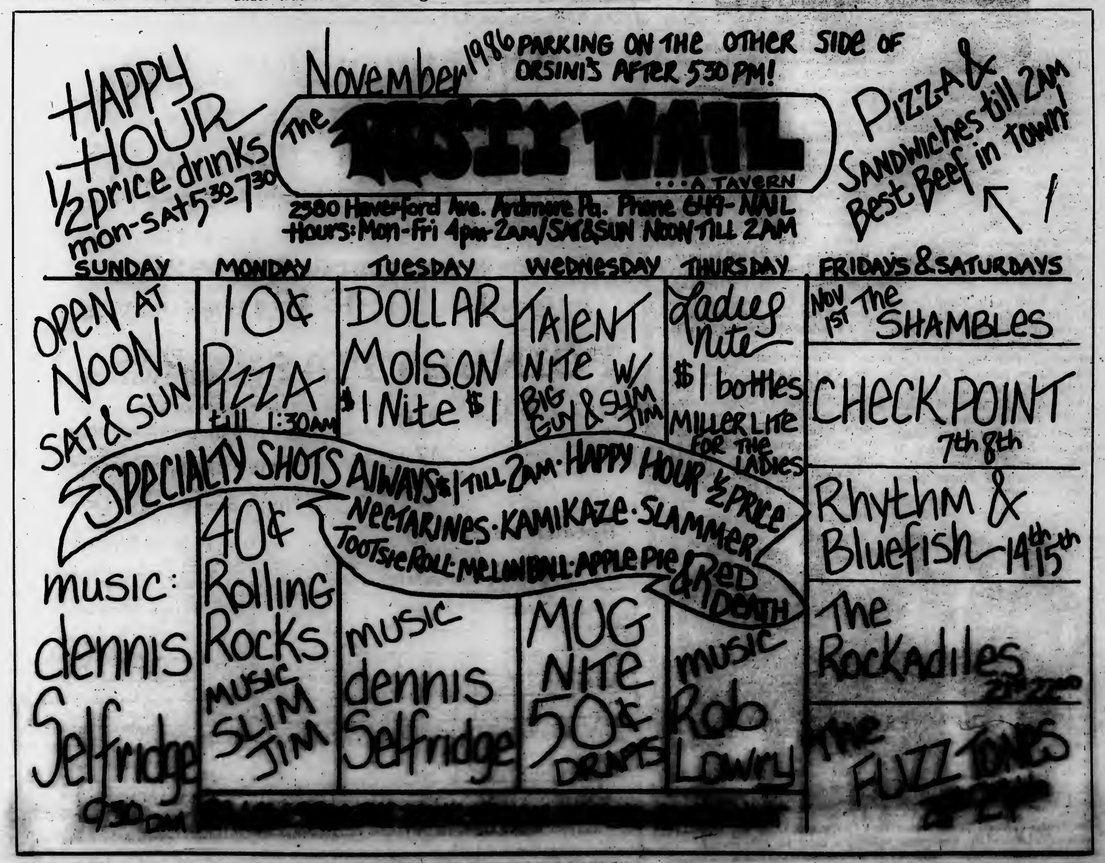
Hawks participated in every song on This Side of Paradise either through bass, keyboards, vocals, clarinet or harmonica. Elliot Easton of The Cars played lead guitar in the song "True to You" on Ocasek's album. The Cars drummer, David Robinson, is the only member of The Cars that did not help Ocasek with the album.



With all of the support from Ocasek's fellow band members, one might question the validity of calling This Side of Paradise a solo album. However, Ocasek wrote and sang all of the songs on the album, with the exception of "Hello Darkness," which was written by Ocasek and Hawkes. Ocasek also co-produced This Side of Paradise with Chris Hughes and Ross Cullum. Thus the album is truly Ocasek's child.

The album itself is an excellent combination of Ocasek's uniqueness and of a striking familiarity to The Cars music. The general theme of This Side of Paradise is the ever-popular theme of the quest for love.

The album's title track, "This Side of Paradise," has an Egyptian beat that is unique to Ocasek. This song speaks of entrapment in an unhappy love relationship. It tells of the unfulfilled desires that occur when one stays on "one side of paradise" and does not reach beyond.



Slow songs like "Mystery" and "True Love" are excellent examples of Ocasek's lyrical genius. Both songs beautifully express different emotions of love.

The best song on the album however, is the already released beautiful song "Emotion in Motion." "Emotion in Motion" tells of the deep dedication that lies under true love. "I would go anywhere/ to meet up with you/ just about anywhere for one rendezvous/ I'd hold on to you/ 'til the mountains crumble flat . . ."

Each song on the album is symbolically introduced by space-like sounds and music. This unique sound is symbolic of "The Other Side of Paradise."

All of the songs on This Side of Paradise, with the exception of "P.F.J.," which is as tedious and awkward as its title, are entertaining, interesting and enjoyable. Ocasek certainly proved himself to be a highly capable soloist through his success with This Side of Paradise.

Windham Hill releases innovative music

Living Music Collection '86
Paul Winter and Friends
Living Music/Windham Hill

Windham Hill Records

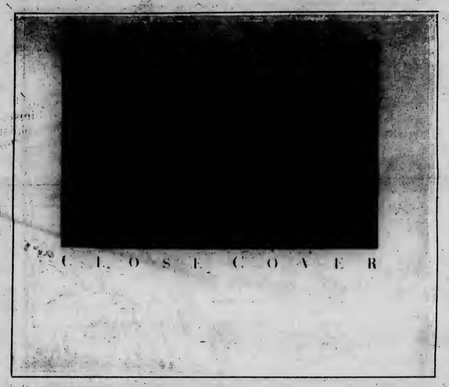
The Living Music Collection '86 is a sampler of offerings from the records group started by composer Paul Winter, distributed through Windham Hill, and known as Living Music Records. The 10 selections on the sampler package have been culled from the releases of the Paul Winter Consort, and from those of the other musicians who have played with Winter and constitute his "family" of musicians.

Works by guitarist Oscar Castro-Neves, cellist Eugene Friesen and pianists Paul Halley and Denny Zeitlin are featured, but the most interesting selection is the "Lullaby from the Great Mother Whale for the Baby Seal Pups" from the Paul Winter Consorts's Concert for the Earth. This "lullaby" is a musical accompaniment to a recording of the "song" of the humpback whale.



This particular and singularly impressive work was recorded in the General Assembly of the United Nations on World Environment Day, June 5, 1984. In notes accompanying the sampler, Winter explains the origin of the lullaby: "When I first heard this whale's melody several years ago, it sounded to me like a lullaby. It was in mid-winter, just as the annual slaughter of harp seal pups was about to begin in the North Atlantic."

"Wondering what these songs might mean for the whales, and knowing that their voices carry for hundreds, perhaps thousands of miles through the ocean, I had a fantasy that this song, from one of the largest creatures in the sea, was being sent out across vast distances to surround and protect these tiny pups. Thus the title."

Windham Hill has recently released a number of noteworthy recordings, and among them are Jogging the Memory by Malcolm Dalglish, nine short instrumental pieces on solo hammer dulcimer, Unusual Weather by bassist Michael Manring and Close Cover by pianist Wim Mertens. It is the last mentioned that is especially noteworthy.

Close Cover is the first American release from the Belgian composer and keyboardist Wim Mertens and has been drawn from the material of his European albums. Mertens is usually associated with the minimalist school of music, and, not surprisingly, selections from his Close Cover such as "Struggle for Pleasure" and "Gentleman of Leisure" are quite similar to what one would find on Glassworks from America's minimalist composer Philip Glass.

The best offering from Mertens collection is the beautiful solo piano piece "Lir" that sprawls across the entire second side of the album. It is this piano piece that demonstrates the commitment to beautiful music made and honored by Windam Hill.

Birthday celebration

By MARIE COLLEVECCHIO

Nov. 19 marks the third birthday of this Kappa Alpha Theta chapter! The Thetas sure have come a long way in that time and are very proud of their success.

The Thetas know that their founding sisters are just as proud as shown by the strong return of alumnae at Homecoming. A special Homecoming brunch was planned for KAO's two graduated classes and it was a super way to start off the day.

Suzanne Krewson's position as a member of the Homecoming Court was another highlight of the day. If the pledges of KAO follow in the footsteps of the sisters, KAO is sure to continue its success.

The Fall 1986 pledge class includes Tamara Adams, Farrell Binder, Julie Bordi, Kim DeLuzio, Heather Durkin, Suzanne Foster, Cara Gavin, Patricia Geisel, Deborah Gross, Luci Jankowski, Jody Kafrissen, Elizabeth Kelley, Kathleen Kelly, Kristen Kelly and Karen Klacik.

Other pledges include Kathleen Leahigh, Leslie Lewis, Michelle Lewis, Deanna Manzi, Eileen McGinley, Alice Parsells, Diane Plant, Lori Plessl, Christine Pociennik, Elizabeth Quinn, Maura Riley, Mary Eileen Rogers, Kristen Satiritz, Deirdre Schiffgens, Christina Seery, Kristen Shevis, Theresa Walton, Kara Vlahos, Valerie Yost and Tresa Zielinski.

The success of the chapter and the outstanding pledge class are certainly two good reasons for the Thetas to celebrate, and they are sure to do just that at Saturday's special birthday celebration.

However, the Thetas also want to share their good fortune with the underprivileged children of St. Ignatius and have planned a kite fly with them for Nov. 23.

The sisters and pledges of Kappa Alpha Theta are very busy, but they are certainly having fun.

Deltas keeping busy

By KATHY CRON

Tri-Delta has been very busy having a lot of fun. Our second-annual Homecoming with LXA was a great time. We would like to congratulate our own Denise Ferraro, part of the 1986 Homecoming Court.

More recently, last Friday's TG with Deke was a blast, as was our last tailgate of the season with Pi Kapp. The best time of the weekend for the Tri-Delts was cleaning the stadium with the lax team after the game!

The weekend finished on a more traditional note. Delta Delta Delta celebrated its 98th year on Sunday at a Founder's Day brunch at the Overbrook Country Club.

Last but not least, the Deltoid football team ended its season Monday night in a semi-final battle with a top-ranked team. The Deltoids were defeated, but a 5-2 record is not bad for a team that was ranked last at the beginning of the season.

The IFC and Panhel Wish All Greeks a Happy Thanksgiving!

Alpha Chi Omega

We hope their favorite men had as good a time as the sisters did. Thanks pledges for a fantastic time!

Alpha Omicron Pi

Alpha Omicron Pi's Bermuda Suitcase Party with the Zetes was a lot of fun. We are looking forward to our halfway dinner with our pledges and our tailgate with Sigma Nu this Saturday.

Delta Gamma

We are psyched for a TG with Tau Kappa Omega on Nov. 21. Our formal is at the Twelve Caesars on Dec. 5. Our pledges are going on retreat Nov. 22.

Delta Tau Delta

The Delts completed another successful football season. Though disappointed at the loss, which ended the season at 9-1 in the quarter-finals, we know that next year the Delts will be back.

Lambda Chi Alpha

This past Saturday, Lambda Chi participated in a service project in which several kids from the inner-city were treated to Villanova football and a post-game cook-out with the brothers.

Kappa Kappa Gamma

We are having a basketball marathon with Pi Kappa Alpha for charity on Dec. 7 in the Butler Annex. Get psyched Kappas! Today's T.G. should be a great time!

Kappa Kappa Gamma had a great weekend! Thanks TKO for a memorable TG and thanks LXA for a great tailgate!

Alpha Phi Delta

The brothers of Alpha Phi Delta would like to congratulate Stephen Schlager who is the newest brother to be inducted into the Order of Omega.

Alpha Phi Omega

APO would like to thank the student body for a successful blood drive. Thanks also to the Greeks who came out in support of the Red Cross.

Delta Kappa Epsilon

Delta Kappa Epsilon would like to thank the sisters of Delta Delta Delta for a great time on the "Hill." Also, congratulations to the Deke football team on a very successful season.

Pi Kappa Psi

The "Change Jar" fundraiser at Connelly Center's front desk is going well. All donations go to "PUSH," Pi Kapp's national charity. Your support is greatly appreciated.

Pi Kappa Alpha

Krawin for book raffle on Nov. 21. Help save a life! Buy a Poinsettia from a Pike — details to follow. Semi-formal at the Dunfey tonight. Looking forward to Alpha Chi Omega TG after break.

Sigma Phi Epsilon

Sig Ep had a very successful retreat last Saturday. There was a lot of meaningful discussion and much important ground was covered.

We are looking forward to partying with the sisters of Kappa Kappa Gamma this Friday. Get psyched!

Tau Kappa Omega

The brothers of TKO look forward to celebrating with Delta Gamma this weekend. To the brothers of Sig Pi, hope you enjoyed tailgating on the "half-shell" Saturday. We would also like to congratulate the outstanding job done by the pledges, who are undefeated in pledge football.

Lambda Kappa Delta

Memories... They just come marching back! LKD's true intramural football record of 7-1 and two "upset?" victories in the playoffs has everyone riding the LKD bandwagon to the Final Four

"Greek in a Weekend."

An information meeting will be held in Connelly Center on Nov. 19 from 9 to 10 p.m. in the Bryn Mawr Room.

Sigma Pi

The brothers of Sigma Pi would like to thank the sisters of Alpha Chi for the great weekend and TKO for a great tailgate highlighted by the exciting stick races. We look forward to a great weekend with Tri-Delta and the Killer Tomatoes. Thanks for all who came out to Smoke's two Wednesday's ago. It was a great success and a great time.

Swimmers drown Bryn Mawr

By MICHAEL IRONS

The women's swimming team successfully started their season this past weekend pounding their counterparts from Bryn Mawr College by the score of 146-96.

In the women's victory, freshmen Geraldine Cortes won a pair of first-place finishes to pace the Ladycats to the win. Cortes, from Bayonne, N.J., won the 200-yard freestyle in 2:05.23, and the 100-yard freestyle, in 57.18.

Also winning two first places was sophomore Sue Schroder. Schroder won the 50-yard freestyle, in 26.12, and the 200-yard intermediate medley with a time of 2:20.98.

Tina Louwers, Megan Waters, Cathy Smith, Meg Fitzgerald, Kathleen McMahon and Diane DeBobes all won their events in route to the lop-sided victory. Besides winning many of the events outright, Villanova also took 11 second-places as well as five third places.

"We always shoot for a 10-win season, and last year we had no trouble accomplishing that. This year, we hope to reverse some of our losses [from last season] and we'd like to finish the season ranked among the top-five teams in the East," said Head Coach Chris McKee. "We were so close last season. This year we'll be shooting after Pittsburgh for the Conference title. They will know we're there."

Several key elements from last season's team are returning, 12 in all, led by Schroder who collected 20 first-place finishes last season. Another key contributor will be Mindy Warmbrand, also a sophomore. Warmbrand finished second in the 200-yard butterfly in the Big East Championships and collected nine first-place finishes last year.

Fitzgerald won 13 races last year and will be another integral part of the success of the team as will co-captain Liz Kennedy, who won six races last season.

However, a "good deal of the load" will be carried by four freshmen: Laurel Founier, Danielle Mackey, Tracey Setlock and Amy Gannon, according to McKee.

"Talent-wise, we have certainly filled our losses we had because of graduation. I think we'll have a much-improved team this season," McKee said. "They all should do well in the Big East."

Combining a strong returning nucleus with the potential of the freshmen, another banner season is easily in the grasp of the Ladycats.

Wrestling takes third

By RALPH MANOS

"I was very proud with our performance. Some of our wrestlers were up to and beyond their potential," said head Coach Chuck Yarnall after his Wildcats placed third in the SUNY-Binghamton Tournament. One wrestler, Mark Miller, won his weight class and there was also a second place finisher for the Cats. Four other Cats also placed third.

This was the first inter-collegiate meet for the new wrestling program, which was started this semester with the help of John E. duPont.

Lycoming won the team title but the real news from the meet was Miller's impressive win in the 167-pound class. A sophomore from Wayne, Pa., Miller won both of his matches against opponents from Pottsdam State and Lycoming.

"He [Miller] was absolutely incredible in both matches," commented Yarnall. "He's a very dominating wrestler and he set the tone for our whole team."

Junior Chris Scott, from New Lenox, Ill., was runner-up in the 142-pound class. Scott defeated Lycoming's Chris Cooper in overtime during his first match but then was forced to default in the championship match, versus Division III all-America Mark Grumble of SUNY-Binghamton because of a separated shoulder.

"The team had great spirit, and it was something that everyone in the room could feel," Yarnall said. "The third-place finish is a good measuring stick for us. We know where we stand now. We have a great future ahead of us."

Men take second in Villanova carnival

By JOANNE DEVEREUX

The Villanova men's swim team hosted six teams in a Relay Carnival, this past Saturday in the duPont Pavilion. Villanova came in second only to Army and beat one of their biggest rivals, LaSalle University.

Beating LaSalle was a significant accomplishment for the Villanova swimmers, as they have not beaten LaSalle in a dual meet in 13 years. Other teams competing were Glassboro State, University of Pennsylvania, Shippensburg and Boston University.

Villanova came in first in the 200-meter freestyle relay with Pete Maloney swimming a 20.6 in his leg of the relay. Also participating in this event were Blaise Matthews, Jack Quinlan and Lou Derysteine. Villanova also dominated the 400-meter breaststroke relay with Harry Zakian, Tim Truax, Chris Craft and Andy Miller all having outstanding times.

Other events that Villanova came in first include the 400-meter backstroke relay, the 400-meter freestyle relay and the 500-meter crescendo relay. The 500-meter crescendo relay is a race in which five swimmers swim 50, 100, 200, 100 and then 50 meters. Craft swam the 200-meter leg of it with a time of 1:41.3.

Injury and illness have plagued the Villanova swim team, thus handicapping the Wildcat swimmers this past Saturday. Senior Co-Captain Jerry Quinn and fifth-year senior Maloney, (red-shirted his junior year due to injury), swam Saturday despite the fact that he was still recovering from the flu. Co-Captain Keith Donohoe was not able to swim on Saturday, also because of the flu, further hindering the Wildcats' strength. Harry Zakian, suffering from a severe hand laceration incurred while playing a video game several weeks ago, only resumed practice a few days before the Relay Carnival.

Villanova faces the University of Pittsburgh this Saturday. Pittsburgh is traditionally a strong rival of the Villanova swim team and is expected to be tough to beat. Hopefully by this Saturday all the swimmers will be healthy and ready to chalk up a victory.

"The Relay Carnival was a good conditioner for the team and it gets us off on a good foot for our first meet with Pittsburgh," said Head Coach Ed Geisz.

The Wildcats are coming off one of their most successful seasons ever, finishing with a 13-3 record and a second-place finish at the Big East Conference Championships. The team also finished second in the 1986 Eastern Collegiate Championships. The nucleus of this successful team returns this year.

"Our main priority is to win the Big East, then win the Eastern Championship. We are knocking on the door," said Geisz.

Cats tame Aussies, opener tonight

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

As the lights were dimming on Goodreau Field and the Wildcat football season was coming to a victorious end, the duPont Pavilion was heating up for the 1986-87 Wildcat basketball season. This season will spotlight four young freshmen prospects and a few of our old favorites hitting their peak in the Big East.

The freshmen include 6-foot-10 Barry Bekkedam from Archbishop Carroll High School in Radnor, Pa.; 7-foot-2 Tom Greis from St. Anthony's High School in Huntington, N.Y.; Rodney Taylor, a 6-foot-6 forward from A.C. Flora High School in Columbia, S.C.; and 6-foot-3 point guard Eric Leslie from Grady High in Brooklyn, N.Y. Bekkedam and Greis should add strength to Villanova's faltering inside game.

The starting Wildcat center, Wyatt Maker, is presently out with a knee injury which required arthroscopic surgery prior to the season opener. Rodney Taylor, a highly-touted freshman, fell to injuries prior to the start of practice this year. He came back for a short time only to injure his ankle in the same fall that injured Maker. Taylor's future at Villanova is questionable.

Freshman point guard Eric Leslie has looked good in practices and exhibitions up to this point. Leslie is not as flashy as sophomore standout Kenny Wilson, but he should shore up the point guard position for this season.

Senior guard Harold "Iceman" Jensen should take control of the Big East this year, especially now because the NCAA has adopted the three-point rule for any shots outside the 19-foot-9-inch range. Another returning starter who will be wreaking havoc in the Big East conference is sophomore sensation Doug West.

Junior Mark Plansky should make a considerable contribution inside. Plansky is a sneaky rebounder and has excellent touch from the outside.

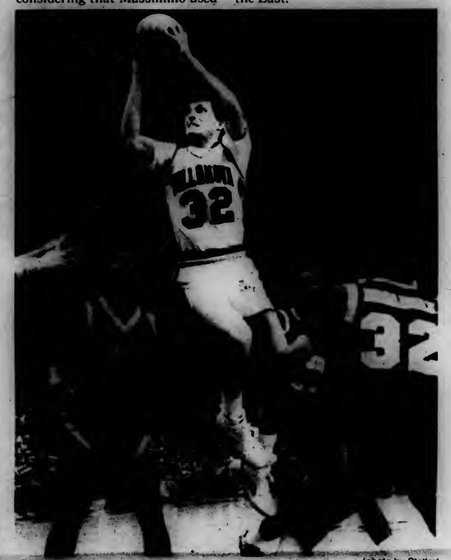
Senior Connally Brown has not performed up to his capabilities in the past, but the talent is there and he could possibly be the surprise comeback player of the year in the Big East.

Rollie Massimino, head Men's Basketball coach, feels that a good year is around the corner for the Wildcats with the key being the "replacement of Harold Pressley as a leader and a player." Massimino also stated, "Our rebounding will be contested very much early on and whether we are able to rebound will depend greatly on how well our freshmen do."

The Wildcats tested their 1986-87 squad for the first time this season against the Melbourne Victorian Basketball team (Australian National team). 'Nova came out with the starting line up of Mark Plansky, Doug West, Harold Jensen, Kenny Wilson and freshman Tom Greis. Melbourne went out to an early lead through the efforts of the Gaze brothers who put 15 points on the board including three 3-point shots. Jensen had little success keeping up with the Melbourne duo, but managed to put four points of his own up before the Villanova time out.

After the time out the teams exchanged baskets and then Massimino made his first of many moves to the bench. Gary Massey and Connally Brown made their first appearances, coming in for Greis and West. After the subs came in, Jensen hit his first 3-pointer of the season with a 20-foot jump shot from the baseline. After exchanging baskets for a few minutes, Connally Brown came out of his 3-year shell and hit six straight points off assists from Leslie, Massey and his own rebound.

Massimino continued to rotate his bench with no one team staying in for longer than four minutes. Villanova managed to cut the lead to six points by half time and the teams headed to the locker room, Melbourne 55, Villanova 49.



Villanova shot an uninspiring 46.8 percent from the floor in the first half with Harold Jensen handling the majority of the Wildcat scoring with 14 points. Connally Brown bolstered the Wildcats first half attack going 4-4 from the floor and totaling eight points in the first half. He became the Wildcats second leading scorer.

The rebounding troubles that Massimino talked about prior to the game came true. The Wildcats were even in rebounds at halftime, but the Melbourne team was much smaller and the Wildcats should have had no trouble in out-rebounding them.

The second half started and so did the Kenny Wilson-Doug West show. West and Wilson teamed up to score 14 points with Greis throwing in four more and Connally Brown throwing in another four points to take the lead 71-69 with 13:10 left in the game. The Wildcat scoring barrage continued, but Melbourne did not let up and the lead changed hands three times with five ties before Villanova took control of the lead for good. With 2:28 left Jensen hit his third 3-pointer of the game followed by a 15-foot jumpshot buried by Doug West to put the Wildcats up 92-89. Melbourne pulled to within one before West iced the game hitting two free throws pulling Villanova to a 94-91 win.

The Wildcats did not look impressive in their first win (exhibition) of the season, unless considering that Massimino used more combinations on the court than you see in a New York delicatessen and that the Wildcat tempo changed each time a new squad would step onto the floor.

If the Wildcats gel and Massimino finally decides on a squad that will control the floor, Villanova may again be the "Beast of the East."

With the implementation of the 3-point rule, senior guard Harold Jensen will be a factor to reckon with in the Big East.

Cats pioneer eighth victory, 28-9

By KIMBERLY E. BROGUE

As the cold winter winds blew in from the northeast and the sun ducked behind the clouds looming over Goodreau Field, the Villanova Wildcats capped off their 1986 football season with their eighth win of the season behind a impressive performance by quarterback Kirk Schulz.

Schulz finished his freshman year with 20 completions out of 29 attempts, with an interception, a touchdown and 311 yards. By going over 300 yards, Schulz broke the single-season passing record. The record was formerly held by Bill Hatty, who set the record of 1,947 yards in the 1973 football season.

In the words of Coach Andy Talley, "Kirk Schulz is the biggest success story of the season. He deceives the other coaches, they don't know how good he is until they get here. His development over the season is a credit to his hard work."

Villanova started out its final game of the season by receiving the ball at their own 28-yard line. The Wildcats moved the ball at will, and drove down to the Widener 11-yard line. Schulz then handed off to Gary Pascoe who plowed up the middle for a gain of nine yards. Widener was penalized for unnecessary roughness, which took the ball to within inches of the goal line. Ron Sency took care of the rest of the yardage to the endzone, and the Wildcats went up, 7-0.

Widener took control of the ball following the kickoff at their own 29-yard line. They drove up to the 43 before having to punt the ball away. The Pioneer punt fluttered only 25 yards and as Villanova's Greg Downs attempted to catch it, the ball got away and Widener recovered. However, they failed to move the ball and attempted a 29-yard field goal. The field goal was wide, and the Wildcats took over on downs. Villanova did not let this opportunity go to waste and pushed the ball down the field to the Pioneer 49. Schulz then dropped back and completed a 49-yard pass to Downs for a touchdown.

Widener again failed to move the ball and had to punt the ball away. This drive, however, was not as successful as the past drives had been. There were six penalties, five on Villanova before the drive ended with a missed 33-yard field goal by Todd Schaeffer.

On the first play of the drive, Widener completed a 40-yard pass play to the Villanova 40-yard line and followed it up with a 38-yard pass play down to the Villanova two. Widener then decided that they did not want to score, or at least it seemed that way, as they proceeded to lose 34 yards in the succeeding four plays from scrimmage. The Pioneers finally settled for a 37-yard field goal and brought the score to 14-3.

On the ensuing drive, 'Nova gained 20 yards before punting away. The Widener Pioneers then returned the favor by gaining 35 yards before giving the ball back on downs. Villanova took the ball down to the Widener 35-yard line where Schaeffer attempted his second field goal of the day. This time, the middle of the Widener line broke through and blocked the Schaeffer attempt, and the Pioneers took over. The first half ended with the score Villanova, 14 — Widener, 3.

Widener received the ball to start the second half and proceeded to have the ball intercepted by sophomore linebacker Bill Buckley of Villanova. The drive moved to the 26-yard line of Widener before Schaeffer missed yet another field goal, his third of the day, this one from 43 yards out.

Following a Widener punt and a Widener interception, the Pioneers again controlled the ball deep in Villanova territory. This time, however, the Pioneers would not be denied, and with three straight completions, put six points on the board. They then attempted a 2-point conversion, but the Widener quarterback fumbled the pitch and the score remained 14-9.

Following the kickoff, the Wildcats moved the ball sluggishly up the field and were soon forced to punt. Winslow's 37-yard punt was bobbled by return man Bill Eisele and Villanova recovered at the Widener 4-yard line. Forty-six seconds later the Wildcats had put seven more points on the board and the third quarter ended Villanova, 21 — Widener, 9.

On the second play from scrimmage in the fourth quarter, Villanova's Ted White jarred the ball loose from Widener's Kim Harris, and the Wildcats had the ball again at the midfield stripe. Villanova wasted no time at all putting the ball in the end zone. Schulz hit Robert Brady for 45 yards and Art Condodina took care of the remaining five yards with a sweep right and a dive off-tackle. Schaeffer then put the remaining nail in the Widener coffin with the extra point to put the Wildcats up 28-9.

There was no further scoring in the game and Villanova finished its season with a victory. The Wildcats ended with an 8-1 record, one of the best in the school's 88-year history.

Athlete of the Week

This week's Saco East athletes of the week are Mark Miller and Vicki Huber. Mark Miller is a sophomore wrestler from Wayne, Pa. In the wrestling program's debut at the SUNY-Binghamton wrestling tournament, Mark took first place in the 167-pound class.

Miller, a transfer from Millersville University, is a co-captain for this year's squad. In his first match, Miller defeated Lycoming's Slade Deyuls, 11-6. He then defeated first seed, Dave Vincent from Pottsdam State, 13-3, for the title. In the words of Coach Chuck Yarnall, "He's one of the hardest workers on the team." We look forward to the success of both Mark and the wrestling squad in the future.

Vicki Huber, a sophomore liberal arts major, was named athlete of the week on Oct. 3 for winning the Big East and Big Five titles. However, Vicki did not stop there. This past weekend Huber ran in the ECAC championship and the NCAA Regional II championship. The two championships are run together in one race. In the 5,000-meter race, Huber ran a 16:38.36, which was 10 seconds ahead of the second-place finisher. By winning the Regional II championship, Huber guaranteed Villanova a bid in the NCAA cross-country championships to be held on November 24, in Tucson, Ariz.

Huber leads harriers to NCAA's

By SUSAN GANEM

Women's cross country continued their winning ways last weekend when they travelled to Lehigh University for the NCAA Region 2 and ECAC Championships. The Wildcats were victorious in the regional meet and took second in the ECAC meet. The harriers broke Penn State's 10-year monopoly on the title by scoring 51 points to Penn State's 58.

Sophomore Vicki Huber established herself as the best cross-country runner in the east by crossing the finish line first with a time of 16:38.36 for the 5000-meter course. Senior Gina Procaccio was the next Cat across the line in 16:59.42, placing seventh overall and third in the regional meet.

Besides Huber's outstanding performance, there was another highlight of the day. Coach Marty Stern was named NCAA Region 2 Coach of the Year, a reward for his development of the program to a national power.

The Wildcats will get a chance to prove themselves on the national level on Nov. 24 when they travel to Tucson, AZ, for the NCAA Championship meet.

"I really think that the women will be able to peak on Monday," commented Stern. "I was very happy with the way we ran at regionals, and I am sure that we will place in the Top Ten. We could possibly place as high as fifth or sixth."

On the men's side, senior Gerry O'Reilly continued to be impressive, winning the NCAA Region 2 race and placing second in the ICAA race with a time of 29:24.40 for the 10,000-meter course. O'Reilly's time was the fourth fastest ICAA time ever on the course. His efforts earned him the chance to represent Villanova in the NCAA Championships on Nov. 24, in Tucson, AZ.

Driscoll meets with Senate

By NOEL E. FALCO

The Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, gave the State of the University address at the Senate meeting Nov. 21 in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Driscoll began his address by saying, "There are now so many things going on in the University, it's practically impossible for me to pull it into a tight schematic for you."

He said that he would therefore touch on only the major things, beginning with comments on the joint meeting of the executive committee and board of trustees.

Driscoll said that he "found the [joint] meeting productive" and that such meetings "tend to improve communications." However, he did not reveal any specifics of this meeting, nor did the Senate in later discussion.

Driscoll went on to talk of Senate affairs, particularly of the [illegible] committee's concerns [illegible] over Fall Break.

[illegible] his feelings on a full-week Fall Break, Driscoll said, "You can do whatever you want. You can have a full-week not at all, sometimes, or all the time."

However, he also said, "What is not acceptable is a long weekend. Take a week when you can

Athletic advisory board sets goals

By ELIA DiTADDEO

At its first meeting of the year, the Athletic Advisory Committee elected officers and discussed three topics of concern, Dr. Theodore A. Aceto, director of athletics, said this week.

The first recommendation submitted by the committee concerns the seating capacity of the John E. duPont Pavilion. Some members feel that the capacity of the pavilion is not sufficient with respect to the high demand for tickets, especially for concerts and popular basketball games such as the Georgetown game.

The committee recommended seeking permission from Radnor Township to expand the seating capacity. Aceto said the recommendation will be reviewed by the planning committee of the Board of Trustees.

Aceto did not believe, however, it would be acted upon at the present time.

A second recommendation concerns facility improvements. The committee feels that Villanova's athletic facilities should reflect the level of excellence it possesses as one of the top academic institutions in the east.

Infirmary requires overhaul

By LYNN PERDEK

The Administrative Committee researching the possibility of a new infirmary has established a definite need for a new facility on the Villanova campus, Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, said this week.

Neville stated, "The current facility is not adequate for our needs. Our numbers have increased dramatically [in recent years]."

Neville added that research concerning "the entire health and wellness of this campus" is being conducted in order to discover what the plans for a new infirmary should contain. Reports as to what should be included have

Additional housing sought

By CAROLYN R. MIRABILE

Rising problems with students living off-campus in Radnor Township this year have prompted the establishment of the New Dorm Committee, according to Phil Brach, Student Government's secretary of external affairs and a member of the committee.

Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice-president for Student Life, stated this week, "Our school is changing toward more resident students and, therefore, there is a need for more dorms. In addition, the off-campus problems are acting as a catalyst."

The new dorm committee will probably recommend to the Board of Trustees this month the construction of four new dorms, similar to St. Monica's and Katherine halls, according to Brach. He explained that two will probably be located on the South campus and two on the Morris estates behind St. Mary's Hall.

According to Joe Allman, Student Government president, "Corr and Alumni halls will be closed by 1989. Therefore, there is a need for two new dorms to accommodate the students who won't be able to live there anymore."

Brach explained that the two south campus dorms will probably

Church issues discussed by V.U. professors

By DANTE J. SCALA

Villanova professors interviewed listed the increased roles of laity and women, theological dissent and a more inclusive attitude as important issues in the Catholic Church today.

One issue, the increased participation of the laity, will become more important in the near future because of the predicted severe shortage of priests by the year 2000, said Gilbert Hoffman, religious studies professor.

Goal reached for Haiti

By JENNIFER REIDY

Special events, campaigns and liturgies raised almost $8,000 during the 1986 Hunger Awareness Week, Nov. 9-16.

All profits will sponsor the construction of a schoolhouse complex in Haiti, according to Barbara Haenn of Campus Ministry.

A check will be presented to the Rev. Lawrence Bohnen, a Dutch University professor-turned-missionary and Villanova's connection to the program in Haiti.

The money will be delivered in January during Campus Ministry's trip to Haiti, which will allow members of Campus Ministry and the Villanova student body to observe firsthand the effects produced by the fund-raising week.

The major events and their money totals include Fast Day, $3,400; collections from Masses at the Villanova chape, $3,000; Run for Hunger, $1,125; craft sale, $300. Other totals have not been established because pledges have not been received.

Hunger Awareness Week, which was co-chaired by senior Meg Lynch and junior Chris Duca, is an international program.

The Rev. Lawrence Bohnen of the Salesian Order is shown in Haiti next to the partically constructed school to be named after Villanova University for contributions amassed during Hunger Awareness Week.

Each year an area of the world is selected that is in particular crisis.

The goal of the week, which is in its 13th year, is to raise funds to better the condition of the area and its people as well as to awaken student consciousness to the problem.

Films, sermons at Masses throughout the week and a hunger banquet, which simulated a typical Haitian meal, provided opportunities for Villanova students to recognize and react to the crisis presented.

Hunger Awareness differs from other charity organizations such as C.A.R.E. in that the entire sum of money raised will be used to fight poverty, whereas others use part of their earnings for publicity and administrative purposes.

Campus Ministry organizes several trips to Haiti throughout the year. Students interested should contact the Campus Ministry Office in St. Rita's Hall.

Six graduates of the Villanova College of Arts and Sciences were recently honored for outstanding achievements in their specific fields at the Seventh Annual College of Arts and Sciences Alumni Medallion Awards Dinner. The winners of this year's awards are Dr. Gerald M. Lemole, Karen McDermott Chewning, the Rev. Michael J. Scanlon, O.S.A., Warren F. Kimball, Patrick J. Nolan and Paul F. LaMastra. Pictured here are Universtiy President the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., Scanlon, Chewning, Lemole, Nolan, Kimball, Alumni Director Robert J. Capone, the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, and Donald R. Creamer, president of the General Alumni Association.

Christmas festivities planned

Christmas festivities on the Villanova University campus will be highlighted by the 11th annual tree-lighting ceremony Dec. 10 at 5 p.m. at Kennedy Hall Plaza.

The 30-minute program will include carol singing, scripture readings and the tree-lighting. A reception in the Villanova Room in Connelly Center will immediately follow the ceremony.

The traditional Villanova Christmas Concert will feature the combined talents of the Villanova Singers and Women's Glee Club Dec. 13 at 7:30 p.m. in the St. Thomas of Villanova Chapel.

Each choral group will sing various Christmas carols to usher in the holiday season. The combined groups will perform John Rutter's "Gloria," scored for double chorus, brass octet and organ.

The Villanova Union has a number of activities scheduled during "Merry Christmas Villanova Week," beginning Dec. 3 at 5 p.m. with horse and buggy rides outside Dougherty Hall.

From Dec. 3 to 5, the Association of Commuting Students will hold a hat and stocking sale in the Connelly Center lobby.

In addition, a holiday bazaar featuring crafts and jewelry booths will be held Dec. 4 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Villanova Room in Connelly Center.

Computers stolen from Mendel Hall

Two new computers and additional computer equipment, valued at a total of $2,525, were reported stolen from a computer lab in Mendel Hall Nov. 3, Lt. John J. Harrity of Villanova Security said this week.

The two Zenith computers, two Brother printers and two monitors were still in unopened boxes when stolen, said Harrity.

The security department received a complaint from Dr. Hartmann of the department of mathematical science at 1:55 p.m. The items were taken sometime between 5 p.m. on Oct. 31 and 9 a.m. on Nov. 3.

Villanova security turned the case over to the Radnor Township Police Department.

According to Harrity, the computers' serial numbers were recorded on NCIC, a system which distributes the serial numbers to computer sales and repair firms in the event that the thieves surface with the stolen merchandise.

Priorities named for improvements

By SUSAN CORCORAN

At the Nov. 21 University Senate meeting, the Planning and Priorities Committee submitted their 1986-87 priorities for the 1987-88 budget, which included many areas of direct student concern.

Listed as high priorities for the new budget were proposals for the construction of two new dormitories by September 1988, the availability of more parking space, the upgrading of telephone services throughout campus, the renewal and replacement of dorm furniture, the provision of financial aid to students and the renovation of Vasey, Corr and Alumni halls.

These priority areas were proposed by the committee to the Senate after seven meetings of deliberation and were approved quickly. Phil Brach, member of the Planning and Priorities Committee and Student Government's secretary of external affairs, said, "It was evident that the committee did their job because there was little discussion on the listings."

The Rev. George F. Burnell, O.S.A. assistant to the president, said that most, if not all, of the priorities listed should find a place in the 1987-88 budget. He feels they are all important areas of concern and that once funded, "They will be done as soon as they can."

Many areas most directly related to students, such as the new dorms, phone systems and parking lots, will probably be "a few years down the road," according to Burnell, but, "They will all be addressed with equal concern."

Some of the priorities listed were not new concerns, but restatements of plans currently existing. These programs, such as the energy conservation program, the campus, safety program and the deferred maintenance projects will "appear for the next few years" as well, said Burnell.

Brach feels students will be pleased with the outcome of this year's priorities committee listings, such as the new parking facilities. Brach said, "We worked hard, and we expect it will pay off."

athletics should parallel those in the academic area of the University, such as the renovation of older buildings and the construction of new dormitories, said Aceto.

A list of improvements was compiled and submitted to PESUS (Physical Environmental Space Utilization System) for review. According to Aceto, PESUS is "a clearing-house for projects that need to be done on campus ... permission is needed first."

The list includes painting the fiberglass seats in the football stadium to alleviate seating discomfort and replacing the gutters on the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse. There is also a need for meeting rooms and additional weight rooms.

The formulation of a drug policy for the athletic programs is the committee's third recommendation.

The athletic department follows the University drug policy as stated in the Blue Book. Use or possession of marijuana results in disciplinary probation plus a fine and/or community service. The use or possession of cocaine and other "hard" drugs results in suspension or expulsion.

Aceto said the topic of drugs and drug use is dealt with by each individual coach for his team at the present time. The Athletic Advisory Committee wants a uniform code to be established for the athletic department.

Some possibilities for drug programs, as seen in other universities, might include drug education, testing for drug use and rehabilitation programs.

Aceto pointed out that some universities, such as Stanford University, have a code of trust. Each coach trusts his players not to use drugs. If a player is discovered to be using drugs, however, he must face the consequences.

Joe Allman, Student Government president, reported during a meeting with the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president, and selected members of the University Senate, that the subject of drug use and abuse has been discussed in National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), Big East and Yankee Conference meetings for many years.

The Drug Education Policy Committee formed at Villanova is researching all aspects of the problem. The direction in which the University will proceed is not known at this time.

Journalism urged in high school

A national commission recommended that credit for secondary school journalism be equivalent to that for other language arts courses and that journalism be an essential component in the high school curriculum.

After a two-year study that culminated during the Journalism Education Association's national convention in Chicago, the Commission asked for cooperation from education leaders, scholastic journalism associations and professional media groups in responding to the growing threats to high school journalism.

"High school journalism programs are at risk," said John Wheeler, Commission chairperson. "In the 1980s, journalism programs have been de-emphasized or eliminated. Others have experienced decreasing enrollments, loss of funding and a lack of administrative support, in part because of a misinterpretation of the 'back to basics' movement."

Wheeler, a former newspaper adviser from Lyons Township High School in LaGrange, Ill., pointed to an American College Testing (ACT) study showing that high school students rated journalism experience as more beneficial than that gained in other language arts courses.

In addition to testimonies regarding the values of quality journalism programs, the ACT research indicated that students with journalism/student publications backgrounds achieved higher ACT composite scores, exhibited greater proficiencies on standardized college writing tests and achieved higher freshmen college grade point averages.

The Commission also recommended that minimum standards for teacher preparation and course content be established.

"Colleges and universities need to do more to prepare teachers for careers in secondary journalism," he said. "Administrators and school boards must be willing to provide the physical and moral support necessary to sustain the programs. And the local media must become more involved in secondary journalism to insure that its potential benefits may be realized."

Whiskey Company competes

By SHARON M. NEUBAUER

Whiskey Company, Villanova's Marine R.O.T.C. drill and rifle squad, participated in its first competition of the year at the Cornell University Invitational Drill Competition on Nov. 22.

Drill teams from Boston University, Duke University, Cornell University, University of Michigan, Holy Cross College, Ohio State University, Penn State University and the University of Pennsylvania also took part in the competition.

The schools compete in four drill and rifle events. Two of the events are basic, one done with eight men and the other with a 16-man platoon.

The third event is a trick drill done with a 16-man platoon, similar to the performances during half-time at football games. The fourth is individual competition evaluated by elimination.

The outfit placed third in the trick drill, according to Mark Woelker, Midshipman 3rd Class Whiskey Company. He said, "This competition did not go as well as hoped."

The Cornell competition is the first of several competitions in which Whiskey Company will participate during the 1986-87 school year.

Office to be remodeled

By MEG KLUCSARITS

The Registrar's office has recently been undergoing renovations. David J. Smith, Registrar, stated that the office was laid out before the computer age. "There have been no changes in its appearance for 10 years and the current setup is slightly out of date," he said.

The purpose of the remodeling is to "work around modern office concepts," according to Smith. This includes providing a computer terminal at every desk rather than only a typewriter, which is the current situation.

Partitions approximately five- to six-feet high will divide the office space providing organization as well as versatility. The dividers are not permanent so that office space can be easily reorganized if the need arises, according to Smith.

In addition, the partitions will be used to contain electrical wires that are currently visible running under desks and around doorways. Not only will the office be more attractive, but tripping hazards will be reduced by removing wires from the floor, according to Smith.

Smith feels that most importantly, the students and staff will be served more efficiently with the greater access to computer terminals.

Church issues discussed

Binns.

She added that their "constructive dissent" offers alternatives, and in a world where more is known and learned about the human condition all the time, the church may have to search for different kinds of answers.

Wall questioned, "Within the church today, is it possible for dissension that flows from individual conscience, particularly in areas that are not infallible teachings of the church? Is that not part of the authority of the church?

"If we [the church] allow for differences of opinion on subjects that aren't infallible teaching, is this also not part of the growth and development of our response as a church to the world which we live in?"

She stated, "It seems that with Curran and other contemporary theologians, they ask us [the church] to examine sexual morality in a way that respects the sacredness and dignity of human sexuality, and at the same time, to address the changing values, needs and lives of people in relationship to one another."

Binns said, "It does seem clear that in their cases, both Curran and Hunthausen's approaches to pastoral ministry have been eminently compassionate when faced with difficult questions."

Both Binns and Wall agreed that the church needs to become more inclusive and compassionate. "The church of the future must be marked by compassion," said Binns.

Wall stated, "I think that the Pope is attempting to preserve a tradition that espouses the sacredness and dignity of all life, particularly human life and human sexuality.

However, I do think that we need to turn the human face of God in our ministry to minister to all of God's people without judgement and discrimination, and instead, with compassion and attempts to understand."

Wall also said that the church should be willing to listen to disciplines such as social science, medicine, psychology and sociology while forming its moral judgments.

She asked, "Is our church a church that excludes or includes people, especially those who are in need of support and help? What would Jesus say of Archbishop Hunthausen?

"When I think of some of the tension within the church ... I think the bottom line question is 'How would Jesus respond to each person, each situation, with an invitation to join him or with exclusion?' "

Binns commented that a more inclusive church is important to American Catholics. Since Americans experience an open and inclusive life, they need to experience their church life in the same way.

In the future, the church should be healing and reconciling, and accepting of the many differences among people, Binns said. "Otherwise, it will lose its power of attraction." She stated that it is already losing that attractiveness among young people.

"The church of the future will hopefully exhibit a concern for the major issues of our time," such as war and peace, justice and the need for men and women to work together in a non-competitive way," she said.

VILLANOVA'S GREEK OF THE WEEK

PATRICIA S. LIPTACK

Order of Omega salutes Tricia Liptack as this week's Greek of the Week! Tricia is a proud member of Delta Delta Delta sorority where she has been active since her freshman year, holding offices such as Panhellenic pledge representative, nominating committee, and collegiate-alumnae officer.

Not only is Tricia active in her own chapter, she has also served the entire Greek Community. She was Rush commission chairman, and was on the Rush committee as facilities chairman. "Lipper" has also been an Inter-Greek Council member, on the Easter Egg Hunt and Villanova for Africa committees, and her most prestigious accomplishment is treasurer of the Order of Omega. Her favorite part of Omega is teaching the famous "Omega handshake" to new initiates.

Being the active and energetic woman that she is, "T" doesn't limit herself solely to Greek activities. She has been striving to achieve all she believes as an orientation counselor for two years, has been an "enthusiastic" member of the Basketball Club for four years and is a mealchecker (Pit ... side door ... On a more personal note, Tricia enjoys "jammin," randomness, the Giants, Bruce and Kelly's on Friday afternoons. (Present this article to her today in Kelly's, tell her you read it, and she just might fill your glass!)

Stolen chalices found

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

The Radnor Township Police Department is currently investigating the theft of 22 gem-encrusted chalices and a crucifix from the basement of the Villanova Monastery. Thus far, 15 damaged chalices have been recovered and police "have a suspect in mind," according to Radnor Detective Jack Kelly.

The theft was reported to Villanova Security on Oct. 12 at 6:30 a.m. by the Rev. John J. Hagen, O.S.A., English professor.

Lt. John J. Harrity, Villanova security officer, stated, "Father Hagen reported that a serious crime had taken place. In an unlocked basement room at the monastery, 22 empty chalice cases were found."

Fifteen of 22 gem-encrusted chalices stolen from the Villanova Monastery were recently recovered in northwest Philadelphia.

The exterior doors to the monastery were locked by security guards at 11 p.m. the previous night, although the individual room was left open, said Kelly.

There was no evidence of forcible entry. Kelly suggested, "Possibly one of the doors was open or perhaps someone hid in there [prior to 11 p.m.]."

Kelly reported that he suspected the thief to be a person residing in the Roxborough section of northwest Philadelphia, and he notified the Philadelphia Police Department in the northwest section of the city to watch for the stolen chalices.

On Nov. 11, an individual found 15 of the chalices and brought them to the northwest Philadelphia Police, who then contacted Kelly the next day.

The recovered chalices reportedly were considerably damaged. Rubies and diamonds were pried from the gold-plated chalices, said Kelly.

The value of the chalices was estimated at $7,000.

Kelly said that the investigation continues and Radnor Police have hopes of recovering the remaining chalices and the crucifix.

The Rev. Owen R. Jackson, O.S.A. of the Center for Peace and Justice gave a speech on Liberation Theology in Chile as a part of Human Rights Day on Nov. 19.

Human Rights Day promotes awareness

By DEBBIE GROSS

Nov. 19 was declared Human Rights Day at Villanova. Amnesty International sponsored the writing of letters to free prisoners of concience throughout the world, and a speech was presented on Liberation Theology in Chile by the Rev. Owen R. Jackson, O.S.A., of the Center for Peace and Justice.

In his speech, Jackson addressed approximately 25 people about the problems in oppressed countries such as Chile and the reasons for their occurrences.

According to Jackson, liberation theology, common in Latin America, is a "critical analysis of the human condition in light of the Bible." This theology was developed by Paulo Freire in his book, Pedagogy of the Oppressed, said Jackson.

Liberation theology is based upon the "circle of proxis," stated Jackson, which is a process by which a person observes what is occuring in the human experience, finds reasons, such as fascism and militarism, for these problematic occurrences, and then views the problems in light of both Christian and Hebrew scriptures.

Infirmary to be improved been presented to the committee by the athletic department, the counseling service, infirmary officials and the drug and alcohol awareness program.

Proposed features for the new health care center include an expansion of clinical and examination areas, extended overnight facilities, a counseling center and athletic health facilities, according to Neville.

The committee is also gathering information on the most convenient location for a new building as well as the possibility of just constructing a new addition to the present infirmary, Middleton Hall. A major consideration, according to Neville, is the problem of finding a place to house the infirmary if it should be decided to build an addition or to construct an entirely new building on that site. He stated that an infirmary is a necessity on this campus.

Ideas are being considered about moving the infirmary to a more centrally located area or to one close to the athletic facilities.

When asked whether the plans for a new infirmary would be affected by the plans for new dormitories, Neville responded that a new infirmary is an independent need and is not related to any plans for building new dorms.

The Rev. George F. Burnell, O.S.A., assistant to the president, stated that none of the plans are definite and that any definite plans "will not be complete for several months." Neville hopes that the plans concerning location, costs, staff, what is to be included and who is to be in charge will be complete by this spring.

According to Student Government, no students have been officially involved with this committee up to this time, although students are expected to be appointed by the Student Government this week.

The infirmary is presently located on the west area of campus on Lancaster Avenue.

Protests greet O'Connor at Penn.

On a recent visit to the University of Pennsylvania, Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor was greeted by about 40 demonstrators protesting her human rights record.

O'Connor was at the university to preside over a moot court for the law school. She managed to avoid the demonstration, upon which she made no comment, by using a side door of the auditorium.

The demonstration was sponsored by the Penn Human Rights Coalition in conjunction with groups supporting abortion rights, rights of homosexuals and other minority groups. They agreed to restrict their activity to the auditorium's courtyard.

Protestors felt that O'Connor's human rights record is "against choice" in abortion and homosexual rights.

Grading changed at U. of Miami

A new grading system has been approved at the University of Miami under the recommendation of the Faculty Senate. The new system intends to assign the grade of A+ 4.0 quality points.

Dr. John Fitzgerald, chairman of the Academic Standards Committee, said that the Senate wants to reduce grade inflation and to restore meaning to A grades and elevate their value.

The Undergraduate Student Body Government (USBG) wanted to advocate 4.3 points to an A+ grade but it was not approved because the Senate felt it would be counterproductive to achieving its goals. The USBG was not happy with the grade evaluation given by the Faculty Senate.

According to a spokesman for the USBG, "Teachers should reduce grade inflation, not the grading system. We must attack the root of the problem. It is not the system which issues grades, it is the professors."

The University of Washington and the University of Pennsylvania assign 4.3 quality points to a grade of A+.

Student loan rates may rise

Under a recent government proposal, college students would pay a higher rate of interest on their federally-backed loans in exchange for a more flexible repayment schedule based on their post-graduation incomes.

In a speech at Catholic University, Education Secretary William J. Bennett said that the "income contingent" loans would not only ease the debt burden on college graduates, but would also keep down the cost of higher education. Bennett believes rising college tuition bills are due to the government's willingness to pay part of the cost.

The goal of Bennett's plan is to end federal subsidies of college loans. He announced a $5 million pilot project to test his idea next fall at 10 colleges yet to be selected.

Students who take Guaranteed Student Loans from banks would pay interest at the rate of 91-day Treasury bills plus three percentage points. The repayment schedule would require a low payment in the first two years after graduation and then adjust the amount based on the borrower's income.

Driscoll addresses University Senate

get it and where you can get it."

Commenting on the capital budget, he said, that though "Up to now it was not practicable for the Senate to be involved, [there is now] no reason why the Senate should not be involved [since this] relates to the priorities of the institution. Next year, [we'll] try to find a way to bring the budget to the Senate's attention."

Driscoll also spoke of the University's concerns and said, "The phase of intense planning and development in recent years ... is at rest ... much is accomplished. [We are now in] a new cycle ... more enthusiasm, broader vision, scale in scope is grander and the probabilities are myriad."

He said the first concern of the University is housing, which presents "complex difficulties."

Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president for Student Life, "would like to house 75 percent of undergraduates, where we currently house 50 percent," said Driscoll.

"We must provide housing for those who live in the community ... [to give] the friction with the community some relief," was his further comment.

The plans are for 800 to 1,000 additional beds, but no increase in enrollment, in response to an overall need for beds, which will result in three or four dormitory buildings, according to Driscoll.

The plans are to round out the residential complex developed in the south campus, said Driscoll. The south dining hall that opened this year can accommodate another 400 to 600 students.

He also said that while there are zoning problems on west campus, it is the most likely site for other new dormitories.

In a later interview, Phil Brach, a student on the dormitory committee, said west campus is "a definite possibility."

Brach said that the zoning problems were not as difficult as previously thought and that the land to the left of the rugby field would most likely be used, once rezoned.

He also said that Radnor Township admitted that any problems with sewerage was their responsibility and not the University's.

Driscoll also noted that academic facilities were needed. This requires additional construction or major renovation, perhaps converting existing buildings from dormitory facilities to academic use, including classrooms, laboratories and faculty offices.

Driscoll said the University was "moving as quickly as possible" on these needed developments.

He also said that a new health care facility was needed. Twenty million dollars is needed to satisfy this proposal and the University is "looking around for sources of funding."

Driscoll further stated that the University is examining its telecommunications system in the hopes of providing renovations not only in telephone service, but also in providing computer networking and new electrical circuiting.

"We hope to have all dorms and offices connected to a computer network," he said.

Driscoll said in summation of these plans that, "So many things are being pursued at the moment ... they are there, in the offing. So many things we've simply talked about in this room are now in place. [Our new plan is] more challenging, but we do believe it is doable."

After commenting on the success of Homecoming Weekend, Driscoll added this sentiment about his role, "One of the advantages of being president is that occasionally one can step back and view the University as a whole. The immediate reaction is one of pleasure, particularly when you see how many good people are working together to achieve [a common goal]."

Driscoll then thanked the Senate and wished them a happy Thanksgiving.

Dr. Rodger Van Allen, religious studies professor and faculty senator, questioned Driscoll on the definition of a long weekend, asking if his [Van Allen's] modified five-day Fall Break proposal "was in accord with the provisions."

Driscoll replied that, though, "You never say never, no, it was not. I would like to reconsult with the people it affects. My immediate reaction is negative. Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Monday doesn't serve a purpose. You're going to have to work hard to convince me."

He further said, "Come up with a full-week when it can be done ... [I'm] in favor of a full-week break, not ... a frolic-time."

After Driscoll left, the Senate commenced with its business. Some controversy arose on approval of the minutes, which read that the Fall Break plan stood only for the 1987-88 year. This provoked questions by the senators.

Patrick Connell, Law School senator, stated, "Technically the minutes proclaim this ruling [full-week] for solely next year."

He suggested to "amend the minutes to withdraw the year 1987-88 from the minutes, which corrects the minutes and leaves the issue for the future."

Faculty Senator Dr. Harry R. Strack, political science professor, objected, "Nothing's in error. The student body president should have presented his intent clearly at the time. This amendment changes the substance."

Dr. Angelo Armenti, Jr., an administration senator and dean of the University College, said, "The intent of the motion makes no mention of the year. Its implications are that it should begin with that particular year (1987-88). All references to the year should be removed."

Connell recalled that "The debate centered on future years ... it's best to lay the issue aside and approve the motion with the amendment."

Administration Senator Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, commented, "It doesn't matter. I think our intent [in approving the motion] was forever until we decide otherwise."

The minutes were approved with the amendment to strike "1987-88" from the resolution.

The Senate went on to mention the meeting with the executive committee of the Board of Trustees in passing.

New doors prompt student reactions

By CYNTHIA AGRESTA

A number of residents in Sheehan and Sullivan halls are reportedly upset that fire doors were recently placed in the ground floor of the residence halls. These doors, which students were told are required by law, cut off two rooms from the rest of the hall at each point where they were constructed.

The fire doors were installed shortly after students returned from Fall Break, and no prior word was said about them. Each of the upper floors in these dorms have fire doors, but the doors do not separate any of the rooms on the floors.

Kim Barnhardt, a sophomore resident living in one of the rooms which is cut off by the doors, finds them "irritating." She said, "We haven't had any doors all along, and I don't see the point in having them now."

Another question being raised by students is if these doors are supposed to act as protection from fire, how does this affect the rooms which have been partitioned off.

Frank Love of PESUS, the University construction department in charge of installing the doors, said that the doors were added at the request of the Office of Residence Life. The locations were specifically stated.

Love also commented that the purpose of any fire door is to direct people toward the exit of the building. Since the ground floors of both Sheehan and Sullivan have side door exits, the new fire doors do not impede residents from escaping in the case of a fire. Upper-floor residents, however, would have to evacuate by the central doors.

Fast Day raises $3,400

By TAMI PETER and SIOBHAN A. RODER

According to J. Les Gies, director of Food Services, 1,709 students gave up their lunch Nov. 13, as part of Campus Ministry's Hunger Awareness Week. Two dollars was donated by the Food Services department for each person who fasted on Fast Day for a total of $3,418.

Gies explained that although the Food Services department did not have to provide the meals during lunch for all those with meal plans who signed to give up their meal, the students "make up for it at dinner" or breakfast. He said that Villanova does not make a profit on the Fast Day, but rather probably loses money.

The money collected in all of the Hunger Awareness Week's activities will be used to build a school in Haiti for children which will be under the direction of the Rev. Lawrence Bohnen of the Salesian order, according to Samantha Sheridan, a student involved in Campus Ministry. The school will be named the Villanova University School.

Sheridan said that Bohnen has been working in Haiti for many years. He feeds 15,000 children each day. According to Bohnen's program, each child receives a noon meal if he/she attends school and wears a uniform consisting of a shirt and a pair of pants or a skirt.

Sheridan said that $6,000 was raised last year by Villanova University during Hunger Awareness Week. This amount was matched by a $6,000 pledge from a main line organizatiion.

New housing sought be built first. One would be for males and the other for females and they would house approximately 200 students each.

Two other dorms, which would house 300 students each, are also in the planning process for the Morris estates behind St. Mary's Hall.

According to Brach, the board is exploring the idea of building apartments. He said, "If new dorms were built behind St. Mary's they would have to build a new dining facility. Instead, the board is looking into building apartments in order to attract the older students and save money that would be spent on building the dining hall." He noted, though, that "It will cost more to build apartments, and they will take up more space and house less students."

Brach added, "Radnor has been more than cooperative with zoning, but the township residents are not that cooperative. The residents think that the new dorms mean growth, but by building the dorms Villanova is trying to get the students out of the neighborhoods and back on campus."

Grants for engineers available

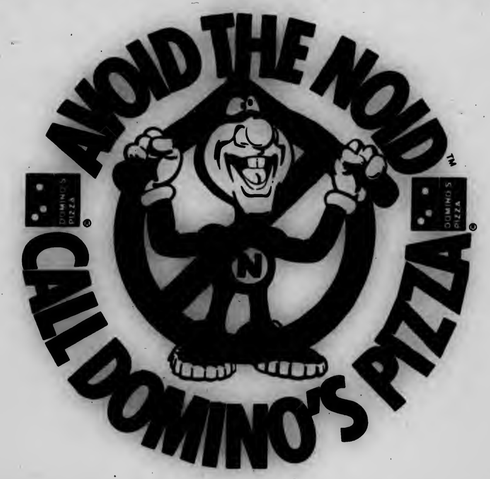
A new program which will give undergraduate engineering students and recent graduates grants based on creative ideas submitted in a research plan and not solely on academic achievement has been announced by the National Science Foundation (NSF).

The program, titled "Creativity Awards in Graduate Engineering," is designed to make graduate study more attractive and to improve the quality of engineering education by encouraging creative activities.

"One of the unique strengths of the United States in international competition is the ability to innovate and it is important that students with this talent be induced to attend graduate school to maximize their effectiveness as engineers of the future," said Nam P. Suh, NSF's assistant director for engineering.

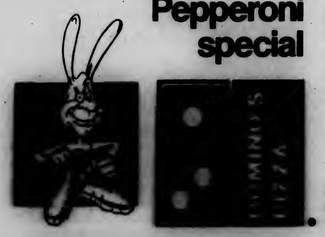
Normally, awards for graduate support such as the NSF graduate fellowships are based on academic achievement. These new creativity awards will support students based on their ideas as embodied in a plan of research."

Approximately 30 grants per year will be awarded competitively to students, whether they are still undergraduates or have graduated in the last three years and have not done graduate work.



Grants will be for up to $30,000 a year for up to three years and could be used to produce a graduate thesis. The grant will go to the student's institution and will provide an annual stipend of $11,100 plus tuition and fees as well as funds for research.

To apply, a letter should be sent to NSF by Feb. 1 describing the research idea. Full information on what should be in the letter is available from the office of the dean of engineering.



The application is evaluated by a review panel. The grant is portable and is conditional on the awardee accepted into a graduate school.

Students seeking more information should call (202) 357-9834.

Housing options must stay open

The New Dorm Committee will probably recommend to the Board of Trustees this month the immediate construction of four dorms similar to St. Monica's and Katharine, according to Phil Brach, Student Government secretary for external affairs and a member of the New Dorm Committee. This recommendation, although extremely necessary and long overdue, should not preclude the possible construction of on-campus apartments in the future.

At this time, however, several factors make the decision to provide 1,000 new beds as soon as possible the best choice.

The 1989 closing of Corr and Alumni residence halls because of new fire codes is just one of the reasons necessitating quick construction.

Recent legislation by Radnor and other surrounding townships has also forced Villanova to provide more on-campus housing for students. This legislation limits the number of unrelated people allowed to live in one household. At the same time, it causes a great deal of inconvenience for out-of-state students who need a place to live.

Therefore, the addition of as many beds as possible is certainly the best choice for now. Further down the line, though, apartments will be necessary in order to keep junior and senior students on campus.

Juniors and seniors usually prefer the freedom of living in apartments. On-campus apartments could provide that freedom. Residents from surrounding townships would also be satisfied with on-campus apartments because students would, therefore, not disrupt their neighborhoods.

So, certainly it is necessary to hold the idea of apartment construction for now. But University officials must realize that apartments are a viable choice for the future and should not be ignored.

The perfect gift

As Christmastime fast approaches on the heels of final exams, many face the unenviable task of shopping for Christmas presents during the next-to-the-last-minute shopping rush. We might all do well to pause and reflect for a moment — not on what to buy for Aunt Martha or what to get for the father who has everything — but instead on the value of what we can give to family and friends at this holiday time.

The numbers reported on Christmas sales are staggering. Last year, Americans spent $27 billion on Christmas gifts. Some merchants expect to make between one-third and one-half of their yearly sales in November and December.

While many decry the commercialization of Christmas, those who advocate abolishing the marketing of Christmas and junking Santa Claus go to the extreme. Our concern should not be that people give gifts, but rather that they give gifts of thought instead of expensive gifts of obligation.

While no one can judge the appropriateness of a gift, perhaps it is best to consider what would be most appreciated by the receiver. The ultimate worth of a gift is not in its dollar value, but in the sacrifice made and the joy given. An elderly relative might enjoy an afternoon spent with a companion more than another knick knack. A mother might be elated about a day free from chores so that she can go shopping or relax.

Much of the stress that we feel at Christmas comes from the pressure to give something — anything — when in fact the best gift may be something that does not come in a box.

Perhaps the greatest gift givers are those who look on their presents as symbols, realising that the greatest gifts are time, concern and love, and continue all year-round.

Lip-It actors displayed cruelty

To the Editor:

The Resident Student Association (RSA) did a fine job in putting together the 1986 Lip-It competition. Much hard work went into this event, which raised money for a great cause, cystic fibrosis, and provided students with a night of entertainment.

I must comment, however, on the cruelty and insensitivity displayed in the winning act, "YMCA" by The Village People, at the competition.

It was disappointing to see that people would stoop so low as to put on an act in such bad taste. The skit ridiculed homosexuals, playing on the stereotypical, affected mannerisms that are often attached to homosexuals.

What was just as disappointing as the act was the fact that the audience loved it. The audience did not appear to even blink an eye at the injustice done in this skit. In fact, they wanted more.

Classical mythology posits that the end of mankind will come when people are no longer angered by injustice.

A letter to the editor in The Philadelphia Inquirer on Nov. 21 noted that, "Homosexuals are the last group it's still OK to hate." Well, to the dismay of some Villanovans I am sure, it is not okay to hate homosexuals.

Homosexuals are no less human beings than any other group of people and should be accorded the respect given to all other people. It was not too many years ago when Catholics were treated in this same manner.

It would be not only a repeat of the cruelty and insensitivity to homosexuals, but also an embarassment to the University if this group performed the same act at the intercollegiate competition. A suggestion for them might be to refine the act, taking out all of the homosexual overtones, or withdraw from any further competition.

It is my hope that someday we will look back at this type of behavior in disgust and wonderment in how we could have tolerated it.

Jews and Arabs unite in a cause

By SUSAN E. TOLVE

It is a classic case of irony. At the same time that violence flared between Arabs and Jews in Jerusalem, Jewish and Arab organizations in the United States banded together in filing "friend-of-the-court" briefs.

On Nov. 15, Eliahu Amedi, a 22-year-old Jewish student was stabbed to death in Jerusalem. He was returning to the Birkhat Avraham yeshiva when he was attacked from behind. Three Arabs, identified as members of a PLO faction, have been arrested and charged in the killing.

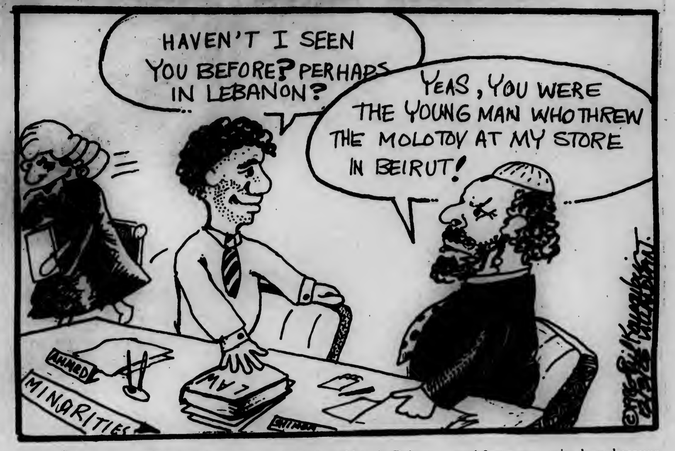
Jews quickly returned the violence, beginning at Amedi's funeral procession. Mourners threw stones at homes and cars and set fire to a truck.

The animosity grew as Arab houses were torched with "Molotov cocktails." About 1,000 Jews chanted "Death to Arabs!" and "We want revenge!" Several Arab shops were damaged and a few Arabs were beaten.

Hundreds of Israeli police, soldiers and border guards on duty stepped in. Most Arabs played it safe by keeping out of sight. Some even left Jerusalem to stay with relatives, and many shopkeepers closed down their businesses.

According to the Philadelphia Inquirer, a Palestinian reopening his shop for the first time in four days said that peace with the Jews was out of the question because Allah did not want it. He said the reasons could be found in the Koran.

Chanoch Ben-Arza did not see much hope for the future either. This owner of a Hebrew bookstore said "On the outside, OK, we live together, but inside we have a problem. Jews don't like Arabs and Arabs don't like Jews."



Maybe Ben-Arza should be informed about a recent action of Arabs and Jews in America. They seem to like each other. An Arab-American organization is supporting Jews whose synagogue was desecrated and Jewish leaders support an Iraqi college professor who was denied tenure.

The groups have united in a common goal: convincing the Supreme Court that they are protected under the Civil Rights Act of 1866. They hope to prove that this post-Civil War statute protects not only blacks from racial discrimination, but also Jews, Arabs and other white minorities.

On Nov. 20, the organizations filed "friend-of-the-court" briefs asserting that the discriminations they have suffered are racial in character, even though they are white. Therefore, they believe that they should be allowed to sue racial bigots under the 1866 statute.

A federal appeals panel in Richmond dismissed a suit against men desecrating a synagogue because Jews are not non-whites. A court in Philadelphia, however, allowed Associate Professor Majid G. Al-Khazraji to pursue his racial suit against St. Francis College. The Supreme Court has agreed to review both cases of discrimination.

Discrimination should not be tolerated in the United States — whether it is aimed at whites or non-whites is insignificant.

A synagogue spray-painted with such phrases as "Death to the Jude" and "In, Take a Shower, Jew" is clearly discriminatory. Therefore, regardless of the color of their skin, Jews should be allowed to pursue their case.

The court will issue a ruling next year. Eric Schnapper, a lawyer for the NAACP legal Defense fund proposed that the groups support each other.

According to the Philadelphia Inquirer, Schnapper said, "It won't solve the problem in Beirut, but it's going to generate a certain amount of good will here."

Schnapper is right. Obviously the deep-rooted differences between Arabs and Jews are not going to disappear. It would be nice (but clearly unrealistic) to believe that the Arabs and Jews in Jerusalem will drop their knives and "Molotov cocktails" and follow the examples of those in America.

Some people may think Arabs and Jews can unite here because the "great melting pot" encourages such action.

Actually they are only combining forces in order to reach a common goal. Each group still has its vested interests at heart. But perhaps working together will make each side see that the "others" aren't so bad after all.

Reagan should meet with peace march participants

By JOSEPH P. FORD, ROBERT D. O'BRIEN, L. PAUL DORSEY, WILLIAM FERDINANDSEN and STEPHEN EID

We are writing because we are very disturbed by President Reagan's recent action, or should we say, his recent lack of concern for a large group of American people. On Nov. 15, the Great Peace March for nuclear disarmament ended with a rally in front of the White house and a demonstration at the Lincoln Memorial.

These people walked nearly 4,000 miles for a cause they truly believed in. They met many people across this diverse nation and saw how the American public feels about nuclear weapons. Public awareness was raised worldwide as a result of this march.

When a professional or college sports team like the Villanova basketball team of 1985 for example, wins a national championship, Reagan will usually have them as guests in the White House.

The peace marchers triumphed against overwhelming odds and accomplished something many said was impossible. Nine months of their lives were freely sacrificed for an important cause — world peace.

They requested only one small thing of the president. They asked him to meet with a small delegation from their group to talk about what they had seen and learned and their feelings on nuclear weapons. Reagan did not even acknowledge their existence.

The peace marchers are everyday Americans who care about our future, about our children's future. Some may be radicals, but many are mothers and fathers who left their families in the hope that their voices would be heard.

It seems that Reagan has forgotten that he is a public servant accountable to the American people. These people are shouting out to him, but there is no response.

The president says the Soviets are our greatest enemies, an "evil empire." The Soviets are people, human beings who love their families and homes, who want peace as much as the American people. Why should a few high-level government leaders like Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev hold the fate of the world's children in the palms of their hands?

Gorbachev made a proposal in Reykjavik, take it or leave it. For the first time in history, the Soviet Union was willing to make concessions concerning nuclear weapons. Granted, there was propaganda involved, but by unequivocally rejecting it, Reagan let an opportunity pass that may never occur again. After all, what good is Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) without nuclear weapons?

The United States of America has always tried to be the best. We claim to stand for truth, justice and freedom. We claim to want world peace, yet continue to prepare for war.

Between the Soviets and ourselves, the world's nuclear arsenals are escalating to incredible levels. The American public was promised that by increasing our arsenals, we would increase our security.

We are no more secure now that we were 10 years ago. World tension is not being reduced, it is increasing to the breaking point.

Reagan should stop for one second of his "valuable" time and look at the issue from a different angle. He should listen to the voices of his fellow Americans, his fellow human beings. We should take the initiative and make a legitimate proposal. Trust has to begin somewhere.

Imagine a nuclear-free future. Think about children who have nothing to worry about except living. Are nuclear weapons really worth it.

In the History of Man there has never been a weapon built that was not used. Does Reagan really believe nuclear weapons are any different? Does anyone?

It's time the president started listening to the poeple, or, at the very least, acknowledging their existence.

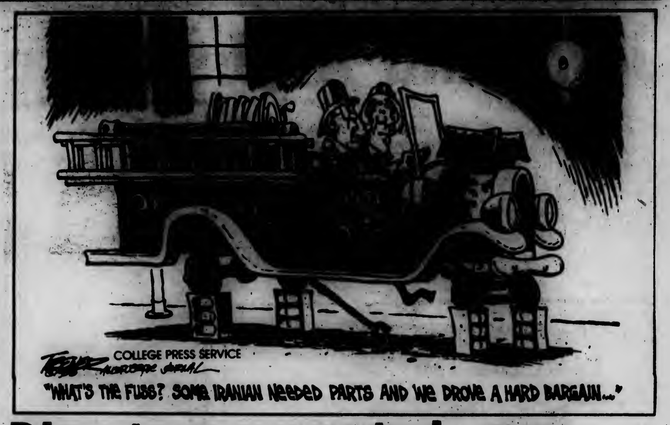
Students need to respect neighbors

To the Editor:

On Nov. 28, an article appeared in The Philadelphia Inquirer entitled, "Main Line grumbles about Villanova rowdies."

This article was just one of many concerning student off-campus behavior. Once again it was the actions of a small minority of Villanovans which gained this negative publicity for the University.

The article described the Villanova students as disrespectful to the surrounding communities by having loud parties every weekend, urinating on lawns and littering on the front of property.



It is up to the students to protect their own reputation as well as that of Villanova University. We can do this by simply respecting ourselves and our neighbors.

It is up to the students to protect their own reputation as well as that of Villanova University.

If a student sees another student littering on someone else's property he should tell him to pick the trash up or pick it up himself.

Also students should not disturb neighbors with loud noise at unreasonable hours. As students we do have a right to have fun, but we have to realize that the rights of our neighbors must be considered at all times.

Lip-It performers commended by RSA

To the Editor:

The RSA would like to thank all who participated and worked at Lip-It '86. It was a huge success. We raised over $500 for the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation with over 1,200 Villanova students in attendance. From the sounds of the crowd, everyone seemed to have had a great time.

All acts should be commended on their hard work and professionalism. We would especially like to congratulate the winners, "The Village People," who performed Y.M.C.A. like the originals. We would also like to commend the second and third place winners, "The Generic Heads," "The Gap Band," and "Devo" for their effort and enthusiasm.

Special thanks goes out to all the House Council members who put their time and effort into helping us make Lip-It '86 the success that it was. Also, thanks to the judges for their objectiveness and ability in rating the acts.

Directory expected soon

To the Editor:

As mentioned briefly, in last week's issue of the Villanovan, the arrival of the Student Directory will be delayed. Upon return from Christmas Break, you will have it in your hands.

Its delay is because of the tremendous amount of work which its organizing entails. Upon completing the distribution of the 10,000 copies, we will evaluate our efforts of this year and attempt to create a permanent system which will ensure greater reliability.

Hopefully, this year's efforts will establish, once and for all, the directory as an integral and essential aspect of the Villanova student life.

When it does arrive, the immediate benefits of the directory will be most obvious. For the students it will no doubt serve as a guide both beneficial and indispensible. However, like so many other things of such value, there is much more to it than its immediate benefits.

We feel this year has been a landmark year for student governance at Villanova University. However, we still have a long way to go, and the directory is part of this effort.

In this effort we would like to extend special thanks to Cathy Connor, assistant registrar, and everyone else in the Registrar's Office for their tremendous help and kindness. Thanks are also due to our advertisers for their support and understanding of the delay. Lastly, a special thanks is in order to the students for their continual support and their patience.

Good luck on final exams, enjoy your Christmas break, and expect your 1986-87 Student Directory just in time for the beginning of 1987.

Hubbert adds confusion

To the Editor,

If we are to believe Fr. Hubbert, the confusion that has arisen around the question of homosexuality is the result of a mass ignorance of the truths of biology. Obviously, this is not the case.

As wars and science cut down myth after myth as to the inherent goodness of western, Christian man and his creations, the Eastern world he conquered from without has begun to conquer him spiritually from within Western man has been forced to accept the truths of other cultures and religions as equally as valid as his own.

Men like Fr. Hubbert only add to the moral confusion of our day through their modern application of a medieval system of thought, a system of thought which was developed by a people who believed themselves to be the chosen people of God dwelling in the center of the universe.

"Illogical" people, homosexual or not, whose existence is not allowed for by this system of thought, (which Fr. Hubbert subscribes to) will not suddenly disappear in a Cartesian puff of smoke. They are already at the doorsteps of our universities, and it is they who will teach us the truth.

Main-Liners lack open-mindedness

To the Editor:

Recent articles in the Philadelphia Inquirer, Delaware County Daily Times and Main Line Times have done a wonderful job of detailing local residents' problems with Villanova students living in their communities, but those articles did a conspicuously poor job of presenting the students' side of the story.

The Inquirer and Delco Daily Times obviously know that the advertising money does not lie with students, and it would be most unreasonable to expect fair, objective and competent reporting from the Main Line Times, but these bastions of democracy are ignoring students' rights and perspectives just as blatantly as are Main Line residents, their commissioners and their police departments, which are set up to work against us.

First of all, the Main Line is a very wealthy and insular community — and residents want it to stay that way. A great many Main-Liners view students as intruders who do not understand their problems and do not belong here.

It is also conveniently overlooked that the Main Line has a reputation as a notoriously "uptight," conservative and intolerant part of the world with an incredibly high cost of living.

If students are as contemptible and law-breaking as we are made out to be, then the Main Line would have burned down long ago. Just from personal experience, it would seem that, on the average, students far exceed Main-Liners in manners, attitude and tolerance levels, but that is not really saying a great deal.

The unreasonable housing laws that exist in Haverford, Radnor and Lower Merion illustrate the general situation perfectly. Because of these "zoning regulations that apply to everybody," students can be fined and evicted just for living together.

How wonderfully American! This more closely resembles the Soviet Union; the instigators of this policy have managed to forget that they live in an alleged democracy and must deal with some of the inherent problems of such a political system.

Obviously, Villanova students are far from innocent on all counts, and they do cause problems. But punishing the excesses of youth with arrests, fines and evictions seem quite severe. In some communities, such as Ardmore, students and residents generally coexist peacefully, and even like and respect each other. Ardmore, however, is the rare exception.

This letter was not intended to imply that all students are free from guilt, nor was it intended to condemn all Main Line residents. But it is about time that students had their point of view presented; Main-Liners have had their say, and continue to dominate the issue.

Until Main Line residents learn the arts of tolerance and open-mindedness, this classic but ugly example of town-and-gown conflict will only grow worse.

Villanovan lacks Catholic viewpoint

To the Editor:

Your article on so-called "controversy" in the "American Church" was disappointing. Rather than provide a platform for the promulagation of the errors of the dissidents, it would be refreshing to find a Catholic newspaper which supports Catholic Doctrine and the Church Magisterium.

I hope that in the future your publication will reflect a more authentic Catholic expression.

Students cheat

To the Editor:

Remember back in high school when teachers warned, "Some of you will be in for a rude awakening in college. You cannot get away with cheating there." Well they were wrong.

Cheating does take place on many college campuses, and Villanova is no exception to the rule.

I have no statistics on the exact number of cases that occur each semester. But what I do have are ears — ears that have heard the following statements during my three years at Villanova:

"You have to cheat in the business school. Everyone does."

"Sit in front of me in the "Cheatatorium" and we can compare answers."

"Quick, what is the answer to number 11?"

Since seeing is believing, I can add that I have seen some people write cheat sheets and others with "rubber necks" checking out a classmate's answers.

Many students opt for a "milder" form of cheating — the sorority and fraternity files. Old tests can be useful study tools. But why do professors keep giving the same tests year after year? Word of which previous test is being given often seeps out. Then students memorize multiple choice answers instead of reading their book.

There is also a large number of papers that are resubmitted under a new name. I will always remember one girl's statement. "Do you believe the nerve of my professor? He gave me a B+ when the guy I copied it from got an A. That proves he is unfair."

Cheating does take place on many college campuses, and Villanova is no exception.

What motivates students to cheat? The almighty Cum! (cumulative grade point average).

True this can be important in getting into graduate school or obtaining a job. But I do not think it is worth compromising your morals.

My high school teachers always said, "If you cheat, you are only hurting yourself." Here again they were wrong.

Parents who pay $12,000 a year for their son or daughter to gain an education are hurt. Teachers who try to teach their students are hurt. Fellow students who are honest are hurt when grades are curved. And cheaters cheat themselves out of a college education.

As a higher institution of learning, Villanova cannot ignore this problem. Teachers need to clamp down. Students need to hit the books.

In nine days, finals week at Villanova will begin. During this harrowing experience, we should all remember that yes, there are more important things in life than a high cum.

Trevor: Working with the homeless

By STACEY WILKINS

On 5th and Moravian Streets, outside the exclusive Union League of Philadelphia, a bearded figure in grimy clothes is huddled over a street gate trying to keep warm.

A young boy is placing a blanket over him as his parents nervously look on. He walks up to his parents and says, "Can we come back again?" This was the beginning of 11-year-old Trevor Ferrell's campaign for the homeless.

The project began when relatives, neighbors and friends donated extra coats, blankets, gloves and pillows. When people found out what Trevor and his family were doing, help began to spring from everywhere.

The television news and local papers began to pick up on what was happening and the Ferrells, of Gladwyne, Pa., began to receive letters and donations from all over the world.

Trevor was mentioned in President Reagan's State of the Union Address. He received an award from the John Rogers Foundation. The same award was given to Mother Teresa and Mahatma Gandhi (after his death).

This past spring he was appointed United Nations spokesperson for North America by the executive director of the United Nations Center for Human Settlements.

In August, he attended a world conference in Nairobi and Oct. 6, Habitat Day, he spoke to the United Nations General Assembly.

Trevor's campaign for the homeless will be celebrating it's three-year anniversary this December.

There are some people at Villanova responsible for Trevor's successful campaign for the homeless. In fact, while most of us are participating in the Friday night ritual at Kelly's, these volunteers bear all temperatures and difficulties to provide the homeless people of Philadelphia with a meal.

Lead by the Rev. John Ryan, the campaign gets help from faithful volunteers Dave Gurlack, Julie Gargula, Sue Maher, Garry Smith, Ann Marie Watson and Nancy and Sally Worley. These volunteers dedicate every Friday night to feeding the homeless.

Trevor Ferrell lends a helping hand to the street people of Philadelphia.

The night begins by driving to Trevor's home in Gladwyne to load up the vans with food and donated clothing. The group then drives to Philadelphia neighborhoods where the need is greatest.

Contrary to popular belief, the homeless are not a bunch of drunken bums who will rudely grab the food and stagger away. These people are coherent men and women who are thankful for food donations. They enjoy talking about their lives and experiences.

One prevailing reason for their

1200 attend Lip-It benefit

By FRANK ORZECHOWICZ

On a cold and rainy Nov. 20, over 1,200 students made their way to the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse to be a part of LIP-IT'86. Lip-It is an annual event held to benefit the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation.

Cystic Fibrosis is an inherited disease that is the number one genetic killer of children and young adults. The foundation attempts to brighten the outlook for Cystic Fibrosis victims and hopes to eventually find a cure for this disease.

Eighteen acts participated in Lip-It, and all showed a great deal of hard work. The acts ranged from "My Adidas" by Run-D.M.C. to "Lola" by The Kinks.

First place went to The Village People's "Y.M.C.A.," performed by Brian Coughlin, Jay Coughlin, Steve DeAngelis, Martin Healy, Steve Iandola, Tim Malia and John O'Hara.

Second place went to "Once in a Lifetime" by The Talking Heads. It was performed by Heather Dora, Chris Fleming, Paul Lanza, John Lyons, Tony Marino and Karen Peterkin.

Third place was a tie between "Whip It" by Devo and "You Dropped a Bomb on Me" by The Gap Band. "Whip It" was performed by Johnny LaMonica, Carl Schwind, Mike Seeger, Brian Selfors and Steve Selfors. "You Dropped a Bomb on Me" was performed by Kevin Crego, Barbara Keating, Kate Malarkey and Brian Vezina.

All the acts showed a great deal of preparation. "Walking in the Rain," performed by Phil Bannister, Sean Gildea, Beth Glass, Kathy Kolon, Tricia Liptack, Larry Sullivan and Amy Zlotnik had very good lighting effects and displayed well-planned choreography.

Performers also varied in the delivery of their acts. Some succeeded in producing performances which were exact replicas of their videos, as did the group performing "Addicted to Love" by Robert Palmer.

On the other hand, some groups tried presenting their song in a completely different manner than the usual way, such as the groups performing "Lola" and "You Dropped a Bomb on Me."

Judging of the acts was based on four criteria: appearance, originality, lip-sync and audience reaction. This difficult task was placed in the hands of the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of students, the Rev. Peter Donohue, O.S.A., of the theatre department, Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities, Noreen Cameron of Campus Ministry and Dr. Richard Welch of the communication arts department.

The Emcees for the evening were Michael DeRosa and Steve Ryan. Unlike the performers, who had to plan out their acts and practice them to letter-perfection, the Emcees were asked to be as spontaneous as possible.

"Our opening act and a few others were worked out ahead of time, but a good deal of the skits we did were spontaneous. Some of the things I did I didn't know I would do until two minutes before I walked on stage," commented DeRosa. "The quality of the acts was very high. We were very pleased, overall, with the night."

Lip-It was sponsored and organized by the Resident Student Association (RSA). The RSA received an award of appreciation from the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation prior to the beginning of the acts.

The man who launched Encore

By SHARON KELLY

A familiar face on campus is absent this semester. It is the face of Howard Boyd, 75, a student here for over 10 years. Boyd died last spring at Bryn Mawr Hospital.

Many of you may remember Boyd as the friendly man who sat at a large table just inside Belle Air Terrace at lunchtime each day. But he didn't sit alone. Friends of all ages — faculty and students — joined him for a lively hour of conversation and storytelling.

"Howard was a great storyteller — especially stories about his experiences in World War II," recalled Joe Carroll, a close friend and fellow student.

Because they were on opposite sides of the "political fence" — Carroll being a staunch Democrat and Boyd an equally staunch Republican — the two shared many hours of heated debate. "I used to tell Howard that there are only two unforgivable sins, and one of them is being a Republican," he joked.

But Boyd will be remembered for much more than conversation and war stories. He was a dedicated member of the Villanova community, who touched the lives of many diverse people. He had friends among the faculty, administration, employees and students.

"Howard's love and concern for people knew no barriers — not age, color, religion or social background. He reached out to everyone," said Dr. Angela Cerino, a business law professor who knew Boyd for a number of years.

As a senior citizen student, Boyd understood the problems faced by older adults returning to the classroom. His wife, Pat, explained "Howard was hesitant to come to Villanova because he was afraid the students would not accept him. But he decided to give it a try anyway." Boyd found that he fit in very well, and that both students and faculty appreciated the insight and life experience he brought to the classroom.

Mrs. Boyd, who also took classes here, believes that her husband benefited from the college environment. "Attending Villanova challenged him to grow mentally, and interacting with young people kept him feeling young." Boyd earned a certificate in criminology and had over 120 credits in the liberal arts and sciences curriculum.

condition is that many of these men are Vietnam veterans who have been unable to escape the trauma suffered in Vietnam.

There is a great diversity among the homeless. They are not all single, old men. There are young women, married couples and even families with young children.

The transition from the street to self-sufficient lives is not an easy one. Trevor and his campaign workers recognize this fact and provide a temporary home at Trevor's Place, an old hotel donated to the campaign by a local church. In this house, he hopes to shelter up to 100 of the city's homeless until they are ready to go out on their own.

Trevor Ferrell, at age 11, founded a campaign to help Philadelphia's homeless.

Trevor needs your help. The media has helped the movement but has hurt it also. Many people are under the misconception that the campaign has sufficient funds. "We get a lot of publicity but little money," said Ryan.

Ryan continued "We especially need men's socks and winter overcoats."

Donations for Trevor's campaign for the homeless can be brought to Campus Ministry. For further information, call Ryan at 645-7500.

Erstwhile Villanovan Dr. Christopher Sharrett is returning to his old stomping grounds this Monday evening when he addresses post-modernism in the black comedy "After Hours," a Martin Scorsese film, for the Cultural Film Series.

A Doylestown native with a bachelor's degree in English from La Salle College, Sharrett was a fixture here in the '70s, first as a student in the theatre department's master's degree program and then as an adjunct instructor in that department. He is currently an assistant professor and chair in the media studies department at Sacred Heart University in Connecticut.

While his doctorate from New York University is in film studies, Sharrett's interest are eclectic and include theater, politics, philosophy and literature.

He is a believer in the old European tradition of teaching, which integrates various disciplines into a comprehensive course of study. He feels a scholar trying to compartmentalize his or her particular discipline "is really wrong."

Sharrett has been satiating his creative urges by completing a book on postmodernism in the cinema and writing articles for scholarly journals. He does not dismiss the idea of producing a screenplay in the future, but Hollywood is no lure for him; he has "no plans to turn out soap operas," for example.

One of Sharrett's areas of scholarship is the horror genre in films — what the French term "cinema fantastique." Sharrett is taken with the "sense of turmoil and rage expressed" in these movies.

He feels there has been "a gradual diminishing ... of the monster" in horror films. Instead of "an other, an exterior force," such as alien invaders and creatures from the deep, Sharrett invisions man-made horrors, "the eternal monster within [all of] us," explored in works such as "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and "Psycho."

David Cronenberg's recent hit film "The Fly" certainly qualifies as a tale of horror. Sharrett cites it as a tragedy of "mythic dimensions ... very dolorous" and filled with "pathos." He also points to the movie's subtext, which explores the horror of slowly dying of an affliction, be it an improbable genetic screw-up, as in "The Fly," or from cancer or AIDS.

Another arena of interest for Sharrett is the phenomenon of postmodernism. While many of us may associate the term with the contemporary architecture of Michael Graves and Robert Venturi, it is a pervasive trend throughout the arts, permeating

Campus Ministry Perspective

Understanding the season

By LINDA JACZYNSKI

Advent is said to be a time of expectant waiting. Yet, I find that one of the things I do poorly and most reluctantly is wait. I hate waiting in lines, and getting stuck in traffic jams. I do not like waiting through a process of discernment before I can see clearly enough to make a decision.

I am sometimes impatient for love to grow and change and ripen. But how much easier my life could be if I was disciplined enough to enjoy waiting. So much of what is in our everyday life encompasses waiting.

We wait for new understanding, new meaning and deeper love. Our Advent waiting is no different. We anticipate Christmas, where we celebrate the fact that God has revealed God's self to us in a brand new way.

In the birth of Jesus Christ, God speaks to us using body language. God who is incomprehensible mystery is now flesh and blood before our very eyes. That which was always beyond us, is given to us in intimacy and friendship.

We as human beings are very dependent upon body language. There is often so much said in a hug, a wink, a kiss, posture and physical proximity that cannot be expressed fully in other ways.

We note the difference between having a phone conversation and being face to face with someone. In a phone conversation we can hear words, but we are missing the facial expression, proximity, non-verbal expressions, and there is the absence of touch. All of those are so important to us in expressing intimacy and friendship.

Our God realized our need for body language, and so became human just like us. Our God wanted to touch us, heal us, eat with us, cry, give thanks and express love. The incarnation gave us a whole new wealth in our ability to understand God. God is no longer a "God above us," but has chosen to be a "God with us." Mystery has become visible in a way we can understand more fully.

These were times of confusion and uncertainty, when I was so much "in the middle of it all" that I could not see or understand with any clarity. Then, through a word or event, everything became visible in a new way. I can grasp what has been happening and how God has been working with me. This is a "Christmas event."

The Christmas event is a very joyous celebration. But before it comes, there is waiting. How well do we wait? Is there a quality to our waiting, or is it simply empty time which we anxiously fill up so that we can be done with it?

Exams are coming for us, and do we let this subtle pressure and procrastination make us anxious and overwhelmed, or do we simply prepare and trust that our everyday energies and work will come to fruition in good grades?

This new depth of concrete and visible understanding is what we wait for. I think of the times when I instinctively knew that God was working in my life, but nothing "came together" in a way that I could understand. I knew this especially during crisis points: times of change or stress, dry periods, transition points.

Waiting well means letting go so that we do not get weighed down. If we place pressure on ourselves that everything depends on us, then we bring about our own hell. But if we can trust in the power of God's loving kindness, then we can relax and know that all works together for good.

As we wait we can prepare for that which we wait. God comes to us at Christmas, but God is also already with us. We can prepare by opening ourselves up for God to live and love in us.

When we truly love someone, we affirm and expect greatness in them. This time of waiting is a time of expecting. It is God affirming, expecting and encouraging our greatness. It is a time of great hope for us because God has touched us and we know that will continue. When we go through the day, we can expect God to do great things in us, through us, with us and for us.

Let us embrace waiting as time of letting go, preparing, expecting. It is from the longing for and working toward what is "not yet" that dreams and challenges are made.

pop art and music videos, for instance. Sharrett characterizes postmodernism as "a general cultural climate," a "pastiche" of past art movements that has supplanted the modernist mode.

A key issue to the flavor of postmodernism for Sharrett is that modernism, the umbrella label for many of the art movements that flourished earlier in this century, wrestled with social problems and man's inevitable confrontation with "the crisis of alienation." Modernists tried to come up with various solutions.

Postmodernism, however, shrugs its shoulders at social alienation. Look at the way punk rockers deal, or rather do not deal, with non-acceptance. As a member of the group, The Little Gentlemen has quipped, "Okay, life stinks; but that's just the way it is."

At his Cultural Film Series talk, Sharrett will discuss how this attitude surfaces in "After Hours." For example, the film's protagonist "is consistently acted upon by fate" and "has essentially no control" over the series of predicaments that befall him. But there is no sense that the hero is annoyed by this; he just goes with the flow, accepting "the craziness ... as the way things are."

The film will be shown in the Connolly Center four times: Saturday at 7 p.m., Sunday at 3:30 and 7 p.m., and Monday at 7 p.m. However, Sharrett will be speaking only after the Monday showing. The general public and students are welcome.

Lip-It '86 attracts crowds

"It was one of the biggest successes Villanova has ever seen. RSA and the House Councils worked very hard, and I think it was a job well done," praised Naomi Karam, president of RSA.

Audience reaction was also very high. The students applauded vigorously for minutes after some of the acts. The audience also appreciated the amount of work that went into Lip-It.

"The turnout is much better this year than last year," said Ann Clavin, sophomore. "You can tell all the groups practiced really hard for tonight," she said.

Freshman Jim Wilderotter was also impressed. "It was a great evening. The acts were great, the emcees were great. We really had an awesome time."

There will be an intercollegiate contest in the spring to determine the best lip-sync in the area, with representatives from many colleges. The group performing "Y.M.C.A." will be representing Villanova in that event, which will be held at one of the Big-5 schools.

RSA and the rest of Villanova would like to wish The Village People the best of luck and thank everyone who was a part of Lip-It for making it the great success it was.

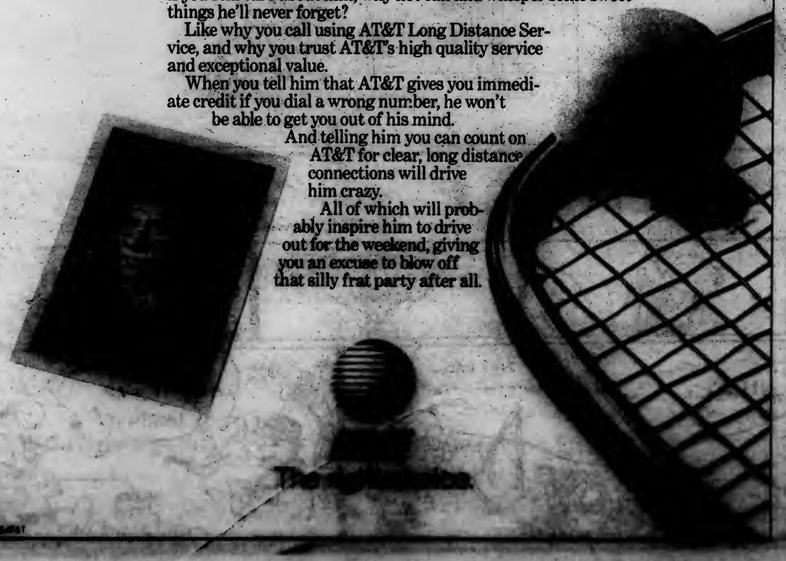
Puzzle answer

WHEN IS THE RIGHT TIME TO CALL YOUR BOYFRIEND?

a) When the president of Phi Gamma Delta asks you to Saturday night's Fiji Formal.

b) After raquetball class, to tell him that the instructor with the Australian accent and those blue eyes did wonders for your serve.

c) When you just feel like telling him you miss him after all.



Maybe you shouldn't tell him everything that's going on. But if you still care about him, why not call and whisper some sweet things he'll never forget?

Like why you call using AT&T Long Distance Service, and why you trust AT&T's high quality service and exceptional value.

When you tell him that AT&T gives you immediate credit if you dial a wrong number, he won't be able to get you out of his mind.

And telling him you can count on AT&T for clear, long distance connections will drive him crazy.

All of which will probably inspire him to drive out for the weekend, giving you an excuse to blow off that silly frat party after all.

Probing modern violence

By JOE McGOWAN

"These cartoons, the toy ads and the toys themselves teach children to dehumanize their opponent, to see their opponent as unredeemably evil and to think that violence is the best and virtually only way to deal with conflict. Instead of teaching us to love our enemy and to see our enemy as perhaps dangerous, but misguided human beings, they teach us to hate our enemy. Instead of resisting evil with good, these cartoons teach a barbarian war philosophy of resisting evil with more evil." This was the sentiment expressed by Dr. Thomas Radecki, a psychiatrist and the director of the National Coalition on Television Violence (NCTV), after the conclusion of a survey of violent cartoon series broadcast on national television networks.

Radecki is a representative of the NCTV which currently focuses its attention on the problems of extreme violence in television programs geared toward a young (usually pre-teen) audience and that of violent children's toys.

Dr. Arnold Goldstein, director of the University of Syracuse's Center for Research on Aggression warns of the danger violent and war-oriented toys can have on children: "The playing with war toys legitimizes and makes violent behavior acceptable. It desensitizes children to the dangers and harm of violent behavior and increases the chance that they will resort to violent behavior."

"Probably only a small number will commit heavy duty violence, but a large number get desensitized and will pick up some harmful behaviors. The degree that youngsters are learning to take pleasure from aggression decreases their ability to learn empathy, negotiation and cooperation. I would recommend that parents not allow violent toys in their homes, but purchase nonviolent toys and games," said Goldstein.

The violence displayed in children's cartoons has led to the production of violent toys, according to NCTV reports. The cartoons are very often used to promote accompanying merchandise (for example the programs "G.I. Joe" and "Transformers").

Dr. Leonard Eron of the University of Illinois assessed what effect this combination of entertainment and merchandising will have, saying, "I am sure violent toys and their cartoons have harmful effects on a wide variety of children. They rehearse at home beating up on people, killing them. The more they rehearse, the more likely they are to store up these patterns of behavior. I don't think that there is any doubt that violent entertainment is having a harmful effect on our society and our world."

In researching the issue of violent toys and programs, NCTV faulted as a particular offender the "Rambo" image, in all its forms the two films, the cartoons and the toys. The enormous popularity of the "Rambo" cult has many worried.

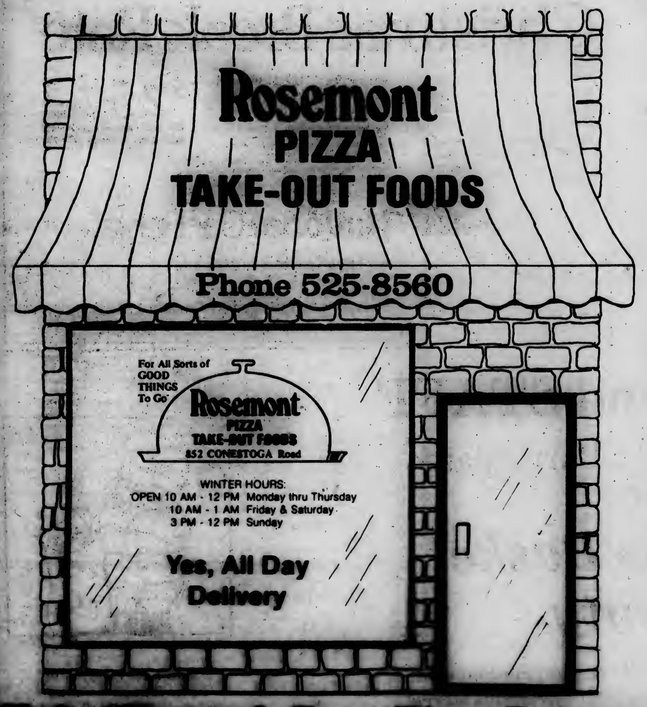
Among those worried is the noted pediatrician Dr. Benjamin Spock. "Finally the 'Rambo' doll to teach our children the practice of violence. War toys prepare children for war and other kinds of violence. If that is not what you want, don't buy those toys," Spock warned.

Redecki of NCTV feels that the issue has been compounded by our own government. "It is a tragedy that, at least until now, our government has cooperated in helping to make the situation still worse. The Federal Communications Commission recently approved a request by Axlon Toys to broadcast a syndicated war cartoon 'Techforce' that will use its soundtrack to activate motorized space warrior toys that will race around the livingroom floor.

"Next year inaudible tones, planted in game cassettes and in the TV cartoons, will activate the toys. This will enable children to have the toys fight each other and against on-screen characters," stated Redecki.

Others have decided to act upon the results of studies such as those conducted by the NCTV. The problem is aggravated by the amount of time children spend in front of the television set today and their susceptibility to toy advertisements. One group that has raised a voice in protest is the New England War Resisters League.

In a report entitled "Warning: Playing With Violent Toys Increases Anger and Violence in Children," the New England War Resisters League asserts that, "Rambo is just one of the many war toys sold today being promoted by violent cartoons. Sales of war toys have risen 600 percent since 1982, to a record estimated $1.2 billion in 1985. They are the leading category of toys sold, making up five out of six of the best selling toys in the U.S.



"War toys and cartoons insure that our society is saturated with the values of militarism: domination, glorification of killing and conquering, dehumanization of the enemy, and racism and sexism inherent in war."

The League has proposed such actions as letters of protest to major manufacturers of violent toys and the boycott of stores that carry and promote them. The packet "Stop War Toys Campaign" is available from the New England War Resisters League by writing the League at Box 1093, Norwich, Conn. 06360.

The manufacture of violent toys based upon popular war characters has had an adverse effect on chldren according to researchers. The "Rambo" toys are particularly popular and particularly violent, and the originator of the "Rambo" character Sylvester Stallone has misgivings about the products: "I couldn't control it, I tried to stop it but I don't own the licensing rights to the toys. It's not for kids. The movie was not supposed to be for little kids, and I wouldn't let my own children play with those toys."

Remembering the dedicated founder of Encore

Howard Boyd founded the Encore program to help older students adapt to Villanova University.

ova were not limited to the classroom. He was the founder and first president of Encore, a support group for senior citizen students. Cerino, moderator for the group, said, "Howard worked long and hard to get the group off the ground. It's not easy to start a new college organization." Cerino said that, as far as she knows, Encore is the only support group of its kind in the Philadelphia area.

Formerly called "Retreads," the group began in 1979. It now has a core of about 30 members. Encore's activities include luncheons featuring speakers on current topics and participation in Balloon Day. This year, a Christmas service project for needy children is being planned.

Patricia Weidinmyer, director of adult services, frequently helped Boyd plan and organize Encore events. She remembered him as "a fiesty, enthusiastic man who was determined to make Encore a successful group."

Another close friend, Joe Barrett, characterized Boyd as "a courageous, soft-spoken man who treated everyone with kindness and respect."

Boyd had emphysema, a disease that impairs the lungs and heart. "It was very difficult for him to get around campus, but he never let that stop him. Howard believed that Villanova helped keep him alive, so he never stopped coming here," Barrett said.

Barrett, himself a modest, soft-spoken man, has been taking classes at Villanova since shortly after World War II. He is a retired newspaper reporter and now works in the library part-time.

Boyd's life outside Villanova was also filled with achievement and service to others. He was a lieutenant colonel in the Army during World War II and participated in three invasions, including Normandy Beach. "Howard was very proud of his military service, for which he received two Purple Hearts and a Bronze Star," Mrs. Boyd said.

Boyd was a native of Philadelphia and attended Frankford High School. He worked as an insurance agent at Prudential for 38 years, until his retirement in 1976. He served as a councilman and director of civil defense in Bristol Township in Bucks County.

He was also a Mason, an Eagle Scout and commanded an American Legion Post. He is survived by two children, three stepchildren and nine grandchildren.

Boyd is buried at Indiantown Gap National Cemetery in upstate Pennsylvania. His wife said: "They played 'Taps' at his graveside. It was so moving, especially amid the beautiful landscape. All I could think about was how pleased Howard would have been to hear it."

Astronomy department celebrates anniversary

Mendel Hall houses Villanova's reknowned Astronomy and astrophysics department.

By MARK V. DiSTASIO

1961 was a banner year. In April of that year, Cuban exiles invaded the Bay of Pigs. In September, Roger Maris hit his 61st home run for the Yankees. Finally in November, the Rev. Edward F. Jenkins, O.S.A., an Augustinian scientist, founded Villanova's department of astronomy and astrophysics.

Last Saturday, a host of internationally distinguished scientists, astronomers and astrophysicists returned to Villanova to observe the 25th anniversary of that founding.

1961 also marked the beginning of U.S. involvement in space ventures. Most recently, two Villanova professors, Dr. Edward Guinan and Dr. Frank Maloney, discovered two binary stars with orbital motions that contradict those expected from Einstein's general relativity theory.

"Villanova is one of the few schools nationally where astronomy is part of the undergraduate school. "The students feel like family," said Guinan.

Students also have exposure to some of the most brilliant minds in astronomy today, including Guinan, Maloney and Dr. George McCook, astronomy chairperson.

Furthermore, Dr. Edward Sion is an internationally recognized expert on white dwarf stars, and Dr. Andrew Theokas is currently investigating the origins of comets.

Although we are a relatively small department located in an area with poor observing conditions, we have been able to remain competitive because we maintain state-of-the-art instrumentation, and we have an excellent staff committed to quality teaching and research.

George McCook
Chairman of the astronomy department

Jenkins, founder of Villanova's department, at age 80 still enjoys teaching. Jenkins studied at the Franklin Institute to foster his fascination with the stars.

"He [Jenkins] singlehandedly built the University's first telescope on top of Tolentine Hall in 1961," recalled McCook, his former student.

Villanova's first astronomy majors graduated in 1965. Since then, the department has graduated over 80 students, many of whom currently work for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA).

"Although we are a relatively small department located in an area with poor observing conditions, we have been able to remain competitive because we maintain state-of-the-art instrumentation, and we have an excellent staff committed to quality teaching and research," McCook said.

Maybe in 2011, Villanova's scientists and scholars will return to Mendel Hall to celebrate the 50th anniversary with an even greater record of "astronomical" achievement.

Courses survey music

By CORRIN LONG

Villanova students will have a chance to fine-tune their music abilities next semester. Rev. Dennis Wilde, a devoted musician, is offering three interesting humanities electives which will meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

One class is an introduction to music heritage. This class involves learning to analyze classics and to tune the ear. These objectives are accomplished by listening to music from ancient times to the mid-20th century.

The second class is geared towards compositions. Students will be introduced to the theory of music in addition to learning to write music. This course requires the participants to compose a piece of music for either a specific instrument or for the organ.

In the third program, which is not offered every semester, students are exposed to orchestral and broadway music. Wilde also presents his students with some keyboard history including organ, jazz, modern and pop music. Students who take this course will also survey plays and study what goes into putting shows together.

There are no prerequisites for any of these classes and after learning some basic skills, individual attention is emphasized. Wilde also requires that his students view some outside performances, such as a trip to Broadway.

Along with teaching, Wilde is a concert pianist and organist who is involved in arranging and composing. Currently, he is busy preparing music for "The Baccha," an on-campus production. Also, as the director of the Villanova Singers, he is anxiously awaiting their annual Christmas concert that will be held on Dec. 13.

'Tis the Season
To watch movies

By KEVIN HECHT

It is that time of the year again. The malls bustle with activity, children's eyes boggle as they hang their stockings by the chimney with care and joy abounds within the hearts of movie buffs around the world. Christmas, that special season, has inspired a wealth of motion picture classics that have become holiday viewing traditions, and new films that are sure to become traditions in years to come.

There are so many holiday films that one may find it hard to choose which ones to watch, so I have compiled a list of reviews of what I believe to be the best Christmas movies ever made. All of the following films capture the spirit and warmth of Christmas, so find a movie that appeals to your taste, warm up the VCR and enjoy the cream of the crop of holiday films.

"It's a Wonderful Life"
Produced and Directed
by Frank Capra
RKO Pictures 1946

"It's a Wonderful Life" is generally regarded as one of the greatest motion pictures ever made. James Stewart, Donna Reed and Lionel Barrymore star in this heartwarming tale about the triumph of the human spirit that was produced and directed by the legendary Frank Capra, whose long career reached its zenith with this incredible film.

"It's a Wonderful Life" is about a selfless man named George Bailey (Stewart) who has become discouraged and contemplates suicide on a snowy Christmas Eve. His life and the reasons for his depression are revealed through the eyes of his guardian angel, Clarence (Henry Travers), who is sent down by God to attempt to save Bailey's "greatest gift."

Bailey admits to Clarence that he believes his existence has been worthless, and that people would be better off if he had never been born, but Clarence shows him how miserable life in his small town would be if this were actually the case. Bailey's kindness had touched the lives of many people around him, and Clarence helps him realize just how wonderful his life has really been.

Stewart shines in this movie, and his portrayal of Bailey can make you laugh and cry throughout its entire length. Bailey's wife is excellently portrayed by Donna Reed. Their love story adds a touching aspect to this brilliant film, as does Bailey's constant struggle with the evil Mr. Potter. The famous character actor Lionel Barrymore, plays Potter, whose greed threatens to ruin the lives of the citizens of Bedford Falls.

If there was ever a movie that can be considered a "must see," this is it, but be sure to watch it in black and white, the new color-enhanced version of the film does not do it justice.

"It's a Wonderful Life" truly embodies the Christmas spirit. Do not miss it during the holiday season.

"Miracle on 34th Street"
Directed by George Seaton
20th Century Fox 1947

Is there really a Santa Claus? If you don't think so, "Miracle on 34th Street" may just change your mind. The 1947 motion picture stars Edmund Gwenn as a man who claims to be Santa, and who must prove to his friends, doctors and even the New York Supreme Court that he is telling the truth.

The movie showcases the late Natalie Wood as a child, playing the role of Susan Walker, a young girl of divorced parents who does not believe in Santa Claus. Her mother, Doris (Maureen Ohara), refuses to submit her daughter to "unrealistic fairy tales," and she is quite dismayed when the man she hires to play Santa in the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade claims to be the real thing.

This man who refers to himself as Kris Kringle is determined to win over the hearts of Doris and Susan, but they, as does almost everyone else, view him only as a nice, crazy old man with whiskers. Kringle's only supporter is a young lawyer named Fred Gailey (John Payne), who has his eye on Doris and has the desire to change Susan's cynical view of a world without a Santa Claus.

The climax of the movie occurs when the seemingly crazy Kringle is institutionalized at Bellevue, and it is up to Gailey to prove to the New York Supreme Court that he actually is Santa Claus. The court scene is hilarious, and the highlight of this classic picture. Does Kringle win the case? Is he actually Santa? Does he win over Susan and Doris in the end? You will have to watch the movie to find out.

"A Christmas Carol"
Produced and Directed by Bryian Desmond Hurst
United Artists 1951

No story better reflects the Christmas spirit than "A Christmas Carol" by Charles Dickens. This tale has been depicted in countless motion pictures, and it seems everyone has their own favorite version of the film.

If you are a stickler for details, and like your movies to remain faithful to the stories they are based on, a good version to watch is the 1951 "A Christmas Carol," starring Alastair Sim and directed by Brian Desmond Hurst. This is one of the most famous film versions of Dickens' original story, and most of the movie follows the book line by line. Movie buffs generally regard this film as a classic.

Since there are many versions of "A Christmas Carol," you have a wide range of movies from which to choose. If you like musicals, you would not want to miss "Scrooge," a 1970 version starring Albert Finney and Alec Guiness. The film is packed with plenty of singing and dancing. Finney plays a convincing Scrooge.

Although not all the versions of "A Christmas Carol" are available on videotape, there are some good ones that you may want to catch on television. Henry Winkler stars in "An American Christmas Carol," Dickens' story with an original twist. The "Scrooge" of this story is Benedict Slade, a hard-hearted miser who is excellently portrayed by Winkler as a young and elderly man.

"It's a Wonderful Life" is a Christmas film that is considered to be one of the finest motion pictures ever made.

Another television movie to look out for is the 1985 "Scrooge" starring George C. Scott. This is one of the better modern versions of "A Christmas Carol," and Scott seems like he was made for the role of Scrooge.

There are many versions of Dickens' masterpiece floating around on video tape as well as television, so try to watch and compare as many as you can. Maybe viewing your favorite version will become a lifetime holiday tradition.

"White Chirstmas"
Written by Irving Berlin
Paramount 1954

If you like singing, dancing and Hollywood glitter, you will love Irving Berlin's "White Christmas." This 1954 musical has an impressive cast that includes Bing Crosby, Danny Kaye, Rosemary Clooney and Vera Ellen who all contribute to the film's clever choreography and famous musical score.

Although the appeal of musical films has waned in recent years,

'The angel Gabriel' delivers the wrong message

By RUSS CECCOLA

Peter Gabriel was the quintessential performer of art rock in the '70s and late '60s. Beginning with Genesis, Gabriel dazzled audiences with his in concert interpretations of the meaning of lyrics in the songs.

With such characters as The Old Man, Gabriel-era Genesis awakened the world to a new kind of music and quickly captured their audiences by placing Gabriel as much a character in the performance of the song as an actor in the performance of a play. The band gained popularity in different select places in England and across the sea in America. Gabriel's lyrics and visualization of a song showed his musical genius.

When Gabriel left Genesis in 1974 to pursue a solo career, he continued his trademark style, while Genesis slowly evolved into the pop band it is today with that monster Phil Collins rearing his ugly head more and more each year. Gabriel may be going in that same direction. He took over the Spectrum last weekend, putting on a good show, but turning toward the success of "Sledge Hammer" as the focus of his concert.

this weekend with "San Jacinto," from his last album, Security. Although Gabriel is on tour for his hit album So, he still played a lot of songs from Security in the show, including "Shock the Monkey," "The Family and the Fishing Net," "Lay Your Hands on Me," "I Have the Touch" and "Wallflower." Security was an excellent album and deserved inclusion in the concert.

The problem with the tour is that Gabriel cut all ties to the past and seemed to totally disregard all of his hits that got him to the level of success he is at now. That turned out to be a major mistake. Out of the maybe 15,000 people in the Spectrum both nights, about 14,000 were fans who appeared after So was released and the other 1,000 were true Gabriel fans. The attitude of the music world is like that. When somebody is popular, it is time to go see them. When their name is unknown, nobody takes notice except for true fans.

Although the majority of the concert was made up of the performances of new material, Gabriel still played some classic example of his genre of music. "Family Snapshot," "Solsbury Hill," "Here Comes the Flood," "No Self Control," "Not One of Us," and "Biko" were the older tunes that Gabriel played during the Saturday and Sunday shows.

"Biko" was written for Stephen Biko, a prisoner in South Africa who died in jail and inspired Gabriel to give his efforts to Amnesty International, an organization dedicated to the release of prisoners of conscience through

Let 'Something Wild' excite your spirit

By NOELIE CHRISTY

"Something Wild"
Directed by Jonathan Demme
Orion Pictures

A fantasy becomes reality when an average man gets taken for a car ride by a woman from the wild side of life. A normal guy, Charlie (played by Jeff Daniels), takes his lunch break from his prestigious New York City job and slips out of the restaurant without having paid the bill.

An intriguing young lady who notices his criminal act, offers him a ride in her convertible car. The style and free spirit of the lady, Lulu (played by Melane Griffith), captivates Charlie and the audience as she drives her car while blaring reggae music and gulping whiskey.

Although the movie may seem comical at the beginning, it deals with harsh realities and consequences of living an uncontrolled life, and it also recognizes the importance of being open to new ideas and situations rather than boxing oneself into a fixed reality untouched by change or adventure.

At the beginning of the movie, Lulu, dressed in a skin tight black dress with multi-colored jewelry, has a seductive manner that any man could not resist. Charlie wears a typical businessman's suit and initially states that he does not want to jeopardize his family and job because of her, but he quickly yields to her charms and sensuality.

Lulu tells Charlie that they are going to Pennsylvania. Throughout the road trip, Lulu enjoys throwing Charlie into uncomfortable situations and seeing his reactions. At one point, they eat at a fine restaurant which takes no credit cards. Since Charlie has no cash, Lulu agrees to pay, but instead she walks out leaving Charlie with an unpaid bill and an irate cashier. He finally bolts out of the restaurant and jumps in the car, and the two speed out of the parking lot back onto the road.

After a few more series of adventures, they stop at a house in Pennsylvania. Much to Charlie's surprise, it is Lulu's mother's house. Lulu introduces Charlie as her husband and he is forced to lie about their marriage. The mother tells Charlie later that she knows he is not Lulu's husband, which he acknowledges.

Daniels portrays Charlie excellently throughout the movie. He is mesmerized by Lulu, yet aware of her instability. Although he lets himself be dragged into her life, he acts honorably and is not destroyed by his trip to the wild side.

Daniels depicts with integrity and believability the weaknesses and strengths of the character. Daniels shows the growth of Charlie from a man absorbed in his own life to a noble and strong person.

Griffith played the part of Lulu with a lot of energy and fun. Her character conveys two personalities and names, the first was Lulu, the wild one Charlie knows, and the other is Audrey, Lulu's real name. At home, she dyes her hair blond and wears a white dress rather than a black dress. This physical change is significant in the film because it also suggests the modification of her character. She goes from being a wild one in black to a much more sensible lady in white.

Griffith plays her Lulu character more energetically than that of Audrey. It is not a flaw in Griffith's acting; rather it is the film that turns the character of Lulu so suddenly from wild to tamed.

Lulu also takes Charlie to her high school reunion where they meet up with Lulu's husband, Ray (played by Ray Liotta). Ray, recently released from jail, decides he wants his wife back. Ray is the most interesting character in the movie. He is a psychopath who stops at nothing to get what he wants. His violence and language give proof of his mental instability and malevolence.

Ray terrorizes Lulu and Charlie and destroys the excitement and enjoyment of their adventure. His tough good looks and his outbursts of violence are tremendous and terrifying. Liotta's facial expressions were especially effective in his last scene as he looks at himself in the mirror while streaking blood on his face.

The last half of the movie focuses on Ray rather than Lulu as the "wild one." The importance of a balance between a life without risk and a life of total wildness becomes evident to Charlie and Lulu as well as the audience. Although the film did not connect the comic beginning and the more violent ending, it was an enjoyable movie.

TRINITY ••••• INFOCOM C128, AT, AP, IBM

The topic of nuclear war is a very touchy subject in this world of ours. Infocom has taken the bull by the horns and allowed the adventurer to go back in time to save the world from the threat of the nuclear bomb in the next installment of their large scale adventures made for machines with higher memory capacities.

The Trinity site in the New Mexico desert is where the world's first nuclear device was exploded on July 16, 1945. In the game Trinity, you are in London on vacation when you are interrupted by the beginning of WWIII as a bomb is about to vaporize the city. Your only hope is to escape into another time, another dimension.

You learn that every atomic explosion opens a gateway into a secret universe, a plane between fantasy and reality, governed by its own logic and allowing you to go back and forth in time and space to try to correct what mankind has done. Your ultimate goal is to return to the Trinity site just before the first A-bomb was exploded, saving your future and that of all men.

Infocom, the leading designers of text adventures, never fail with a game — they just get better. You easily become enveloped in the world of the game and never want to leave until your goal is met. Trinity is so captivating because of the vast terrain that you must travel to discover the meaning behind this strange new world you have entered. I strongly suggest that you make a map as you go along. You see everything from giant Venus fly traps to a mammouth sundial that casts a shadow on the land. But the questions that should really bug you are: Who is that boy blowing bubbles by the mountain and what is the secret of the white doors in the giant toadstools, one of which you walked out of when escaping London?

SILENT SERVICE ••••• MICROPROSE C64/128, AP, AT, IBM

Finally, the definitive submarine simulation has been released for home computers. Microprose, the leader of simulation software, with an emphasis on flight simulation, recently produced Silent Service, the first submarine simulation that allows you to recreate history in the 1940s, right in the middle of WWII.

In Silent Service, you are the Captain of a U.S. submarine, patrolling the waters in the South Pacific for Japanese targets essential to the life's blood of Japan. As actual commanders did in WWII, the goal is to seek and destroy as many ships in the Japanese convoys as possible, with special concern given to the cargo ships and tankers, those carrying the most vital supplies to Japan.

The element of the game that makes Silent Service so good is that you perform all of the actions that an actual Captain aboard a sub needed to sink a Japanese ship while keeping the number of controls and instructions to a minimum. Silent Service comes with an excellent manual that explains the history behind the sub attacks and shows all of the options with the simulation.

There are three scenarios in which you can play the game: Torpedo/Gun Practice, Convoy Action and Patrol. The Practice option allows you to aim and shoot at target ships off Midway Island. The Convoy option puts you into one of six actual scenarios from WWII in which success does not come easy. Finally, the Patrol option lets you command one of the best U.S. subs and patrol a certain area in the South Pacific.

Silent Service offers all you could possibly want out of a submarine challenge. You must decide whether to dive to avoid trouble or dare to show your hull to the enemy in daylight. There are five battle stations which you must monitor, all with the ease of the joystick.

If you think that things are getting too easy, there are also included "reality levels" with which you can tailor your game. You can allow limited visibility, dud torpedoes, repairs at base only, faster Japanese destroyer ships and more to make your goal tougher.

No matter how you play it, day or night, the USS Seawolf or a sub of your own, Silent Service gives all of the detailed graphics and real-time excitement that you would expect while destroying Japanese ships in the South Pacific.

ROBOT RASCALS * ELECTRONIC ARTS C64/128, AT, AP, IBM

There are many games geared toward children on the market, but Robot Rascals is probably one of the first to be designed with the family's enjoyment in mind. Combining elements of both card games and computer control, Robot Rascals sends two to four players on a scavenger hunt for strange objects such as a Transistor Taco or Silicon Salad in the land of Laustenfownd.

The robots come into play in that 10 very different machinated creatures take the place of the players on the video screen. Initially, a player chooses the robot to represent him and the color of it. Now the cards are used.

The game play is simple, but the strategy and cutthroat rules make the game challenging for all. There are two kinds of cards, Luck cards and Item cards. Before starting the game on the computer, each player chooses four Item cards and learns for what objects his robot must search.

Then the rounds begin. In each round, a player takes a Luck card and follows the directions on it. The player directs the robot on the screen through different terrain, looking for the items he needs to return home before his energy runs out.

At the beginning of each round, some global rules may be instituted by the computer, such as every player gets more energy in that round. A robot can steal objects from others, drop needed items in the lake and steal and pass cards to someone else.

The combination of the card element and the computer synthesis and randomization are what make Robot Rascals the perfect game for the young at heart and the card game addicts.

SHADOWFIRE •••• MINDSCAPE C64, C128

The time is the far future. The Empire are the good guys of the universe. General Zoff is the Empire's enemy. He has captured Ambassador Kryxix and now has him on his ship, the Zoff V. You command Enigma, a shadowy organization dedicated to the service of the Empire. You must lead the members to save Ambassador Kryxix and destroy Zoff's spaceship. Your top-secret space ship is code-named Shadowfire.

At first, this might sound like a childish game, but in fact Shadowfire is a captivating challenge and graphically exciting software creation. The game is played by either keyboard, joystick, light pen or paddle/trak ball and involves using icon-based commands exclusively.

If you want to move a character, you select the character and then activate the icon for movement in a specific direction. You could not ask for an easier way to play a game. The screen is broken up into many parts in order to organize the different elements.

Realizing what icon you are using is about all of the complexity involved in Shadowfire. The game is hard to win at first, until you realize what you have to do with all of the objects.

There are six characters, each with different distinguishing features. They are: Zark Montor (human), Syylk (insectoid), Sevrina Maris (human), Torik (avian), Maul (weapons droid) and Manto (transport droid). Typical objects are: Projectile Pistol, Self-Destruct Card, Smoke Bomb and Transporter.

Putting all together — graphics, game play and icons — Shadowfire is an excellent buy. As an additional incentive to buying Shadowfire, Mindscape also produced the Shadowfire Game Changer, which is a special disk with which you can change the different elements in the game (length of time to save Kryxix, etc.) to make it easier or harder for you. Just send in the card included in the Shadowfire box and you have got complete control over the universe.

As an additional hint to start your holiday software shopping, there is a store that specializes in software and computers accessible by the Paoli Local train. Just get off the train at Strafford and walk to the K-Mart shopping center and look for Software Galeria, a large supplier of software for the area and a contributer of software in aid to this column.

All titles reviewed are available there and they are offering discounts for students and faculty showing Villanova I.D. So get some money and choose from an incredible list of products, including computers, hardware, software, disks, books and more.

Peter Gabriel

peaceful mens. "Biko" was definitely the strongest song that Gabriel performed, with each member of his band leaving one by one with the audience still singing the chorus — testament to the fact that Philadelphia is one of the strongholds for musicians on tour.

The rest of Gabriel's band includes the excellent musicianship of Tony Levin on bass, David Rhodes on guitar, Manu Katche on drums and percussion, and David Sancious of Bruce Springsteen fame as keyboardist. The above men complement Gabriel's lyrics and musical genius in concert, and helped him to make the tour a musical event not to be missed — but for you new Gabriel fans only, because the second half of the show relied mostly on So. All tunes were played form the album, except "That Voice Again." A duet with Laurie Anderson called "This is the Picture" appears only on cassettes and compact discs, yet wasted another 10-15 minutes of time that could have been dedicated to numbers such as "I Don't Remember," "Games Without Frontiers," "I Go Swimming," "D.I.Y.," "Rhythm of the Heat" and others.

The stage was open for all of the audience to see. The only effects that Gabriel used were vari-lites that were attached to mobile cranes. Stage hands put these in strategic locations during the various songs in order to heighten the atmosphere for which Gabriel is so famous.

Also played were "Sledge Hammer," the runaway hit, "Mercy Street," "Red Rain," "Don't Give Up" and "Big Time." Gabriel needs to get away from his dance music image to return to the days of music which had that unusual feel that is only Gabriel — a feel not like any other bands you hear in any disco. To put it simply, Gabriel sold out this time around.

Local metal masters release new material

Down to The Wire

Hideous
Krank
Metal Blade Records

Maybe now, with the phenomenal success of Cinderella, the Philly heavy metal scene will get some respect. There are a good number of bands in the aea who have what it takes to make it on a national level. Two of these bands are Krank and Metal Wolf, both veterans of the area's heavy metal circuit. Both bands have recently released their debut albums, Krank with Hideous and Metal Wolf with Down To The Wire.

Krank is exactly what the title track says, "Heavy Metal Havoc." Screaming vocals over a powerful, ripping guitar sound, Krank's varied style of power metal should appeal to more than just the hardcore metalheads, much the way AC/DC does.

Opening with "Power," the album rides on a high energy level from start to finish with no ballads in sight. "Til Hell Freezes Over" is next with its anthemic chorus and is one of the album's best tracks, while "Evil" shows some Kiss-like features and is more controlled than some of the other tracks.

"Rented Heat," perhaps the album's besy track, is as commercial as Krank gets — which is not really too commerical at all. No sellingout for success with these guys, no way. The title track, "Hideous (Heavy Metal Havoc,)" closes the album and is a high-speed thrasher which shows how powerful and varied the band is.

In all, Hideous is a great heavy metal album that is a must for the record collection of all metal-heads. The material on the album, however, is even more powerful and intense when performed live. Krank, even though excellent on record, is definitely a live band with their strong visual presentation. So, make it a point to see them live.

While Krank relies on a more powerful presentation, Metal Wolf, at least on record, relies on a more melodic approach. This is obvious on their debut album, Down To The Wire. The album starts off fast and furious with "Close Your Eyes," but then settles down a bit with the more melodic "No Name Girl." On this track, one can see how Metal Wolf combines melody and power to come up with a winning formula.

Down To The Wire is filled with top-notch material and the guitar playing of Bryon Shepherd and Jay B. Jans is very impressive. Songs such as "Around The Town" and "Feet Don't Fail Me" stick in your head because of their strong chorus. "Beg, Borrow And Steal," however, is the classic on this album with an aggressive rhythm, memorable chorus and plenty of energy to band you head to.

Metal Wolf live however is a different animal. Relying more on their power and energy aspects rather than a melodic approach such as on the record, the band put on a very entertaining show, which highlights material from Down To The Wire as well as some of their newer material.

Take time to watch movies

"White Christmas" remains a popular movie. Watching Crosby sing the title hit is worth the rental price itself. Musical lovers should be aware that this film may be just what you are looking for. as far as holiday entertainment.

"A Christmas Story"
Directed by Bob Clark
Metro Goldwyn Mayer 1983

"A Christmas Story" is a wonderful movie that is based upon humorist Jean Shepard's recollections of what it is like to be a kid at Christmas. This warm and funny film, directed by Bob Clark, realistically captures the essence of childhood, as Shepard narrates the action through the eyes of nine-year-old Ralphie Parker (Peter Billingsly) and explores the inner sanctum of his fantasy world.

Ralphie wants an official Red Ryder B.B. gun for Christmas, but his requests are always met by the dreaded parental response, "You'll shoot your eye out," instilling in Ralphie a fear that he will never get his beloved gift. This does not deaden his desire for the "Holy Grail of Christmas gifts" though, and he launches a series of attempts to "indelibly implant the gun within the subconscious of his parents" (Melinda Dillon and Darren McGavin).

Ralphie's trials and tribulations concerning his quest are revealed in a network of scenes that highlight his holiday dilemma. We are introduced to Scott Farkus, the neighborhood bully with yellow eyes. We witness the ritual of the "dog dare" in a bet to see if your tongue will stick to a flag pole in the winter, and Ralphie gets involved in a hilarious encounter with a nasty Santa Claus during a last ditch attempt to secure his coveted gift.

"A Christmas Story" is a warm and human insight into the realm of childhood imagination sensitively expressed through the words of Shepard, and a move that will be thoroughly enjoyed for many Christmas nights to come. Although it cannot be considered a classic like "It's a Wonderful Life" or "Miracle on 34th Street," the movie is well made, fun to watch, and deserves to be ranked among the best Christmas movies ever made.

Creating a list of the best of anything is hard to do, and many good Christmas films have been deleted, but provided here is a diverse group of impressive movies that are sure to entertain during the holiday season. You may only want to pick out one or two movies to watch, but who knows? Maybe you will get caught up in the Christmas spirit and attempt to view all that Hollywood has to offer. So throw some wood on the fire, pour the egg nog, and I will meet you at the video store. By the way, have a Merry Christmas!

Springsteen shines in classic live release

By KEVIN HECHT

Bruce Springsteen and The E Street Band
Live/1975-85

Somewhere between the backstreets and the promised land, a man named Bruce Springsteen began to blaze forth with an unparalleled fire burning within his soul. Slowly he made a name for himself with his music and now he personifies rock and roll.

Somehow, a funny thing happened on his road to superstardom. Along his journey from Jersey kid to juggernaut, his name transcended his music and he became the closest thing to a living legend that could ever be found.

To many people, the songs of Springsteen are inspiring. To them, his music is a story that encapsulates the pain and joy of the human condition and he represents the dreams of an entire nation. Bruce Springsteen and The E Street Band: Live/1975-85 is an incredible and chronology of the Boss' unprecedented road to stardom, and the 40-song five-album collection is worth its weight in gold to his fans.

Live/1975-85 is the quintessential Springsteen. The intensity and spontaneity of his live performances over the last 10 years has been captured, showcasing Springsteen's career from his first release, Greetings From Asbury Park New Jersey, to the monsterous success of Born in the U.S.A. in 1984. The music was mixed by Bob Clearmountain, who did a tremendous job of transferring the Boss' live sound onto vinyl.

The album opens with an impressive acoustic version of "Thunder Road," and continues with an over three-hour bombardment of classic Springsteen. The boss is captured at his peak in songs such as "Backstreets," "Born in The U.S.A.," and "Badlands," contrasted by the subdued energy of "The River," "Nebraska," and an unforgettable solo rendition of "No Surrender."

Live/1975-85 also showcases previously unreleased songs by Springsteen. "Seeds" is a grinding rocker about the plight of unemployed oil riggers in Texas, and "Paradise By The 'C' " is an instrumental showcasing his long time sax man Clarence Clemcns. Furthermore, Springsteen covers the Woody Gutherie classic "This Land is Your Land," as well as "War" and "Raise Your Hand."

Finally, the Boss brings home some of his songs that have been covered by others. "Because The Night," a song co-written and popularized by Patti Smith is performed brilliantly, as is the moody emotional shades of "Fire."

Part of Springsteen's awesome charisma comes across through some of the stories he tells on stage. It seems like he is a figure to whom everyone can relate, yet a larger than life enigma at the same time, and this paradox helps perpetuate his charm.

Springsteen reminisces about his bittersweet relationship with his father before "The River," and then warns against the reoccurence of a Vietnam as he states, "In 1985, blind faith in your leaders, or in anything, will get you killed," before exploding into "War."

Springsteen's songs are stories in themselves that reach out to the audience who relate the lyrics to their own lives. A Springsteen show has become more than a concert, it is a tradition that Live/1975-85 will carry on for years to come.

Some of the highlights on the album include a 1978 rendition of "Rosalita," and a recording of the traditional audience participation in "Hungry Heart." There are old songs such as "Growin' Up" and "It's Hard to Be a Saint in The City," and new songs like "Darlington County" and "Bobby Jean," that go over well within the live context of the album.

Some portions of Live/1975-85 are devoted to chunks of songs off the same original album. Springsteen highlights The River, his 1980 masterpiece, with an impressive five-song set that includes the hard driving "Cadillac Ranch" and "Independence Day." His 1982 solo release Nebraska is represented by a haunting rendition of its title track, as well as gritty performances of "Johnny 99" and "Reason to Believe."

The E Street Band is one of the finest live bands ever assembled, and Live/1975-85 is evidence of their talent and depth. The Boss is backed up by long time keyboardist Roy Bittan, Danny Federici on the organ, Garry Tallent on bass, Clemons on saxophone, drummer Max Weinburg and guitarist Steve Van Zandt who played in the songs recorded through 1981.

For his 1984 tour, Bruce was joined by Patti Scialfa on background vocals and Nils Lofgren on guitar. The album captures the band's tremendous energy expended in concert, thanks to the hard work of Springsteen along with co-producers John Landau and Chuck Plotkin, who sifted through hundreds of versions of songs to determine the ones that best captured the essence of the band.

Springsteen has earned an irreplacable niche in the world of music, and his songs will carry on his legacy forever. Live/1975-85 brilliantly captures this energetic performer at his best, during a 10-year span in which he performed some of the finest music ever produced.

If you are a Springsteen fan, do not miss this incredible album. It is an unforgettable insight into his on-stage charisma, and a compilation of songs that embody his legend.

Cooper grips music world with latest effort

By CAESAR ETTORE

Constrictor
Alice Cooper
MCA Records

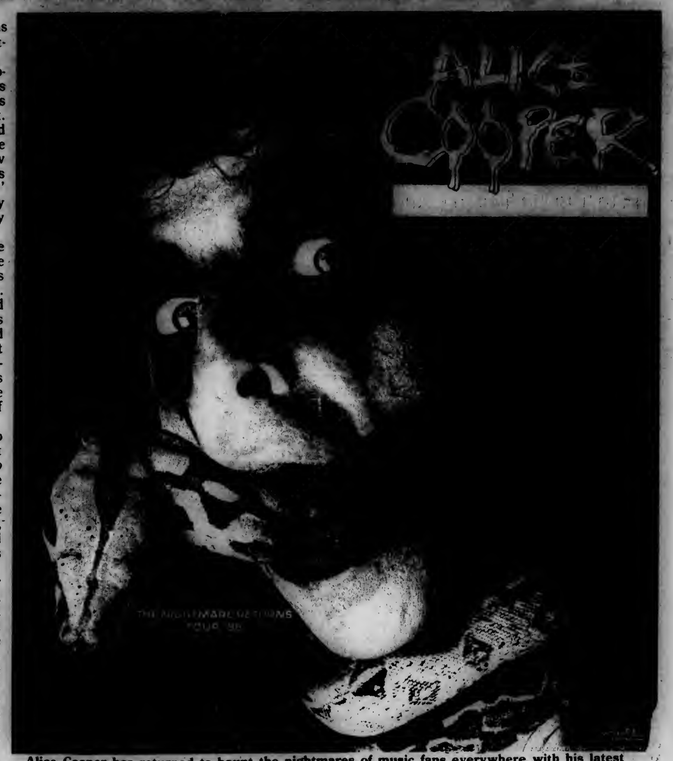
He is back! The man behind the mask, the guy who put the shock in rock is once again welcoming you to his nightmare of insanity. Alice Cooper has updated his sound, but he is still as warped as ever.

The release of Constrictor sees Alice rocking as hard as he has ever done before and coming pretty close to being just flat out heavy metal. The album opens up with "Teenage Frankenstein," a song included in Alice's new live extravaganza.

Right away it is easy to see that Cooper still has his sick sense of humor. "I'm a Teenage Frankenstein/These ain't my hands/And these legs ain't mine" are just a sample of the Cooper insanity. This time around, the insanity is backed by some top-notch musicianship, especially in guitarist Kane Roberts, who churns out some monster riffs throughout the entire album.

Other highlights of Side One include "Give It Up," "Simple Disobedience" and "Life And Death Of the Party." "Give It Up" is a real rocker with a very memorable, up-tempo chorus that you will not soon forget. Alice makes fun of the typical American attitude and way of life with lyrics such as "Just when you got it made/And all your bills are paid/ You stumble and fall into your grave/Too bad."

"Simple Disobedience" is a throwback to Alice Cooper circa the 1970s, while "Life And Death Of the Party" is especially noteworthy because of its fine musical qualities. The track opens with a classical style intro and contains some exceptional soloing by guitarist Kane Roberts.



"The World Needs Guts," probably the album's best cut, opens up Side Two of Constrictor. This is Alice at his heaviest and sickest. "The world needs guts/The world needs power/Show me some blood/Show me some guts/Show me some scars/The world needs guts/The world needs us," screams Alice accompanied by some fine guitar playing by Roberts.

"Trick Bag" and "Crawlin" are classic rockers and more in the vein of Cooper classics such as "Be My Lover" and "No More Mr. Nice Guy," but in a more updated fashion. The album concludes with "He's Back (The Man Behind the Mask)" which saw its first release in the soundtrack to "Friday the 13th" part whatever. This track sees Alice breaking some new ground with a little bit of experimentation.

Cooper has always been one to try something a little bit different as seen by his classic Welcome To My Nightmare LP. Once again he is successful with his experimentation. "He's Back" could well be Cooper's first dance hit. Its heavy, very up-tempo beat blends well with Robert's hot riff and Alice's unique vocal style.

Constrictor has put Alice Cooper back on top where he should be, challenging the likes of Kiss and Motley Crue who probably would not be here if not for him. The album is only a small part though.

Alice Cooper must be seen live to be fully appreciated. It is not just a concert but a real show, as anyone who has seen Alice on the Constrictor tour could tell you. His tour returns to Philly's Tower Theater for a second show on Dec. 12. For a rock/horror experience of a lifetime, be there.

Alice Cooper has returned to haunt the nightmares of music fans everywhere with his latest vinyl attack, Constrictor.

Vasey stages a Greek tragedy: The Bacchae

By MEGAN GUIDERA

Greek tragedy evolved as a separate art form in the year 530. The earliest three Greek tragedians were Aeschylus, Sophocles and Euripides. Euripides' great tragedy, "The Bacchae," has taken over Vasey Theatre's stage as the third chilling performance of horror this season.

Euripides wrote more than 88 plays during his lifetime; however, many of them were thought to be a bit too advanced for his society. Frequently Euripides satirized the gods and society. Many of his plays, especially "The Bacchae" dealt with the psychology of passion.

It is alleged that, because of an unhappy marriage, Euripides was a mysogynist, a woman-hater. Some of this hate is displayed in his character, Agave, in "The Bacchae."

"The Bacchae" is the tale of conflict between two cousins: Dionysus, god of theatre, wine, and ecstasy; and Pentheus, the young king of Thebes. Dionysus was the son of Zeus and Semele, a Theban Princess.

Because of Semele's humaness, Dionysus' divinity was not at first accepted by many, especially Pentheus. However, a group of women, the bacchae, vehemently proclaimed the divinity of Dionysus through ritual chanting and dancing. The divine nature of Dionysus was finally proven in the end when he craftily had Pentheus dress as a woman and meet his gruesome murder by his own mother, Agave.

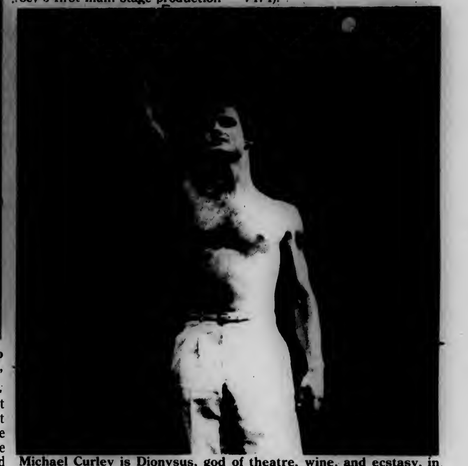
Dr. James J. Christy, the director, did a spectacular job of combining his vast theatrical knowledge to produce a superb production of "The Bacchae." Christy recently took a sabbatical during which he travelled around the world to study theatre. He studied in Japan, India, and Greece. This past summer he spent six weeks at Dartmouth College as one of 30 selected scholars to participate in a colloquium of Greek tragedy in translation.

A baccante (Tina Sferrozza) — one of the women of Asia who worship the god Dionysus in Villanova Theatre's production of "The Bacchae, Dec. 5, 6, 7. (Photo by Fielder)

Michael Curley marvelously portrayed the arrogant god, Dionysus. Curly's good looks fit his character of a womanizing god.

Ian Gershman took on the difficult task of portraying both mother and son, Agave and Pentheus. Despite the difficulty of his characters, Gershman displayed zeal.

The bacchae, or chorus, made up of thirteen women, demonstrated intense passion and flair. Their dance and song both entertained and told a story. However, at times it was hard to follow the meaning of The Bacchae's gestures.



Lon Winston's elaborate set design consisted of a large dirt floor, an iron gate and a unique sculpture. For the majority of the play the sculpture hung behind the iron gate. After Pentheus' violent death, the pieces of the blood dipped sculpture represented the parts of Pentheus' slain body.

The musical accompaniment and the constant change in lighting outstandingly enhanced the ancient Greek atmosphere. The costumes were extremely simple and not terribly impressive. However, the overall presentation was excellent.

"The Bacchae" definitely continued Vasey's horror theme. "The Bacchae" contained much more gore than "Frankenstein" or "Something's Afoot." However, the horror was tastefully done. The use of a sculpture as a representation of the pieces of Pentheus' corps proved to be imaginative.

Despite "The Bacchae's" excellence, it was not quite as entertaining as "Frankenstein," Vasey's first main stage production this year. However, "The Bacchae" was very enriching and well worth the reasonable price.

"The Bacchae" is playing tonight, Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. This cultural delight is something that is worth seeing. Tickets are still available at the Vasey Theatre Box Office (645-7474).

Animated Spielberg film is a holiday delight

By MARYJO YANNACONE

"An American Tail"
Directed by Stephen Spielberg

The holiday season is now upon us, and with it there usually comes a barrage of family films from the entertainment industry, that seek to carry us off with tales of love, joy and hope, filling us with the Christmas spirit.

Add to this the fact that Walt Disney Productions is attempting a resurgence of income through the run of old classics like "The song of the South," and "The Lady and the Tramp," and it becomes clear why a new Disney film entitled "An American Tail" opened over Thanksgiving week.

In advertisements, the film not only guarantees to be a holiday treat for the whole family, but also boasts of the directoral genius of Stephen Spielberg, who came into his present level of success because of "E.T.: The Extraterrestrial," the blockbuster hit of a few summers ago.

"An American Tail" should rightfully join Spielberg's list of successes, for it maintains his intense standards of perfection, never failing to delight not only the wide-eyed child, but also the loving parent and the otherwise cynical teenager.

Set in the year 1885, "An American Tail" tells the story of the thousands of immigrants who journeyed to America in search of a better life, and freedom. We do not see the human aspect of this migration, however. Rather, we become witness to a family of mice who escape the deadly claws of the oppressive cats in Russia. The family of mice, carrying the surname Mousekewitz, meet other mice throughout their travels; German, French, Irish and Italian mice all journeying to America, expecting to find a land of prosperity where there are no cats and streets paved with cheese.

The story's central character is a lovable but mischievous child-mouse named Fievel Mousekewitz, who possesses an unquenchable thirst for the unknown. Fievel's curiosity carries him into danger and isolates him from his family, who presume him to be dead after he disappears during a storm on the ship carrying them to America.

Herein lies the story's simple plot. Fievel must find his way to America and be reunited with his family, where they will all live happily ever after pursuing the American Dream. If it sounds corny, it is; but then are not most heartwarming children's Christmas tales? It is true that the tale is, on the surface, a cute little story about a cute little mouse, but for those of us over 12, there are social and political overtones as well.

It is the below-the-surface aspects of the movie that reveal director Spielberg's true genius and comic style. The immigrant mice bear the personalities characteristic of their ancestry from accents to dress to gestures. Upon arriving at Ellis Island, the mice are greeted with all the warmth that goes with herding cattle, and such well-knwon tactics like the changing of a name from Horace Bogdanovich to John Smith are brilliantly brought to animated life.

We are also introduced through Fievel to wonderfully funny characters like an elegant French bird busily working to complete his masterpiece, Lady Liberty, a kindly cat and a pompous aristocratic mouse, brought to life through the wildly humorous voices of Dom DeLuise and Madeline Kahn respectively.

The film does not go without introducing us to the inhabitants of America either, much to the viewer's delight. Immigrants pour into the young country expecting prosperity and freedom, but they are greeted by hucksters and formidable enemies. America does have cats, and the streets are not made of cheese, but of brick and stone.

In the end, though, as with all holiday family films, all is happily resolved. Fievel finds his family after much trial, and the mice of New York overpower the ferocious and cunning cats, sending them off to the faraway land of Hong Kong. This is, of course, predictable as soon as the plot is introduced, but one can not deny the ability of a determined little mouse like Fievel Mousekewitz to raise the spirits and warm the hearts of an audience full of children and adults alike.

Byrne's debut as director

By KATHLEEN CUNNINGHAM

Walking through your local mall can give you a cross-section of the people in your city or quiet suburban town. You may wonder, "Where do these tacky people come from?" You may, on the other hand be one of those simple, common folk. In any case "True Stories" is a revolutionary film about this part of our society.

David Byrne, leader of the popular rock band, Talking Heads, has expanded his talents in his debut as a motion picture director, writer and star. "True Stories" is a musical mock-documentary about life in an eccentric small town called Virgil, Texas.

Basing his film on a minimalist theme, Byrne used stark landscapes and simple unusual characters. These characters such as the "Cute Woman," the "Lying Woman," and the "Lazy Woman," are based on sensationalist mass circulation tabloids (that is National Enquirer.) Byrne says, "I was attracted to the characters because they had their own eccentricities, but they weren't ashamed of them."

In Elle magazine, Byrne described the movie as a "hybrid of MTV and a musical on Broadway." It is an unusual, honest portrayal that glorifies people who live and die in a real place. In our "Dynasty," "Miami Vice," era, where all is glitter and gold with perfect people and pat endings, this movie is refreshing and yet disturbing.

David Byrne used deadpan comedy to portray the absurdities of small town life. Although the comedy is subtle, I found myself laughing out loud at the off characters Byrne created. Byrne said, "When you watch something with that kind of humor, it's like you're slipping into a whole way of looking at things, a little world view, and it affects the way you see everything when you leave the theater."

David Byrne has interesting ideas. His rock has been labeled as "art rock" because of its intelligent way of handling issues, problems and ideas of our decade. He caters to a particular audience and so does this movie.

I do not know if the masses are ready for this brand new type of movie. I enjoyed it because of its revolutionary way of treating the narrative-drama; however, it did drag at some points.

I would recommend seeing "True Stories" because it gives a different perspective on American life. Byrne says, "A lot of this movie is me looking at things and saying, 'Here's people doing things in a completely different way,' and maybe that's all right."

Vigilante youths tackle the future of mankind

By KATIE KRACKELER

"Solarbabies"
Directed by Alan Johnson

Far into the distant future, in a time when water is more precious than gold and the earth is a barren wasteland, there lives a small group of vigilante youths, destined to free the world from the evil oppression of the all-powerful "System."

Such is the premise for director Alan Johnson's newest release, "Solarbabies." Produced by Irene Walzer and Jack Frost Sanders, this film is a science fiction fairy tale that provides the right balance of entertainment and fast-paced suspense to make it an exciting film with an appealing story.

The action takes place at an undefined point in the future when the world is suffering from severe drought. The drought has forced the water supply to be controlled and carefully rationed through the strict, militaristic command of "The System." All the children are raised within the prison-like confines of the where they are raised to fight for and defend the supreme source of water.

Within the orphanage, the kids are divided into teams in which they are trained to be skillful in a game that appears to be a combination of roller derby, hockey and lacrosse. The Solarbabies are one of these teams made up of several young actors including Jami Gertz, Jason Patric, Lukas Haas, James LeGros, Peter DeLuise and Claude Brooks. The youngest member of the Solarbabies, Daniel (Lukas Haas), discovers an ancient, mystical force named Bodhi. Bodhi is a glowing sphere of light that has powers far beyond the powers of The System.

With the help of Bodhi, the children escape from the orphanage in search of a distant water supply and a life of freedom. Donned in roller skates and crash helmets, the seven young soldiers of freedom set out to make their way through the dangerous terrain of the world outside the walls of the orphanage.

After several adventurous encounters, Bodhi is captured by the evil leader Grock (Richard Jordan). Before Bodhi can be destroyed, the Solarbabies go on a rescue mission into "The Systems" headquarters where they engage in a violent battle with armed men and machines to save their final source of hope and freedom.

Besides the exciting plot, the film has many appealing qualities. One of which is the performance given by the youngest cast member, Haas. This young actor won international attention with Harrison Ford and Kelly McGillis in the film "Witness." Again he has given a memorable performance in "Solarbabies." His energy and youthful charm truly light up the screen, and despite his young age, his ability to act far surpasses many of the older actors.

Another strong performance is given by Gertz, the only female member of the Solarbabies. You might remember Gertz in the television series "Square Pegs," in which she starred as the preppie Muffy Tupperman. Her performance in "Solarbabies" reveals an obvious acting ability; unfortunately her character is not developed to the point where this ability can be used to its fullest extent.

Richard Jordan's performance as the evil leader Grock is solid, yet he tends to over exaggerate this role in several scenes. His angry, diabolical schemes are at times overdone. Although Jordan is an experienced, distinguished actor, the performances of the younger actors are far more convincing.

The best way to describe "Solarbabies" is "short and sweet." The film is no more than 90 minutes and the plot moves along at a decent pace. The story is told in a concise, effective manner that gets right to the point without any dead weight. Unfortunately, the brevity of the film does not allow any time to develop the characters. We are only allowed glimpses into their personalities and many questions are left unanswered.

Containing just enough entertainment and action to make it a movie that flows well, "Solarbabies" gives us an enjoyable story. And while it probably will not win any awards, it is an appealing film well worth a trip to the theater.

Clapton takes new direction in August

By TIM DANIELS

August
Eric Clapton
Warner Brothers/ Duck Records

Eric Clapton has assembled another star-studded supporting cast for his new album, August. "Slow Hand's" history has been marked by bands which have attracted the top artist from The Yardbirds, The Bluesbreakers, Cream, Blind Faith, Derek and the Dominos, to his latest group, whose talent is not excluded.

Clapton's long time producer, Tom Dowd, takes a back seat to this album's producer, Phil Collins. After producing and playing for a number of songs on Clapton's previous album, Behind The Sun, Collins takes full control, and his influence is obvious.

Clapton has taken a giant break from his previous material, even away from his preceding album. The classic blues leads have been replaced with upbeat tempos created with keyboards and horns. The eminent themes of lost and found love remain, expressed with concrete lyrics, but lack emotion-envoking power of the mournful drone of Clapton's guitar.

However, August is a well-arranged album with a musically full sound. With the influence of Collins, Clapton has embarked on a bold project, apparently forgetting what got him where he is now. His previous approach was creating illustrative lyrics magnified by the burning voice of his guitar leaving a modest band remaining in the background.

The song "Run" is the best example of August's design, with synthesizers and keyboards. Also, a four-piece horn section is not only noticeable, but entirely reduces the importance of guitar to the sound.

The result of this sound is inevitably commercial. "It's in the Way That You Use It," featured in Touchstone Pictures' "The Color of Money," is, as this information would indicate, the most pop song on the album. "Tearing Us Apart" also follows these lines. Clapton shares the vocals with the characteristic sound of Tina Turner and Collins' prominent drum rhythms. "Hold On" also features the above performers. These songs are good, but just not what we have come to expect from Clapton.

Also backing Eric are bass guitarist Nathan East and Greg Phillinganes on keyboards. The bass is well-played in "Hung Up On Your Love." Walk Away" is an electronic song, but it contains good lyrics with an appealing soft arrangement.

The best songs on the album are those which are most closely related to Clapton's classics. "Bad Influence" contains a distinctive Clapton guitar solo and lyrics. "Miss You," a song about love slipping away, contains a lead which is closest to his classics, with keyboard and horn fills used effectively. The horn arrangements of Leon Pendarvis are also noticeable in "Take a Chance."

Clapton's blues guitar and singing is still breathing in "Holy Mother." Eric's backup singers Katie Kissoon and Tessa Niles are particularly outstanding in this tune, as well as in "Behind the Mask," with Clapton's perennial theme of asking his girl who she really loves.

The reminiscent searing leads which drew "Slow Hand" fame are particularly lacking in this effort. So, if you listen to August expecting his legendary playing, you will be disappointed. The new sound can be traced to the influence of Collins, producing an attempt at a more instrumentally complex, commercially viable record. All that must then be said is that the album is a meticulously produced set of material that requires the listener to adjust.

Phil Collins produced Eric Clapton's latest album, August.

15-foot jumper then feeding Plansky for a layup to boost the lead to six.

In the remaining six minutes, West, Wilson, Plansky, Leslie, Jensen and Bekkedam chipped in points to run the Villanova lead to 42-30 at the half.

Vermont came out fired-up in the second half, ready for the Cats, and pulled to within three behind the poor defense of Villanova. The Wildcats, however, did not let the game slip out of their hands and immediately climbed back into the game putting together runs of seven and 13 unanswered points to win the game handily, 98-68.

Wilson repeated for the third straight time as the Cats high scorer with 18, Plansky put together a fine game as well, with 14 points and eight rebounds. The Wildcats finally improved their shooting, hitting 55 percent from the floor and 78 percent from the line. The Wildcats are looking toward St. Francis and LaSalle in the upcoming week.

The Villanova ice hockey team traveled south to the University of Alabama at Huntsville to face a Division I program for the first time. The 'Cats lost the first game 13-2, with goals by Brian Fitzgerald and John Lopis. On Nov. 22, Villanova lost 15-1 to Alabama with Sean Curran scoring the lone goal.

Defenseman Jerry Marks summed up his feelings about the trip, "Man for man we were outmatched, but it was good to get the exposure to a Division I team."

Marks' feels that, "If every member puts out his maximum effort not only as an individual but as a team, then maybe we'll be able to turn our season around."

He also complemented the goaltending of Geordie Borosi, who stopped 78 of 91 shots in the first game, and freshman center Bob Ward, who played like a veteran.

The 'Cats' record stands at 2-9. They will travel to Jamaica, N.Y., for a game with St. John's on Saturday.

Women's B-ball wins opener

By JOHN RICCO

The women's basketball team opened its 1986-87 regular season by trouncing the Iona Gaels last Tuesday night at Iona 92-65. The contest, which was played on the Gaels' home court, saw Villanova turn a 6-point game into a 27-point rout by outscoring their opponents 51 to 30 in the second half.

Head Coach Harry Perretta, however, was not too happy with his team's first half play. "We didn't play very good defense," he said. "We played pretty well on offense but we didn't play very good defense at all."

Iona played a big part in the Wildcat's slow start. The Gaels, who are a small, swift team, came out and pressed Villanova from the onset, forcing a quick pace. "They made us play faster than we normally like to play," Perretta said. "It was a smart move on their part."

The combination of Villanova's lack of defensive intensity and Iona's scrappy play resulted in a close first half and the Wildcats emerged at halftime with only a 41-35 lead.

In the second half, however, Villanova came alive. "The team adjusted to the Gael's style of play and started to open up a lead," Peretta said. Indeed, the Wildcats took control of the game and dominated Iona in the second half.

Leading the way was Shelly Pennefather who scored a team high 24 points. In addition, the senior forward collected four rebounds and blocked two shots. Complementing Pennefather were seniors Karen Hargadon and Lynn Tighe and junior Lisa Angelotti, who all scored in double figures, as well as junior Kristin Banfield, who pulled down a team-leading six rebounds.

Overall, Perreta was satisfied with his squad's play. "It was a good win for us," he said. "It was good to get a win under our belts early because our competition will be getting tougher in the next couple of weeks."

In a preseason exhibition game on Nov. 22, Villanova defeated the Santa Domingo national team 93-65 in the duPont Pavilion. Angelotti scored 20 points for the Wildcats while Hargadon and freshman Helen Koskinen chipped in 18 and 16 points respectively.

Shelly Pennefather was the 1985 Big East Player of the Year and continues to be a force in 1986.

V-ball gets spiked

The Villanova women's volleyball team wrapped up their 1986 season last weekend at the Big East Conference Championships. The Wildcats entered the championship, conducted at the University of Pittsburgh, as the number three seed based on their 4-2 record in Big East South Division play. However, the team did not live up to its billing, managing only a fifth place finish.

In the openng round of the competition, the Cats met a fired-up Georgetown team and lost, 10-15, 4-15, 15-5, 8-15. In the consolation round, Villanova rebounded, winning matches against Connecticut, 15-9, 4-15, 15-13, 15-10, and Boston College, 15-6, 12-12, 15-11 to bring their final record to 25-17.

Pittsburgh won the championship, defeating defending Big East Champion Providence, 15-5, 14-16, 15-2, 15-12 in the final. Georgetown finished third and Syracuse grabbed fourth.

Villanova freshman Shelia Duffy was named the Big East South Division Freshman of the Year at the coaches dinner prior to the championship. Duffy, a native of Anaheim, Calif., is the first Villanova player to be so honored in the five seasons of Big East Competition.

Wildcats fall prey to Owls, 80-73

By STEPHEN J. SCHLAGER

It was Nov. 21. There was a slight nip in the air outside the duPont Pavilion, but inside it was a different story. Amongst squeaking sneakers, ripping netcords and a fiery Wildcat crowd, the Villanova men's basketball team took the floor in their first game of the 1986-87 season.

Howard University put lights on the scoreboard first, with a 12-foot jumper from the right side of the key. Freshman Tom Greis put 'Nova on the board the next time down the court with a short bank shot off a rebound. Howard then ran up the score to 6-2 before sophomore Kenny Wilson drove off the baseline flew into the air and floated one through the net. The two teams traded points for most of the half and with 3:45 left before the halftime buzzer Howard found itself up 24-21.

Wilson again tried to take matters into his own hands and attacked the inside of the Howard 2-3 zone. On his way inside Wilson took one for the team, but only sank one of two shots from the line and the score was 24-22. Sophomore Doug West threw one in from 18 feet to bring the Cats a little closer.

Wilson then sacrificed his body for a jumper in the lane to pull within one. Howard's Mike Jones kept the Bison in the lead. West decided to make his presence known, and shooting like he was playing in his own backyard, lackadaisically lofted one from the perimeter for three. Massey and Bekkedam followed up with respective pairs of free throws to put the Wildcats ahead at the half 34-33.

The Wildcats had lost in almost every category but score, hitting only 39 percent from the floor and pulling down a meager 14 rebounds. The second half-started and, again, the teams traded points. Howard had successfully taken the Villanova crowd out of the game until there was 13:28 left in the game and off a turnover, Barry Bekkedam fed Gary Massey, who streaked down the court and slammed one home vibrating most of Radnor Township in the process.

The crowd erupted into a wild frenzy and the Wildcats were on a rampage. Bekkedam calmly put in two from the charity stripe tying the game at 46. West then began to terrorize Howard scoring nine straight points, taking the score up to 54-49.

The Wildcat defense never let the Bison back into the game and finished the game up by 10 points, 71-61. The Cats had successfully christened the 1986-87 season with the youngsters leading the charge. West led the 'Nova scorers with 18 points followed by two more sophomores, Wilson and Massey with 14 points a piece.

With this win, Villanova moved into the second round of the pre-season NIT tournament against Temple University. Temple arrived at the pavilion on Nov. 24 to take on the Wildcats and the Owls were not taking the game lightly.

Villanova-Temple University

Villanova took the opening tap as the crowd rocked the south stands, but the noise and the Cats' momentum did not last long. The Owls jumped out to a 4-0 lead before the West show started — A 20-footer from the left for three, a 21-footer from the top of the key and, after a Greis jumper from inside, a fast break slam that would have made the "Doctor" proud.

Mark Plansky helped out the West scoring train with a layup and a free throw before West came back and hit a 21- and a 22-foot jump shot for another six points.

Not to be outdone, Wilson started his own scoring spree when, with 4:31 left, he drove to the lane and put up a jumper, taking the foul and completing the 3-point play from the line. Wilson drove deep into the Owls' middle and put another shot off the glass from in close.

Through all of this scoring, the Owls were not lying down, in fact, the only thing that was lying down was the Villanova defense which allowed Temple to come back and take the lead. Even after West and Maker threw in three points of their own, the Owls were still ahead 39-35. Wilson ended the half with another layup off the board and a 50 percent trip to the charity stripe. The half ended with the Owls leading 42-38.

For the second game in a row, the Wildcats were suffering from the floor, hitting only 40 percent. They were not much better crashing the boards, pulling down only 18 rebounds. West, however, was a shiny spot on the Villanova record books in the first half, with a 16-point performance.

The second half started with Temple controlling the ball. Temple's control went well beyond just the ball as they protected their lead, and with 11:49 left, the Owls were still ahead 60-55. Senior Harold Jensen did come out of his shell in the second half, ripping the cords with three 3-pointers. After a Villanova timeout, Jensen came out and hit yet another 3-pointer and West jumped into the second half scoring columns with a 22-foot 3-pointer of his own. Villanova had finally taken the lead 61-60.

The Wildcats did not score for three minutes when Greis hit a short jumper in the middle. The Wildcats then took another break, this time for five minutes when Wilson threw in a 12-foot jumper. In the meantime, the Owls had tossed in three 3-pointers and climbed to a 73-65 lead. The Wildcats climbed to within four points with 27 seconds left, before Temple's Rivas and Vreeswyk iced the game making three of four freethrows. The game ended 80-73, and Villanova had suffered their first loss of their young season.

Wilson had again taken scoring honors with 21 points in the losing effort, while West, with only three points in the second half, ended with 19. The Wildcats shot only 38.2 percent from the floor for the game, but they did manage to win the rebounding contest, out-rebounding Temple 37-35.

Athlete of the Week

This week's Saco East's Athlete of the Week is sophomore point guard Kenny Wilson. Wilson has lead the Wildcats' Basketball team in scoring in two out of their first three games. He is averaging 17.6 ppg. and throws in five assists per game as well. Wilson, a communication arts major, took over the starting point guard position from Gary McLain last year. He was voted to the all-freshman team last year and continues to be a force in the Big East.

Harriers take 13th in nation

By SUSAN GANEM

A banner season for Villanova's women's cross country team came to an end on a successful note as Coach Marty Stern's Wildcat harriers tied for a 13th place team finish at the NCAA Cross Country Championships in Tucson, Ariz. Sophomore Vicki Huber earned All-America honors.

'Nova's 13th place finish was the icing on the cake for the 'Cats who in the course of the season won the NCAA District 2 team title, finished runner-up for the ECAC team crown, won the Big East Conference, National Catholic and Philadelphia Big Five team titles.

The Wildcats tallied 279 team points to finish tied for 13th place with Iowa, as Texas edged Wisconsin 40-44 to capture the NCAA team title.

"I'm very pleased with our performance and grateful to have finished tied for 13th in the country," remarked Stern. Looking ahead to the approaching indoor track and field season, Stern continued, "The athletes and I have a good feeling about ourselves and we're hoping that this upbeat season will carry over into the winter track season."

Villanova was led by Huber who finished in 29th place overall. Running the 5,000 meter course in 17:46.67, Huber's place made her the 'Cats' fourth cross country All-American.

Senior Gina Procaccio was the Wildcats second top finisher, crossing the finish line in 18:03 and in an impressive 45th position. Sophomore Dolores Carapella aided Stern's team cause finishing 94th in 18:39, while senior Lauren Searby was 102nd in 18:47, and freshman Ruth Lockbaum rounded out Villanova's team scoring finishing 113th in 19:05.

Closing out Villanova's top seven finishers were junior Dina Alborano and sophomore Meg Moisen.

Directory is distributed

By MICHELLE SHANAHAN

Student directories for the 1986-87 academic year, compiled by Student Government, were completed and distributed to the mailboxes of all on-campus residents on Jan. 19.

Student Government plans to disperse the directories to off-campus residents from various sites on campus. They will advertise the dates and points at which the directories will be made available.

The student directory provides faculty, staff and student listings, as did last year's directory. In addition, it contains some new features, such as a yellow pages section and 20 introductory pages that include the academic calendar, a table of contents, abbreviation codes and emergency telephone numbers.

Student Government originally established a goal to issue the student directories between Fall Break and Thanksgiving of 1986. Last year's directory, the first of its kind at Villanova, was not distributed until April 1986.

Joe Allman, Student Government president, cited the reasons for the directory's delay. "The project is a monster," he said.

Compiling the directory entailed "a tremendous amount of work," including mailing out almost 12,000 forms and entering all of the information into a computer, according to Allman.

Student Government also wanted to extend the deadline for students to return their address forms.

Efforts on the student directory were initiated over the summer.

Joan Dorley, editor of the student directory, Joe McGowan and Lisa Sturman, as well as many others, spent "an enormous amount of time over the summer and did a great job," said Allman.

Many students, after viewing the new directory, expressed complaints because their names were not included. Approximately 2,200 student names are listed, which is about one-third of the undergraduate population.

Allman stated that Student Government mailed out forms, advertised in the Villanovan and posted flyers around campus. However, "So many students did not return the forms," he said.

"After seeing this directory, other students might be more eager to sign up next year," said Allman.

Student Government will continue to issue a student directory in the future because of its many benefits, according to Allman.

One of the main reasons for its continuance is the financial benefit it yields. The advertisements funded the entire directory and Student Government made a $600 profit, according to Allman.

Allman also cited the benefits it will provide to students and the staff.

For the coming year, according

The Oasis Cafe, located in the same building as the Radnor House Condominiums, has been the subject of numerous complaints from many residents of the building. During the few weeks before last semester's final exams, the Radnor Township Police received many complaints about the level of noise coming from the bar.

On Dec. 12, the State Liquor Control Board, along with the Radnor Township Police, conducted a raid on the Oasis Cafe. According to Radnor Police Chief Maurice Hennessy, there has been a tremendous increase in the number of police officers assigned to the area. Because of this increase, "there have been three of four arrests for excessive noise and underage drinking in the parking lot of this facility," said Hennessy.

Len Barry, manager of the Oasis Cafe, claimed that no complaints of excessive noise have been directly registered to the bar by the tenants for many months. "The problem of discrimination starts before the problem of the noise," Barry stated.

"We [the bar] are in business to make money and to serve the clientele. Our clientele just happens to be young people. There is simply discrimination toward students and toward the bar."

Barry further stated that the owner of the Radnor House building has a responsibility, and that "he [the owner] should have pondered the effects of a bar in the building before the leases were signed. After all, a bar is a social place, and we can't run it in a vacuum."

Occupants of Radnor House condominium apartments, including many Villanova students, have complained that the noise from the bar and parking lot keeps them awake every night. Many students have claimed that they are not able to study or sleep because of the noise problem, which often extends as high as the fifth and sixth floors.
